CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE SIXTY-THIRD CONGRESS.

THIRD SESSION.

MONDAY, December 7, 1914.

The first Monday in December being the day prescribed by the Constitution of the United States for the annual meeting of Congress, the third session of the Sixty-third Congress commenced on this day.

The Senate assembled in its Chamber at the Capitol.

The VICE PRESIDENT (THOMAS R. MARSHALL, of Indiana) called the Senate to order at 12 o'clock noon.

PRAYER.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we come before Thee in the spirit of our high traditions and seek Thy favor at the opening of this session of the Senate. We have come with the weight of a world-wide influence upon us and with large responsibilities for the welfare of a hundred million of Thy creatures. The State is a divine institution called into being by Thy grace to secure the freedom of Thy people and to guarantee to them their natural rights. Thou hast called into places of prominence and power these Thy servants in this honorable Senate and hast sent them forth to secure the divine purpose as a great Nation. Do Thou guide them. Give them that grace which will insure constant leadership of thought in all their great work. Grant, we pray, that our message to all the people may be that of peace and our influence in all the world that of universal brotherhood. We ask for Christ's sake. Amen.

ALLEGED USE OF MEXICAN FUNDS.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of a resolution, which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The resolution (S. Res. 487) was read, as follows:

Whereas the Washington Post of this date contains the following statement:

"$75,000 PAID UNITED STATES SENATORS BY CARRANZA TO HAVE TROOPS QUIT VERA CRUZ, SAYS REPORT.

[Special cable to the Washington Post.]

"Seventy-five thousand dollars in gold was paid by Carranza to two United States Senators for their influence in bringing about the evacuation of Vera Cruz by American troops, according to correspondence left behind in the looted national treasury by Carranzista officials, when they fled from the capital. It is impossible to ascertain from the documents containing the record of the payment the names of the Senators, but the fact remains that the books of the treasury contain an entry that this sum was paid over to two Members of the Senate about a week before November 23, when Gen. Funston led his forces out of Vera Cruz by order of the War Department.

"CABLED TO ZUBARAN, SAYS REPORT.

"When the treasury was taken over by the government that came after Carranza's brief but disastrous essay at controlling national affairs attention was called to an item of $75,000 gold disbursed by Signor Reynoso, finance minister, for 'extraordinary diplomatic expenses.' Search, impelled by curiosity, to ascertain what this extraordinary diplomatic expense might be that involved the expenditure of such a large sum revealed that the money had been transmitted by Carranza's order to Rafael Zubaran, chief of the Carranzista junta in Washington.

"Further investigation developed that apparently Zubaran had informed Carranza that it was necessary to employ 'financial stimulus' in order to render it certain that President Wilson would not recede from his expressed determination to withdraw the American troops on November 23.

"FEARED TROOPS MIGHT REMAIN.

"Carranza feared, according to an employee of the treasury, that the prospect of hostilities between his troops and those of the convention might incline the President to permit the troops to remain at Vera Cruz indefinitely. Manifestly this would prove highly embarrassing to Carranza in the accomplishment of his plan to retreat from Mexico City and establish his capital at Vera Cruz.

"Seemingly Carranza thought it well worth while to spend $75,000 to insure his avenue of escape. When the money was recorded as paid he already had abandoned the capital and could not return here should Vera Cruz remain closed to him through the presence of United States troops there.

"DOUBT CAST ON STORY.

"Doubts are held here as to whether the money ever was paid to Senators, as alleged. It is quite possible the entry might have been made on the books and the story concocted to account for the diverting of the sum in other directions, although the treasury employees who were connected with the Carranza administration insist that the money was cabled to Zubaran, to be used to influence Senators."

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations call before it the said Zubaran and investigate the report contained in the press of this instant that $75,000 is alleged to have been paid by the Carranza régime or its representatives to two United States Senators to cause or induce the withdrawal of United States troops from Vera Cruz, and that said committee report its findings and recommendations to the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I think the resolution may well go over. It strikes me that it is a matter that we ought not to dignify as is proposed in the resolution, and yet some of us may come to a different conclusion by to-morrow. I ask that it may go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There being objection, the resolution will go over.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, before the resolution goes over I wish to say a word.

I doubt whether it is wise or advisable for the Senate or Senators to treat seriously an anonymous and scandalous statement of this kind. Since it has been brought before the Senate in this form, however, it may be well to let it go to a committee. I rise merely to say that I hope my friend from Arkansas will impose the duty of making this investigation upon some other committee than the Committee on Foreign Relations. There is no special reason of which I have knowledge why this resolution should go to that committee, and I object to that reference for the reason that that committee now has before it some important business which ought to have the attention of the committee without delay. The consideration of that business should not be interfered with by this proposed investigation.

Mr. PENROSE and Mr. ROBINSON addressed the Chair.

Mr. STONE. There are other committees which I am sure have not any immediately pressing business before them, and in the circumstances I should like to have the Foreign Relations Committee excused from the labor of investigating a thing like this.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. STONE. In a moment. I yield first to the Senator from Pennsylvania, who rose first.

Mr. PENROSE. I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri, if he does not care to take jurisdiction over this resolution, whether he would have any objection to having it referred to the Committee on Additional Accommodations for the Library of Congress?

Mr. STONE. What committee?

Mr. PENROSE. I am surprised that the Senator has not heard of it. I am chairman of it. [Laughter.] It is the committee to consider and provide for additional accommodations for the Library of Congress.

Mr. STONE. I am perfectly willing to have it go to that committee, since the Senator seems anxious to have that course taken.

Mr. PENROSE. That committee has not had a bill or a resolution before it or a meeting during the present Congress. If we are to take notice of every scurrilous and fugitive statement in newspapers, perhaps that committee will soon have more to do than it will be able to do.

Mr. STONE. But it ought to have something to do.

Mr. PENROSE. It ought to have something. I hope the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee will consider the suggestion I make to him.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a brief statement?

Mr. STONE. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. First, with reference to sending the resolution to another committee than Foreign Relations, I will state to the Senator from Missouri and to the Senate that as originally prepared the resolution contemplated that the matter should be heard by a special committee; but after consultation with a number of Senators the suggestion was made to me that the resolution should properly go to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and I amended the resolution in that and in other ways before presenting it to the Senate.

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] impliedly belittles the importance of the resolution, if I correctly understood his interruption of the Senator from Missouri, and the Senator from Missouri impliedly resents the introduction of the resolution. I will state to the Senator from Missouri and to those who are interested in the subject that the resolution was not introduced by me lightly or carelessly, but only after very careful consideration of the matter. The newspaper article, which is published in one of the leading dailies of the United States, mentions the minister of finance of Mexico, of the Carranzista régime, as having paid to a reputed lobbyist representing the Carranza government in the city of Washington the sum of money, $75,000; and the statement is also contained in the article that the books of the Carranza government show that this sum of money was paid by the minister of finance to this reputed lobbyist for the purpose of influencing two United States Senators.

Some Senators may find that a matter to be laughed at; they may think that that statement is not of sufficient importance to notice; but when the name of a public official is given, when it is claimed that the records show that such a payment was made to a lobbyist for a corrupt purpose, I think it is the duty of the Senate to call before it this lobbyist and ascertain whether such a payment was made to him, and make him divulge fully what he knows concerning the matter.

There is and there can be neither an express nor an implied reflection on the United States Senate in the introduction or the passage of this resolution. When a great newspaper which has a circulation throughout this city and in many parts of the United States makes the declaration in glaring headlines that $75,000 was paid to two United States Senators to cause the withdrawal of troops from the city of Vera Cruz, involving the foreign relations of the Government of the United States, and when the records of that foreign Government purport to show the payment to one of its lobbyists for a purpose of that character, I think the Senate may with propriety, and in justice to itself, take such action as will disclose whether the declaration is unfounded.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. I read the article in the newspaper this morning and heard it read from the desk, but I do not recall that it said that the money was sent to a lobbyist. Is that correct? Is the Senator sure of that?

Mr. ROBINSON. It uses the name of Mr. Zubaran, who, it declares, is the representative of the Carranzista government in the city of Washington. It does not use the word "lobbyist." I used the term "reputed lobbyist."

Mr. GALLINGER. Then, if that be so, I will ask the Senator if he does not think the celebrated lobby committee, which has been struggling with these momentous questions for nearly a year, ought to take up this matter and call that gentleman before it?

Mr. ROBINSON. I was just about to say in the beginning, in reply to the statement made by the Senator from Missouri, that I have no choice as to where this resolution shall be sent. I have no objection to the lobby committee investigating it, or the Committee on Privileges and Elections, or any other committee of the Senate, but I do think the Senate can not afford to ignore the statement.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, if my friend from Arkansas will permit me——

Mr. ROBINSON. With pleasure.

Mr. STONE. My reason for asking that the resolution be referred to some other committee was the one I gave a moment ago. There is a committee, named by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], that has nothing to do, and the chairman of the committee seems to want this business [laughter]; and then there is a committee especially named to investigate just such things as this.

Mr. ROBINSON. If the Senator will yield to me for just a moment, I have no objection whatever to the resolution going to the committee on investigation of the lobby. I should object to its going to the Committee on Additional Accommodations for the Library of Congress or the Committee on the Disposition of Useless Papers in the Executive Departments.

I ask unanimous consent that the resolution be referred to the committee on the lobby.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, in view of that request, I withdraw my objection to the present consideration of the resolution. I think it may well go to the lobby investigating committee. That committee has been so fruitful in results up to the present time that I am sure we shall derive some benefit from the investigation of this evil that is said to have been perpetrated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, as far as I am concerned, I should like to prevent the resolution from going to any committee; and it is upon that ground that I shall object to its going to the committee named.

I wonder if the time will ever come when the Senate of the United States will cease taking notice of such newspaper statements made against itself, with no basis whatever for them. I think that as long as we take recognition of such statements, and have action taken by the Senate referring them to committees, the people of the country will at least think there is something in the charges and will have less respect for the body than they ought to have.

For that reason I object to the resolution going to a committee, and I hope that this resolution and all similar resolutions will be defeated in the future.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There being objection, the resolution will lie over.

INTERNAL-REVENUE COLLECTIONS.

Mr. POMERENE. I introduce a bill to supplement the act to increase the internal revenue, and for other purposes, approved October 22, 1914, and I ask that it be read at length.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the reading of the bill? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read it.

The bill (S. 6686) to supplement an act entitled "An act to increase the internal revenue, and for other purposes," approved October 22, 1914, was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act of Congress entitled "An act to increase the internal revenue, and for other purposes," approved October 22, 1914, be, and the same hereby is, supplemented so as to provide as follows:

That no penalties shall be levied, assessed, imposed, or collected for failure to make such returns for taxation as by the terms of said act are required to be made on or before December 1, 1914, or for failure to affix stamps where they can not with reasonable diligence be obtained, or to pay the taxes required to be paid on or before December 1, 1914: Provided, That said returns shall be made and stamps affixed, where practicable, or taxes paid on or before January 1, 1915: And provided further, That where penalties may have been assessed on or before January 1, 1915, they shall be canceled and surrendered, and where they may have been collected or paid on or before January 1, 1915, they shall be refunded by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, the purpose of the bill is apparent. The act was approved the latter part of October. Certain schedules went into effect early in November, and other payments of taxes were to be made on or before December 1. Deputies were not appointed in many instances until about November 20. It was a physical impossibility for the collectors throughout the country or their deputies to visit the business people who were subject to the taxes during that time. The department has found it impossible even to furnish all the necessary stamps, and it occurs to me that it would be very unjust under these circumstances to assess penalties. The object of the bill is to prevent the collection or assessment of penalties on any taxes which may become due or collectible on or before January 1, 1915. I hope that we may have an early report from the Finance Committee upon the subject.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Finance.

EXPORTATION OF ARMS, AMMUNITION, ETC.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I introduce a bill which I ask to have read for the information of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the reading of the bill? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read it.

The bill (S. 6688) to prohibit individuals, partnerships, or corporations in the United States from selling arms, ammunition, artillery, and explosives of any kind for exportation during the existence of war except upon proof that said arms, ammunition, artillery, and explosives are not to be used in said war against a country with which the United States is at peace, was read the first time by title and the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That it shall be unlawful and treated as a breach of the neutrality laws of the United States for any person, partnership, or corporation to sell, or contract to sell, or deliver, or contract to deliver, during the existence of war between nations with which the United States is at peace, any arms, ammunition, artillery, and explosives of any kind whatsoever to be used against a country or nation with which the United States is at peace; and during the existence of war it shall be unlawful to sell for exportation or to export arms, ammunition, artillery, and explosives except upon filing with the Secretary of Commerce satisfactory sworn proof that said arms, ammunition, artillery, and explosives are not intended to be used in violation of this act.

Any person violating this act shall be fined not more than $100,000 and imprisoned not more than three years, and any arms, ammunition, artillery, and explosives the exportation of which is attempted in violation of this act shall be forfeited, one-half to the use of the informer and one-half to the use of the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be referred to the Committee of Foreign Relations.

EMPLOYMENT OF ARMED MEN BY CORPORATIONS, ETC.

By Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey:

A bill (S. 6708) to prohibit the employment of armed men for any purpose by corporations or associations of any kind.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, about a year ago I introduced a bill of a similar character and it was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, but it seems to be sleeping the sleep that knows no waking. However, in view of the recent disturbances in Colorado that have aroused the feeling of the public generally and even of the President of the United States, I trust that the committee will find it wise to act upon this bill at an early date. I ask that the bill be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

DEVELOPMENT OF WATER POWERS.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, early in the present Congress I introduced a bill to regulate the development of water power on public lands in connection with nonnavigable streams. That bill was referred to the Committee on Irrigation, and we held several meetings and several changes were suggested in it. I have also given it further consideration myself.

A bill relating to this same subject has come from the House and is now pending before the Committee on Public Lands of the Senate. I understand meetings will be held in a day or two upon it. I have prepared a bill in line with the changes suggested in the Irrigation Committee and other changes that have occurred to me. I desire to introduce a bill and have it referred to the Committee on Public Lands, so that it may be considered in connection with the bill that has come over from the House.

The bill (S. 6712) to aid and to regulate the development, operation, and maintenance of water powers on lands of the United States, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

NATIONAL SECURITY COMMISSION.

Mr. LODGE. I introduce a joint resolution which I ask may lie on the table subject to call. I ask that it be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read the joint resolution.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 202) providing for a national security commission was read the first time by title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That a commission is hereby created to be called the national security commission, consisting of three Senators, to be appointed by the President of the Senate, and three Members of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and three persons to be appointed by the President of the United States. Said commission shall make full investigation, by subcommittee or otherwise, into the question of the preparedness of the United States for war, defensive or offensive. Said commission shall report to the Congress its findings and shall make such recommendations as in its judgment may seem proper.

For the purpose of said investigation said commission is authorized to send for persons and papers, to make all necessary travel, either in the United States or any foreign country, and to administer oaths. Such sums of money as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this resolution are hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated: Provided, That not more than one Senator and one Member of the House of Representatives appointed on said commission shall be a member either of the Committee on Military Affairs or of the Committee on Naval Affairs of their respective bodies.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Massachusetts permit me to suggest an amendment to his resolution?

Mr. LODGE. I asked that the joint resolution might lie on the table. I did not mean to ask for any action on it at this moment. I asked that it might lie on the table subject to call, because I desire later to say something in regard to the resolution. It will be open to amendment at any time subsequently.

Mr. LEWIS. The Senator from Massachusetts had no intention of having it considered at this time?

Mr. LODGE. None whatever.

Mr. LEWIS. Then I will not, of course, intrude any amendment now.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will lie on the table.

MILITARY RESERVES.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, on behalf of my colleague, Mr. WEEKS, I desire to give notice that on Friday next, immediately after the conclusion of the morning business, my colleague will ask permission of the Senate to address the Senate on the question of military reserves.

FOOT-AND-MOUTH DISEASE.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I send to the desk a resolution which I ask to have read for the information of the Senate.

The resolution (S. Res. 490) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry of the Senate, or any subcommittee thereof duly authorized by said committee, be, and it is hereby, instructed to make inquiry concerning and report to the Senate thereon:

First. The extent and location of the territory affected by the foot-and-mouth disease and the number of cattle, hogs, sheep, and other animals affected thereby or exposed thereto.

Second. What quarantine or other measures have been adopted by the Federal or State authorities for the prevention or eradication of said disease.

Third. What changes, if any, should be adopted by the Federal or State authorities in their methods of quarantine.

Fourth. What remedy or remedies are known or used in preventing or eradicating said disease.

That said committee or subcommittee is authorized to sit during the sessions of the Senate and during any recess of the Senate; to hold sessions at such place or places as it shall deem most convenient for the purposes of the investigation; to employ stenographers and such other assistants as it may deem necessary; to send for persons, books, records, and papers; to administer oaths, and, as early as practicable, to report to the Senate the results of its investigation, including all testimony taken by it; and that the expenses of the inquiry shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers to be approved by the chairman of the committee.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I assume that this resolution will be referred to a committee, but I desire to say just a word in support of it.

The foot-and-mouth disease has spread over, in part, the States of Michigan, Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, and Kentucky, and perhaps has extended to some other States. That it is a very grave situation everyone who is familiar with the disease will admit. I am not intending, by the introduction of this resolution, to criticize anything which may have been done by the Agricultural Department or any of its bureaus. In my own State, however, the situation has been unusually grave, in this respect:

As I understand the facts as they have been disclosed to date, diseased cattle and hogs have been discovered in perhaps 31 counties out of 88. These cases are scattered. For a time the State quarantined against the shipment of cattle. Later the Federal Government forbade, by an order, the shipment of any cattle, hogs, or sheep outside of the State. The result has been that many fat cattle, hogs, and sheep now ready for market can not be marketed at all. On Saturday the Bureau of Animal Industry decided to permit the shipment of cattle beyond the State boundaries from 27 different counties in the State. They expect to make a further order permitting the shipment from some of the other counties upon proper inspection by authorized veterinarians. The State itself is now permitting the shipment of cattle to all of the markets within the State.

As a result of these restrictions the price of fatted animals has been greatly depreciated. That the Government and its officials must exercise very great care I have no doubt, because the disease is seriously contagious; but it has seemed to me, and the suggestion has been made by many people with whom I have conversed on the subject and whom I believed to be well advised, that the restrictions have been unusually severe, and that cattle and hogs and sheep, after proper and rigid inspection, could be shipped without any danger for purposes of immediate slaughter.

I hope that after proper consideration the Senate can see its way clear to adopt this resolution.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will suggest to my friend the Senator from Ohio that the disease is also prevalent in New England, and that herds are now being slaughtered to some extent in New England.

Mr. POMERENE. I was unaware of that fact, but I am very glad to have the information.

Mr. GALLINGER. So the disease is probably nation wide; that is, beyond question it covers the entire country to some extent.

Mr. POMERENE. I think every farmer and every stock raiser in the country, as well as every consumer of meat, is interested in this subject.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. POMERENE. I do.

Mr. SMOOT. I simply wish to ask the Senator a question. Is it the object of the resolution to secure information upon which to base legislation?

Mr. POMERENE. Yes; in part.

Mr. SMOOT. If it is not, I wish to say that most of this information can be found now in the department. I have visited the Bureau of Animal Industry, and I know that the extent of the disease as it exists to-day is marked out very plainly there by that bureau. I also know, of course, that they have remedies which they are trying to get put into effect in all the States on the basis of the information they have there. It seems to me that if the committee itself would take up the matter there with the head of the bureau and the men who have this subject directly in charge they could get more information in that way than by any hearings which may be had.

Mr. POMERENE. I may say, in reply to the Senator, that one of several reasons why I have introduced the resolution is that there is an apparent conflict between some of the State authorities and the National authorities. For instance, in my own State they have now permitted the shipment of cattle, hogs, and sheep to any and all markets within the State; but the Federal Government is absolutely refusing, or did until Saturday, the shipment of any stock outside of and beyond the State boundaries. It has seemed to me that if there is any question in the mind of either the National authorities or the State authorities as to the proper method of quarantine or the rules relating to the same this committee might be able to give us some very valuable suggestions as a result of its investigations.

Mr. KENYON. I ask unanimous consent, in view of the remarks of the Senator from Ohio, to have inserted in the RECORD a statement showing the work of the bureau and of the Department of Agriculture with relation to the eradication of the present outbreak of the disease. I have that statement here to December 3, and I think it would be very fitting to have it appear at the conclusion of the remarks of the Senator from Ohio. I therefore ask unanimous consent that that may be done.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The statement referred to is as follows:

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE, BUREAU OF ANIMAL INDUSTRY,
Washington, D. C., December 5, 1914.

Hon. W. S. KENYON,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR KENYON: I am sending you herewith a statement showing the work of the bureau in connection with the eradication of the present outbreak of foot-and-mouth disease to and including December 3. Much of this information has to be gleaned from telegraphic reports, and while it is substantially accurate it will be corrected by subsequent figures procured by mail from the inspectors in the field. Of the Government's share of claims for indemnity, $935,356.78, the amount of $566,105.23 has been signed for as provisional claims in the event that Congress appropriates the money.

Sincerely, yours,
A. D. MELVIN,
Chief of Bureau.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution submitted by the Senator from Ohio will be printed and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

HEARINGS BEFORE COMMITTEE ON THE PHILIPPINES.

Mr. HITCHCOCK submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 489), which was read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Philippines, or any subcommittee thereof, be authorized during the Sixty-third Congress to subpœna witnesses, to send for books and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer at a price not to exceed $1 per printed page to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be pending before the said committee; that the committee may sit during the sessions or recesses of the Senate; and the expense thereof shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

EXPORTATION OF MUNITIONS OF WAR.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I submit a resolution for which I ask present consideration.

The resolution (S. Res. 488) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of Commerce be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the Senate whether and to what extent arms, ammunition, artillery, and other similar munitions of war have been exported from the United States to each of the belligerent nations in the present war, and to Canada, for each month from the 1st of August to the 1st of December;

Also, that he inform the Senate to what extent contracts with American concerns are now being executed for the manufacture and exportation of arms, ammunition, and artillery, and that said statement be, so far as possible, in detail;

Also, that he inform the Senate as to the normal and natural exportation of said articles and munitions of war during times of peace.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. OVERMAN. I think it probably ought to go to the Committee on Foreign Relations. The Senator from Nebraska is on that committee.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I will say to the Senator from North Carolina that it is simply a resolution calling for information from the Secretary of Commerce as to the exportations during the last few months.

Mr. OVERMAN. The chairman of the committee is not here, and in his absence I thought it ought to go to that committee.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It requires no reference to a committee.

Mr. OVERMAN. All right.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

EXPENDITURES FOR ARMY AND NAVY.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I desire to submit a resolution, and I ask that it be read and referred to the appropriate committee.

The resolution (S. Res. 492) was read, as follows:

Whereas the records of the Army and Navy Departments disclose that since the fiscal year 1896 more than $50,000,000 has been appropriated to make up deficiencies in the organization of the Army and Navy; and

Whereas it is reported in resolutions and proceedings of the House of Representatives that there is no adequate preparation of the Army or Navy for any necessary defense of the Nation of the United States, notwithstanding the hundreds of millions of dollars appropriated for nationl defense: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Committees on Naval Affairs and Military Affairs, respectively, make investigation as to what manner the sums referred to have been expended, and for what and by whom and to whom, and to investigate and ascertain what has been obtained by and for such moneys as have been expended for preparation for national defense.

Resolved, That such investigation and its results shall be reported to the Senate in the due course of the business of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Shall the resolution go to the Committee on Military Affairs?

Mr. LEWIS. I suggest that the resolution go to the Committee on Military Affairs unless it be suggested that it go to another committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be printed and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

EMPLOYMENT OF ADDITIONAL MESSENGER.

Mr. PENROSE submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 491), which was read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That Senate resolution 278, Sixty-third Congress, second session, authorizing and directing the Sergeant at Arms of the Senate to appoint an additional messenger at the rate of $1,050 per annum, is hereby extended until otherwise ordered or until otherwise provided for by law.

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

On motion of Mr. KERN, it was Ordered, That the Hon. THOMAS W. HARDWICK, junior Senator from Georgia, be appointed chairman of the Committee on Expenditures in the Post Office Department to succeed Hon. William S. West, late Senator from that State, whose term of office has expired.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE EDWIN A. MERRITT, JR.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, I offer the jollowing resolutions and ask that they be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolutions.

The resolutions (S. Res. 493) were read, considered by unanimous consent, and unanimously agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with deep sensibility the announcement of the death of Hon. EDWIN A. MERRITT, Jr., late a Representative from the State of New York.

Resolved, That a committee of six Senators be appointed by the Vice President, to join the committee appointed on the part of the House of Representatives, to attend the funeral of the deceased at Potsdam, N. Y.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate a copy of these resolutions to the House of Representatives.

The VICE PRESIDENT appointed as the committee on the part of the Senate under the second resolution Mr. ROOT, Mr. O'GORMAN, Mr. SHERMAN, Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey, Mr. DILLINGHAM, and Mr. SAULSBURY.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, as a further mark of respect I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was unanimously agreed to, and (at 3 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, December 8, 1914, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, December 7, 1914.

This being the day fixed by the Constitution for the annual meeting of the Congress of the United States, the House of Representatives of the Sixty-third Congress met in its Hall at 12 o'clock noon for its third session, and was called to order by the Speaker, Hon. CHAMP CLARK, a Representative from the State of Missouri.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou who art from everlasting to everlasting, the beginning and the end; creating, re-creating, life-giving, life-sustaining Potentate; our God and our Father, our hearts turn to Thee at this, the beginning of the end of the Sixty-third Congress, for we realize that without Thee nothing is strong, nothing enduring; that if its work lives and bears fruit, it must be in consonance with the eternal laws which Thou hast ordained.

Inspire, we pray Thee, the heart of each Member of this House with patriotic zeal and fervor; give wisdom and strength to its Speaker, that with characteristic candor and courage he may continue to preside with justice and equity in its deliberations. Let Thy favor be upon our President and his counselors, that the affairs of state may be wisely administered at home and abroad. May the people uphold and sustain him in solving the problems which confront us in the present crisis. May those who are called to sit in judgment upon the laws enacted, national and international, be guided by wisdom, that their judgments may be true and righteous altogether. Continue us, we beseech Thee, in peace among ourselves and with all nations. And now, O God our Father, our hearts touched by the death of one of the Members of this House since we last met, we pray for Thy comfort to sustain us and those to whom he was nearest and dearest. Teach us how to live now, that we may be prepared to live in the larger life which Thou hast in store for Thy children, and all praise shall be Thine, in the name of the world's great Redeemer. Amen.

SWEARING IN OF MEMBERS.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, at a special election in the ninth district of New Jersey a few days ago Hon. RICHARD WAYNE PARKER was elected. The certificate has not yet arrived, and I ask unanimous consent that he may now be sworn in as a Member.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, at a special election held in Georgia for the tenth congressional district to fill the vacancy occasioned by the resignation of Senator elect THOMAS W. HARDWICK, Hon. CARL VINSON was elected. There was no opposition, and his certificate of election is in the hands of the Clerk. I ask that he be sworn in.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask whether we should not first ascertain if a quorum is present?

Mr. MANN. It does not require a quorum to swear in Members. They might make a quorum.

The SPEAKER. Following the precedents when the House is organized, the Chair is of the opinion that new Members ought to be sworn in before the roll is called.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the new Member from the first district of Maryland, Mr. JESSE D. PRICE, be sworn in.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to these requests?

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, I was unable to hear all of the requests, and I do not want any business to interfere with the regular order.

The SPEAKER. There is no business asked for except these requests to swear in Members. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] states that the Hon. RICHARD WAYNE PARKER is here as a successor to Judge McCoy in the ninth district of New Jersey; that under the peculiar laws of New Jersey a count can not be had until a number of weeks after the election, and therefore the certificate is not here, but that there is no dispute as to his election, and he asks unanimous consent that Mr. PARKER may be sworn in without his credentials. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] asks that the successor to Senator-elect HARDWICK also be sworn in.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. And I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the Member elect, Hon. JESSE D. PRICE, from the first congressional district of Maryland also be sworn in.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to these requests?

There was no objection.

Hon. RICHARD WAYNE PARKER, from the ninth congressional district of New Jersey; Hon. CARL VINSON, from the tenth congressional district of Georgia; and Hon. JESSE D. PRICE, from the first congressional district of Maryland, appeared at the bar of the House and took the oath of office prescribed by law.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, December 8, 1914.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, the God of our fathers, every mention of Thy name brings to us a renewed sense of our obligation to all mankind. In Thee we find the common origin of our race. The measure of Thy gifts to us is the measure of our responsibilities to all men. We believe that Thou hast provided the needs of all Thy creatures, and if anyone suffers some one has come short of the divine obligation and the administration of a divine stewardship. Grant us to be clean before God and men in the discharge of every duty by the inspiration that Thy name gives to us, that we may go forth doing all that it is possible for us to do to bring peace and happiness and prosperity to men. We ask for Christ's sake. Amen.

DEAR SIR: I take pleasure in submitting the inclosed resolutions, which were unanimously adopted at a meeting held by the citizens of the Bushwick-Ridgewood section on November 29, 1914, at the Bushwick High School.

Whereas the Post Office Department has in its employ a great many aged and infirm employees; and

Whereas there was pending before the late session of Congress a bill (H. R. 5139) known as the Hamill bill, the purpose of which is to make adequate provision for the retirement of superannuated and disabled Federal civil-service employees; and

Whereas the provisions of said bill are such that the efficiency of the public service would be materially increased by the constant addition of young men to replace those retired, and, entering at the minimum grades of salary, would effect a saving to the Government sufficient to initiate this plan of retirement; and

Whereas nearly all the largest corporations and railroads in the United States, as well as every large city, have inaugurated retirement systems for those who have spent the best years of their lives in service; and

Whereas the United States is the only nation in the world whose Government has not made any kind of provision for its aged employees: Therefore be it

Resolved by the citizens assembled at Bushwick High School of the Borough of Brooklyn, city and State of New York, That we heartily approve a retirement system for taking care of superannuated Government employees, and hereby indorse the provisions of the said Hamill bill (H. R. 5139), and respectfully request United States Senators Hon. ELIHU ROOT and Hon. JAMES A. O'GORMAN, and Congressmen Hon. FRANK E. WILSON, Hon. HARRY H. DALE, Hon. JAMES P. MAHER, Hon. WILLIAM M. CALDER, Hon. JOHN J. FITZGERALD, Hon. DANIEL J. GRIFFIN, Hon. JAMES H. O'BRIEN, and Hon. HERMAN A. METZ, representing the districts of Brooklyn, N. Y., to use their best efforts to resubmit said Hamill bill and effect its speedy enactment into law; and be it further Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to our Senators from the State of New York and to our Congressmen representing the districts of Brooklyn, N. Y.

POSTAGE ON SECOND-CLASS MAIL MATTER (H. DOC. NO. 1257).

Mr. BANKHEAD. As chairman of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads I desire to submit a preliminary report of the Joint Committee on Postage upon Second-Class Mail Matter and Compensation for the Transportation of Mail. I ask that the report be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that action will be taken.

The report is as follows:

RAILWAY MAIL PAY (ELECTRIC AND CABLE CAR COMPANIES) AND POSTAGE ON SECOND-CLASS MAIL MATTER.

[Preliminary report of the Joint Committee on Postage on Second-Class Mail Matter and Compensation for the Transportation of Mail. Nov. 30, 1914, 63d Cong., 3d sess.]

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

The Joint Committee on Postage on Second-Class Mail Matter and Compensation for the Transportation of Mail on August 31, 1914, submitted a report to Congress on the subject of railway mail pay (H. Doc. 1153, 63d Cong., 2d sess.). The subject matter of that report related to the transportation of mail over steam railroads. Early in our investigation hearings were granted representatives of electric lines, but as we progressed in our study we found that conditions applicable to transportation over steam roads and over electric and cable car routes were so entirely different as to necessitate independent investigations and reports.

Since our report of August 31, 1914, we have devoted our attention to the matter of transportation over electric and cable car routes, have collected a vast amount of data, and worked out a tentative plan. We find that the time has been insufficient to verify the data collected and to satisfy ourselves of the desirability of the tentative plan evolved. We therefore do not feel justified at this time in recommending to Congress the tentative plan we have evolved until we can be better assured of our premises.

For reasons indicated in our report of August 31, 1914, our investigation into the subject of compensation to steam railroads for the transportation of mail engaged our attention for a much longer period than we anticipated We were united in the opinion that the matter of compensation for mail transportation over both steam and electric and cable car routes shall be disposed of before taking up the subject of postage on second-class mail matter. This, on account of the extreme technicality of the subject of railway mail pay and the necessarily prolonged time taken for its consideration, has not received consideration for the reason just indicated.

Should Congress desire the electric and cable mail pay study completed and a study made of postage on second-class mail matter, it will be necessary to extend the life of our joint committee. In such event we respectfully recommend that the time for submission of our final report be extended from December 1, 1914, to on or before April 1, 1916.

As pointed out in our report of August 31, 1914, we had as of July 31, 1914, out of an appropriation of $25,000, a balance on hand of $18,439.50 "to defray such additional expense as may be incurred in working out a plan of mail pay to electric roads and in conducting the study of postage on second-class mail matter." Since then we have expended $928.41, leaving a balance as of November 30, 1914, of $17,511.09, as will appear from the itemized statement hereto attached.

The expenditures above mentioned do not cover printing, which, under general laws, is paid for out of the general printing appropriation bills.

CONDITION OF IMPORTED CORN.

Mr. SHERMAN. I introduce a joint resolution which I ask to have read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the reading of the joint resolution? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read it.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 204) directing the Secretary of Agriculture to ascertain whether imported corn is infested with weevil or other noxious or destructive insect, and for other purposes, was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of Agriculture be, and is hereby, directed to investigate the imports of corn into the United States to ascertain whether it or any part of the same is infested with weevil or other noxious or destructive insect, and if found to be so to investigate the source or sources of such imports and the origin, nature, and variety of the weevil or insect, and whether there is danger of communicating the same through such imports to corn grown in the United States so as to endanger its value, and if it be found to do so to take all necessary means to prevent such injury to domestic corn, and to cooperate with the Secretary of the Treasury to that end.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

ALLEGED USE OF MEXICAN FUNDS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the following resolution, coming over from a preceding day.

The SECRETARY. Senate resolution 487, submitted yesterday by Mr. ROBINSON, proposing to instruct the Committee on Foreign Relations to investigate the report contained in the press that $75,000 is alleged to have been paid by the Carranza régime or its representatives to two United States Senators to cause or induce the withdrawal of United States troops from Vera Cruz.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course——

Mr. ROBINSON. I will state to the Senator from Utah that if consent is given, it is my intention to move to amend the resolution by giving instructions to the lobby investigating committee instead of the Committee on Foreign Relations, the chairman of the latter committee having expressed a desire that the resolution go to some other committee, on account of the extensive matters for hearing before his committee.

Mr. SMOOT. May I ask whether the resolution involves any expenditure at all?

Mr. ROBINSON. It does not, I will say, if the request is addressed to me.

Mr. GALLINGER. I suggest to the Senator from Arkansas that he need not ask consent for the consideration of the resolution. The resolution is before the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is regularly before the Senate now.

Mr. SMOOT. I was going to make that suggestion. What I desire to know, however, is whether the resolution involves any expenditure?

The VICE PRESIDENT. On its face it does not.

Mr. SMOOT. I stated that I had hoped that this morning the Senator from Arkansas would withdraw the resolution. I do not believe that mere newspaper reports referring to some unnamed person or Member of this body ought to be dignified by the notice of the Senate. I recognize the fact that it has been done in the past; but I think it is a practice that ought to cease, and I know of no better occasion than this to inaugurate a change. I can not see what good will come from the proposed investigation. If any good whatever could come from it, I would not object to the passage of the resolution; but it does seem to me, Mr. President, that it is uncalled for and unnecessary to so dignify a newspaper report with no basis of fact given in the report itself. As I have said, I had hoped that this morning the Senator would withdraw the resolution, and if he did not withdraw it, that the Senate would not even allow it to be referred to a committee, but would lay the resolution upon the table.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, did I understand the Senator from Utah to make a motion to that effect? If so, before he makes that motion I should like to submit a brief statement.

THE PRESIDENT'S ADDRESS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Arkansas will pardon the Chair. The time has now nearly arrived when, in accordance with the concurrent resolution of the two Houses of Congress, the Senate of the United States is to proceed to the Hall of the House of Representatives for the purpose of hearing such recommendations as the President of the United States may be pleased to offer to the Congress. It seems impossible to act upon the resolution now, and its consideration, therefore, will be deferred until the return of the Senate. The Sergeant at Arms will carry out the instructions of the Senate.

Thereupon (at 12 o'clock and 22 minutes p. m.) the Senate, headed by the Sergeant at Arms and preceded by the Vice President and the Secretary, proceeded to the Hall of the House of Representatives.

The Senate returned to its Chamber at 1 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.

The address of the President of the United States this day delivered to both Houses of Congress is as follows:

ANNUAL ADDRESS OF THE PRESIDENT TO THE CONGRESS (H. DOC. NO. 1184).

Gentlemen of the Congress, the session upon which you are now entering will be the closing session of the Sixty-third Congress, a Congress, I venture to say, which will long be remembered for the great body of thoughtful and constructive work which it has done, in loyal response to the thought and needs of the country. I should like in this address to review the notable record and try to make adequate assessment of it; but no doubt we stand too near the work that has been done and are ourselves too much part of it to play the rôle of historians toward it.

Our program of legislation with regard to the regulation of business is now virtually complete. It has been put forth, as we intended, as a whole, and leaves no conjecture as to what is to follow. The road at last lies clear and firm before business. It is a road which it can travel without fear or embarrassment. It is the road to ungrudged, unclouded success. In it every honest man, every man who believes that the public interest is part of his own interest, may walk with perfect confidence.

Moreover, our thoughts are now more of the future than of the past. While we have worked at our tasks of peace the circumstances of the whole age have been altered by war. What we have done for our own land and our own people we did with the best that was in us, whether of character or of intelligence, with sober enthusiasm and with a confidence in the principles upon which we were acting which sustained us at every step of the difficult undertaking; but it is done. It has passed from our hands. It is now an established part of the legislation of the country. Its usefulness, its effects, will disclose themselves in experience. What chiefly strikes us now, as we look about us during these closing days of a year which will be forever memorable in the history of the world, is that we face new tasks, have been facing them these six months, must face them in the months to come—face them without partisan feeling, like men who have forgotten everything but a common duty and the fact that we are representatives of a great people whose thought is not of us but of what America owes to herself and to all mankind in such circumstances as these upon which we look amazed and anxious.

War has interrupted the means of trade not only but also the processes of production. In Europe it is destroying men and resources wholesale and upon a scale unprecedented and appalling. There is reason to fear that the time is near, if it be not already at hand, when several of the countries of Europe will find it difficult to do for their people what they have hitherto been always easily able to do—many essential and fundamental things. At any rate, they will need our help and our manifold services as they have never needed them before; and we should be ready, more fit and ready than we have ever been.

It is of equal consequence that the nations whom Europe has usually supplied with innumerable articles of manufacture and commerce, of which they are in constant need and without which their economic development halts and stands still, can now get only a small part of what they formerly imported, and eagerly looks to us to supply their all but empty markets. This is particularly true of our own neighbors, the States, great and small, of Central and South America. Their lines of trade have hitherto run chiefly athwart the seas, not to our ports but to the ports of Great Britain and of the older Continent of Europe. I do not stop to inquire why or to make any comment on probable causes. What interests us just now is not the explanation but the fact, and our duty and opportunity in the presence of it. Here are markets which we must supply, and we must find the means of action. The United States, this great people for whom we speak and act, should be ready as never before to serve itself and to serve mankind; ready with its resources, its energies, its forces of production, and its means of distribution.

It is a very practical matter—a matter of ways and means. We have the resources, but are we fully ready to use them? And, if we can make ready what we have, have we the means at hand to distribute it? We are not fully ready; neither have we the means of distribution. We are willing, but we are not fully able. We have the wish to serve and to serve greatly, generously; but we are not prepared as we should be. We are not ready to mobilize our resources at once. We are not prepared to use them immediately and at their best, without delay and without waste.

To speak plainly, we have grossly erred in the way in which we have stunted and hindered the development of our merchant marine; and now, when we need ships, we have not got them. We have year after year debated, without end or conclusion, the best policy to pursue with regard to the use of the ores and forests and water powers of our national domain in the rich States of the West, when we should have acted; and they are still locked up. The key is still turned upon them, the door shut fast at which thousands of vigorous men, full of initiative, knock clamorously for admittance. The water power of our navigable streams outside the national domain also, even in the Eastern States, where we have worked and planned for generations, is still not used as it might be, because we will and we won't; because the laws we have made do not intelligently balance encouragement against restraint. We withhold by regulation.

I have come to ask you to remedy and correct these mistakes and omissions, even at this short session of a Congress which would certainly seem to have done all the work that could reasonably be expected of it. The time and the circumstances are extraordinary, and so must our efforts be also.

Fortunately, two great measures, finely conceived, the one to unlock, with proper safeguards, the resources of the national domain, the other to encourage the use of the navigable waters outside that domain for the generation of power, have already passed the House of Representatives and are ready for immediate consideration and action by the Senate. With the deepest earnestness I urge their prompt passage. In them both we turn our backs upon hesitation and makeshift and formulate a genuine policy of use and conservation, in the best sense of those terms. We owe the one measure not only to the people of that great western country for whose free and systematic development, as it seems to me, our legislation has done so little, but also to the people of the Nation as a whole; and we as clearly owe the other in fulfillment of our repeated promises that the water power of the country should in fact as well as in name be put at the disposal of great industries which can make economical and profitable use of it, the rights of the public being adequately guarded the while, and monopoly in the use prevented. To have begun such measures and not completed them would indeed mar the record of this great Congress very seriously. I hope and confidently believe that they will be completed.

And there is another great piece of legislation which awaits and should receive the sanction of the Senate—I mean the bill which gives a larger measure of self-government to the people of the Philippines. How better, in this time of anxious questioning and perplexed policy, could we show our confidence in the principles of liberty, as the source as well as the expression of life, how better could we demonstrate our own self-possession and steadfastness in the courses of justice and disinterestedness than by thus going calmly forward to fulfill our promises to a dependent people, who will look more anxiously than ever to see whether we have indeed the liberality, the unselfishness, the courage, the faith we have boasted and professed. I can not believe that the Senate will let this great measure of constructive justice await the action of another Congress. Its passage would nobly crown the record of these two years of memorable labor.

But I think that you will agree with me that this does not complete the toll of our duty. How are we to carry our goods to the empty markets of which I have spoken if we have not the ships? How are we to build up a great trade if we have not the certain and constant means of transportation upon which all profitable and useful commerce depends? And how are we to get the ships if we wait for the trade to develop without them? To correct the many mistakes by which we have discouraged and all but destroyed the merchant marine of the country, to retrace the steps by which we have, it seems almost deliberately, withdrawn our flag from the seas, except where, here and there, a ship of war is bidden carry it or some wandering yacht displays it, would take a long time and involve many detailed items of legislation, and the trade which we ought immediately to handle would disappear or find other channels while we debated the items.

The case is not unlike that which confronted us when our own continent was to be opened up to settlement and industry, and we needed long lines of railway, extended means of transportation prepared beforehand, if development was not to lag intolerably and wait interminably. We lavishly subsidized the building of transcontinental railroads. We look back upon that with regret now, because the subsidies led to many scandals of which we are ashamed; but we know that the railroads had to be built, and if we had it to do over again we should of course build them, but in another way. Therefore I propose another way of providing the means of transportation, which must needs precede, not tardily follow, the development of our trade with our neighbor States of America. It may seem a reversal of the natural order of things, but it is true, that the routes of trade must be actually opened—by many ships and regular sailings and moderate charges—before streams of merchandise will flow freely and profitably through them.

Hence the pending shipping bill, discussed at the last session but as yet passed by neither House. In my judgment such legislation is imperatively needed and can not wisely be postponed. The Government must open these gates of trade, and open them wide; open them before it is altogether profitable to open them, or altogether reasonable to ask private capital to open them at a venture. It is not a question of the Government monopolizing the field. It should take action to make it certain that transportation at reasonable rates will be promptly provided, even where the carriage is not at first profitable; and then, when the carriage has become sufficiently profitable to attract and engage private capital, and engage it in abundance, the Government ought to withdraw. I very earnestly hope that the Congress will be of this opinion, and that both Houses will adopt this exceedingly important bill.

The great subject of rural credits still remains to be dealt with, and it is a matter of deep regret that the difficulties of the subject have seemed to render it impossible to complete a bill for passage at this session. But it can not be perfected yet, and therefore there are no other constructive measures the necessity for which I will at this time call your attention to; but I would be negligent of a very manifest duty were I not to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the proposed convention for safety at sea awaits its confirmation and that the limit fixed in the convention itself for its acceptance is the last day of the present month. The conference in which the convention originated was called by the United States; the representatives of the United States played a very influential part indeed in framing the provisions of the proposed convention; and those provisions are in themselves for the most part admirable. It would hardly be consistent with the part we have played in the whole matter to let it drop and go by the board as if forgotten and neglected. It was ratified in May last by the German Government and in August by the Parliament of Great Britain. It marks a most hopeful and decided advance in international civilization. We should show our earnest good faith in a great matter by adding our own acceptance of it.

There is another matter of which I must make special mention, if I am to discharge my conscience, lest it should escape your attention. It may seem a very small thing. It affects only a single item of appropriation. But many lives and many great enterprises hang upon it. It is the matter of making adequate provision for the survey and charting of our coasts. It is immediately pressing and exigent in connection with the immense coast line of Alaska, a coast line greater than that of the United States themselves, though it is also very important indeed with regard to the older coasts of the continent. We can not use our great Alaskan domain, ships will not ply thither, if those coasts and their many hidden dangers are not thoroughly surveyed and charted. The work is incomplete at almost every point. Ships and lives have been lost in threading what were supposed to be well-known main channels. We have not provided adequate vessels or adequate machinery for the survey and charting. We have used old vessels that were not big enough or strong enough and which were so nearly unseaworthy that our inspectors would not have allowed private owners to send them to sea. This is a matter which, as I have said, seems small, but is in reality very great. Its importance has only to be looked into to be appreciated.

Before I close may I say a few words upon two topics, much discussed out of doors, upon which it is highly important that our judgments should be clear, definite, and steadfast?

One of these is economy in Government expenditures. The duty of economy is not debatable. It is manifest and imperative. In the appropriations we pass we are spending the money of the great people whose servants we are—not our own. We are trustees and responsible stewards in the spending. The only thing debatable and upon which we should be careful to make our thought and purpose clear is the kind of economy demanded of us. I assert with the greatest confidence that the people of the United States are not jealous of the amount their Government costs if they are sure that they get what they need and desire for the outlay, that the money is being spent for objects of which they approve, and that it is being applied with good business sense and management.

Governments grow, piecemeal, both in their tasks and in the means by which those tasks are to be performed, and very few Governments are organized, I venture to say, as wise and experienced business men would organize them if they had a clean sheet of paper to write upon. Certainly the Government of the United States is not. I think that it is generally agreed that there should be a systematic reorganization and reassembling of its parts so as to secure greater efficiency and effect considerable savings in expense. But the amount of money saved in that way would, I believe, though no doubt considerable in itself, running, it may be, into the millions, be relatively small—small, I mean, in proportion to the total necessary outlays of the Government. It would be thoroughly worth effecting, as every saving would, great or small. Our duty is not altered by the scale of the saving. But my point is that the people of the United States do not wish to curtail the activities of the Government; they wish, rather, to enlarge them; and with every enlargment, with the mere growth, indeed, of the country itself, there must come, of course, the inevitable increase of expense. The sort of economy we ought to practice may be effected, and ought to be effected, by a careful study and assessment of the tasks to be performed; and the money spent ought to be made to yield the best possible returns in efficiency and achievement. And, like good stewards, we should so account for every dollar of our appropriations as to make it perfectly evident what it was spent for and in what way it was spent.

It is not expenditure but extravagance that we should fear being criticized for; not paying for the legitimate enterprises and undertakings of a great Government whose people command what it should do, but adding what will benefit only a few or pouring money out for what need not have been undertaken at all or might have been postponed or better and more economically conceived and carried out. The Nation is not niggardly; it is very generous. It will chide us only if we forget for whom we pay money out and whose money it is we pay. These are large and general standards, but they are not very difficult of application to particular cases.

The other topic I shall take leave to mention goes deeper into the principles of our national life and policy. It is the subject of national defense.

It can not be discussed without first answering some very searching questions. It is said in some quarters that we are not prepared for war. What is meant by being prepared? Is it meant that we are not ready upon brief notice to put a nation in the field, a nation of men trained to arms? Of course we are not ready to do that; and we never shall be in time of peace so long as we retain our present political principles and institutions. And what is it that it is suggested we should be prepared to do? To defend ourselves against attack? We have always found means to do that, and shall find them whenever it is necessary without calling our people away from their necessary tasks to render compulsory military service in time of peace.

Allow me to speak with great plainness and directness upon this great matter and to avow my convictions with deep earnestness. I have tried to know what America is, what her people think, what they are, what they most cherish and hold dear. I hope that some of their finer passions are in my own heart—some of the great conceptions and desires which gave birth to this Government and which have made the voice of this people a voice of peace and hope and liberty among the peoples of the world; and that, speaking my own thoughts, I shall, at least in part, speak theirs also, however faintly and inadequately, upon this vital matter.

We are at peace with all the world. No one who speaks counsel based on fact or drawn from a just and candid interpretation of realities can say that there is any reason to fear that from any quarter our independence or the integrity of our territory is threatened. Dread of the power of any other nation we are incapable of. We are not jealous of rivalry in the fields of commerce or of any other peaceful achievement. We mean to live our own lives as we will; but we mean also to let live. We are, indeed, a true friend to all the nations of the world, because we threaten none, covet the possessions of none, desire the overthrow of none. Our friendship can be accepted and is accepted without reservation, because it is offered in a spirit and for a purpose which no one need ever question or suspect. Therein lies our greatness. We are champions of peace and of concord. And we should be very jealous of this distinction which we have sought to earn. Just now we should be particularly jealous of it, because it is our dearest present hope that this character and reputation may presently, in God's providence, bring us an opportunity such as has seldom been vouchsafed any nation, the opportunity to counsel and obtain peace in the world and reconciliation and a healing settlement of many a matter that has cooled and interrupted the friendship of nations. This is the time above all others when we should wish and resolve to keep our strength by self-possession, our influence by preserving our ancient principles of action.

From the first we have had a clear and settled policy with regard to military establishments. We never have had, and while we retain our present principles and ideals we never shall have, a large standing army. If asked, Are you ready to defend yourselves? We reply, Most assuredly, to the utmost. And yet we shall not turn America into a military camp. We will not ask our young men to spend the best years of their lives making soldiers of themselves. There is another sort of energy in us. It will know how to declare itself and make itself effective should occasion arise. And especially when half the world is on fire we shall be careful to make our moral insurance against the spread of the conflagration very definite and certain and adequate indeed.

Let us remind ourselves, therefore, of the only thing we can do or will do. We must depend in every time of national peril, in the future as in the past, not upon a standing army, nor yet upon a reserve army, but upon a citizenry trained and accustomed to arms. It will be right enough, right American policy, based upon our accustomed principles and practices, to provide a system by which every citizen who will volunteer for the training may be made familiar with the use of modern arms, the rudiments of drill and maneuver, and the maintenance and sanitation of camps. We should encourage such training and make it a means of discipline which our young men will learn to value. It is right that we should provide it not only, but that we should make it as attractive as possible, and so induce our young men to undergo it at such times as they can command a little freedom and can seek the physical development they need, for mere health's sake, if for nothing else. Every means by which such things can be stimulated is legitimate, and such a method smacks of true American ideas. It is right, too, that the National Guard of the States should be developed and strengthened by every means which is not inconsistent with our obligations to our own people or with the established policy of our Government. And this, also, not because the time or occasion specially calls for such measures, but because it should be our constant policy to make these provisions for our national peace and safety.

More than this carries with it a reversal of the whole history and character of our polity. More than this, proposed at this time, permit me to say, would mean merely that we had lost our self-possession, that we had been thrown off our balance by a war with which we have nothing to do, whose causes can not touch us, whose very existence affords us opportunities of friendship and disinterested service which should make us ashamed of any thought of hostility or fearful preparation for trouble. This is assuredly the opportunity for which a people and a government like ours were raised up, the opportunity not only to speak but actually to embody and exemplify the counsels of peace and amity and lasting concord which is based on justice and fair and generous dealing.

A powerful navy we have always regarded as our proper and natural means of defense; and it has always been of defense that we have thought, never of aggression or of conquest. But who shall tell us what sort of navy to build? We shall take leave to be strong upon the seas, in the future as in the past; and there will be no thought of offense or of provocation in that. Our ships are our natural bulwarks. When will the experts tell us just what kind we should construct, and when will they be right for 10 years together, if the relative efficiency of craft of different kinds and uses continues to change as we have seen it change under our very eyes in these last few months?

But I turn away from the subject. It is not new. There is no new need to discuss it. We shall not alter our attitude toward it because some amongst us are nervous and excited. We shall easily and sensibly agree upon a policy of defense. The question has not changed its aspects because the times are not normal. Our policy will not be for an occasion. It will be conceived as a permanent and settled thing, which we will pursue at all seasons, without haste and after a fashion perfectly consistent with the peace of the world, the abiding friendship of States, and the unhampered freedom of all with whom we deal. Let there be no misconception. The country has been misinformed. We have not been negligent of national defense. We are not unmindful of the great responsibility resting upon us. We shall learn and profit by the lesson of every experience and every new circumstance; and what is needed will be adequately done.

I close, as I began, by reminding you of the great tasks and duties of peace which challenge our best powers and invite us to build what will last, the tasks to which we can address ourselves now and at all times with free-hearted zest and with all the finest gifts of constructive wisdom we possess. To develop our life and our resources; to supply our own people, and the people of the world as their need arises, from the abundant plenty of our fields and our marts of trade; to enrich the commerce of our own States and of the world with the products of our mines, our farms, and our factories, with the creations of our thought and the fruits of our character—this is what will hold our attention and our enthusiasm steadily, now and in the years to come, as we strive to show in our life as a nation what liberty and the inspirations of an emancipated spirit may do for men and for societies, for individuals, for States, and for mankind.

Mr. FLETCHER. I move that 5,000 additional copies of the address of the President this day delivered to the two Houses of Congress be printed for the use of the Senate document room.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SWANSON in the chair). If there is no objection, it will be so ordered. The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

ALLEGED USE OF MEXICAN FUNDS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senate resolution No. 487 is before the Senate, and the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] has the floor.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, when the Senate proceeded to the Hall of the House of Representatives for the purpose of hearing the President's address Senate resolution 487 was under consideration. The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] had suggested that the resolution be withdrawn; that the circumstances were not such as would warrant the Senate in authorizing or directing an investigation. The Senator from Utah also deplored the practice which he said, as I understood him, has heretofore prevailed in this body of taking notice of alleged scandalous or libelous statements reflecting upon the integrity of the Senate or of its Members.

I am always disposed to give careful attention to any suggestion the Senator from Utah makes, but I find myself unable, after consideration of his suggestion, to comply with it. I do not believe that if the Senator from Utah has read the statement upon which the resolution is based he will persist in his suggestion.

It is difficult for one who has served a long time in the United States Senate to get the viewpoint of the public. We, who are accustomed to associating with one another, who know our own methods, and who have regard for the high character of our colleagues are slow, and rightfully slow, to give credence to any report or statement which reflects upon the integrity of this body or any of its Members. If the public estimation of the United States Senate has been altered during recent years, if the United States Senate is not now held in that high esteem which formerly characterized public opinion concerning it, it may be due in part to the fact that the Senate has been slow to take notice of charges of this character.

Mr. President, the newspaper article, which is copied in full in the resolution, contains this statement:

> It is impossible to ascertain from the documents containing the record of the payment the names of the Senators, but the fact remains that the books of the treasury contain an entry that this sum was paid over to two Members of the Senate about a week before November 23, when Gen. Funston led his forces out of Vera Cruz by order of the War Department.

I agree with the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], and with other Senators here, that it is impossible, impracticable, and improper for this body to take notice of every scandalous or libelous statement which may be published in the press or currently circulated reflecting upon the integrity of this body or its membership; but I suggest to the Senator from Utah and to other Senators that if any statement printed in the public press can justify the Senate in taking action to protect its own good name and in making an investigation of this character, then this statement does that.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. Does the Senator find in that published statement, or has he obtained from any other source, any definite information as to who is responsible for that publication?

Mr. ROBINSON. The publication purports to be a cablegram from the City of Mexico, which is published in the Washington Post. Of course I do not know what individual in the employment of the Washington Post is responsible for its publication; I have made no effort to ascertain that. I thought the investigating committee could do that.

Mr. GALLINGER. Does the Senator believe, or has he reason to know, that a cablegram of that kind was sent to the Washington Post?

Mr. ROBINSON. The Washington Post makes the statement that it was received; and it publishes it as such.

Mr. GALLINGER. Well, I do not so read it. I wish the Senator from Arkansas would read that.

Mr. ROBINSON. If the Senator from New Hampshire will pardon me, as my attention is called to the matter by the Senator from Florida, the statement was repeated in the Washington Post this morning. Not only that, but the article, repeating the statement, declared that this resolution was to find out which two Senators had received the $75,000. Now, I suggest to the Senator that if there can be a case which would appeal to him as calling upon him to protect the good name of this body as a whole, this is such a case.

The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] has suggested that the Senate ought not to take notice of it, because the names of the two Senators are not mentioned. That is the very reason, the particular reason, why the Senate ought to take notice of it. If the names of the Senators had been mentioned, those two Senators, in justification of their own integrity, would have taken this action; they would have been compelled to do so by public opinion. Here is a declaration, published and sent broadcast throughout the United States, asserting that two Senators have received a bribe, and that the evidence of it is contained in the records of the Government of Mexico, and yet the Senator from Utah and the Senator from New Hampshire impliedly say that is not sufficiently specific to warrant the Senate in taking notice of the publication.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I do not want the Senator from Arkansas to put me in that attitude.

Mr. ROBINSON. I beg the Senator's pardon. I perhaps should not have said he "impliedly says," because the Senator from New Hampshire yesterday suggested that the resolution should go to a committee.

Mr. GALLINGER. My thought is, Mr. President, that in view of the conditions in Mexico and the various factions there, all of whom up to the present time are discredited, it would be a very natural thing for some of those men who wanted $75,000, as a matter of loot, to take it and make an entry of the kind stated on the books.

Mr. ROBINSON. If the Senator will pardon me, I was just about to make that suggestion myself; but the difficulty is that the public will not take that view of it if the Senate ignores this matter after this great newspaper has made the specific declaration. Our people here regard a statement in the "books of the treasury," as accurate and reliable; they do not understand, as a whole, the system which seems to prevail in some foreign countries.

I think this investigation, if my opinion concerning the truthfulness of the charge is material, will disclose that if any money was taken from the treasury of Mexico, as is alleged in this document, it was not paid to any public officer of the United States, but that it was probably taken for some other purpose. The public, however, may be very indifferent as to my opinion concerning the matter; the public may be very indifferent as to the opinion of any individual Member of this body.

The point I make is that here is a specific charge, made by a responsible newspaper, to the effect that evidence exists that two United States Senators——

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator from Arkansas will allow me, the Washington Post does not make the charge. This is a mere cable dispatch.

Mr. ROBINSON. Very well. The Washington Post, in publishing the cable dispatch as news, assumes responsibility for it. The Senator from New Hampshire knows that if the Washington Post had published the names of two Senators as having received this $75,000, an action would lie for libel; such a publication would be libelous per se. The mere fact that the names of the two Senators are omitted perhaps relieves it from that difficulty.

The only protection that the Senate has against such statements as that, if they are unfounded, is to investigate them and vindicate its good name. You need not doubt, sir, that newspapers in many parts of the United States are to-day publishing the charge as true—publishing that the records of a foreign Government show that $75,000 was paid to two United States Senators; you need not doubt that whatever may be your viewpoint concerning the matter, however secure we may feel here in the consciousness of our own integrity, this report, uncontradicted and unrepudiated, will cast a stigma upon this body for not resenting which we ourselves will be held responsible in the future.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the Senator from Arkansas is very courteous in yielding; I propose to make only one further observation, and then I shall not again interrupt the Senator.

I said yesterday that I was quite willing that this resolution should go to the committee known as the lobby committee; and I have not changed my mind about that, if the Senator insists upon pressing the resolution. Personally I had hoped that he would withdraw the resolution. During my term of service in the Senate I have twice been called before committees of the Senate that was investigating itself. I believe I was on both occasions put on oath to give testimony that I had not been guilty of something that had been charged in the newspapers. Nothing came of those inquiries. We vindicated ourselves so far as giving personal testimony was concerned; and I am willing to go through that ordeal again if the Senator from Arkansas thinks it necessary.

Of course if two United States Senators have been bribed to influence the President of the United States, they could not possibly belong to my party, because members of my party are not supposed to have any influence at the White House on either national or international questions. So I do not think we on this side of the Chamber need have any apprehensions as to the result of an inquiry of this kind; but to my mind it does dignify newspaper reports that are without authority, and if we continue to pursue all such attacks that may be made upon the Senate we shall be kept very busy in the future.

Having said that much, personally I have no objection to the matter going to the lobby committee, which has been struggling with other questions. I suppose they have not yet reached a conclusion on any of them; and perhaps it will do no harm to give them a little additional employment. In my opinion, however, it will not result in satisfying the public mind any more than it is now satisfied. The public mind has been poisoned with the idea—and largely through newspaper statements that have had no substantial backing—that the Senate of the United States is a corrupt body. The Senator from Arkansas knows that is not so, as I know it is not so; but if it is desirable that we should halt our business to take up this inconsequential matter in this short session, I have no particular objection to it being done by the committee which the Senator from Arkansas has agreed the resolution shall go to. Having said that much, I shall say no more.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I do not regard it as an inconsequential matter. Under the rules of the Senate, as I understand them, it is a matter of the highest privilege. The Senator has stated that this body is in bad repute. I do not agree with that declaration, but I think it would be a serious blunder——

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I did not say that the body was in bad repute. I said that the public mind had been poisoned with the idea——

Mr. ROBINSON. And regarded the Senate as corrupt——

Mr. GALLINGER. The public mind had been taught to a certain extent by unauthorized newspaper interviews and statements that such is the fact. As I said, the Senator knows it is not so; I know it is not so; and I think the intelligence of the country knows it is not so.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, the Senator has said that he thinks no one upon the other side of the Chamber would be affected by the investigation. I feel sure that the same is true of this side, and I think it proper to say so. There is no man, no matter how long he may have served in this body, who has a higher regard for the traditions and for the reputation of the Senate than have I. However inefficient and however ill considered my action here may be, I know that this body has been in the past—and I hope it may prove to be more effective in the future—a bulwark against oppression and a power for good. I think that, in order to accomplish that end, it must protect its good name when it is brought in question by specific declarations of this character.

The time has come when magazines and newspapers should quit printing charges of this sort unless they are willing to produce the evidence upon which the charges are based. There is nothing more detrimental to the public service than bringing into ill repute the good name of public officers. I know what it is for an officer to have his good name traduced; I know what it is to fight on the defensive. Here is a statement which charges that the records of a foreign Government show that a sum of money was paid to two United States Senators, and that further investigation developed that apparently Zubaran had informed Carranza that it was necessary to employ "financial stimulus" in order to render it certain that President Wilson would not recede from his expressed determination to withdraw the American troops on November 23.

It would be a matter of little difficulty for any committee of this body, or for the Senate acting for itself, to ascertain the source of and the responsibility for that statement. If untrue, as we believe it to be untrue, then it ought to be repudiated, in order that the public may not misconstrue the failure of the Senate to contradict a statement of that sort when it has been made in a responsible newspaper.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. ROBINSON. With pleasure.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Just upon the practical side of the question, I should like to ask the Senator how an investigation of this sort would determine whether or not the books of the Mexican treasury show that money was used for the purpose alleged or for any other purpose? We have, of course, no access to those books, and probably the proposed committee would be denied access to the books, and very properly so.

So far as what any man may say those books contain is concerned, the Senator is too good a lawyer, of course, to consider that that would be any evidence either before an investigating committee or anywhere else.

Mr. ROBINSON. Oh, to be sure, if the Senator will permit me.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. So I am rather inquiring as to the efficacy of an investigation of this sort, when you are met at the very threshold with the legal fact that you can not determine whether or not there is any basis for the statement.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I do not find the difficulty that is suggested by the learned Senator from Wyoming to be insurmountable at all. The clear implication is that in the evacuation of the City of Mexico the Carranzista forces have left behind a part of the records of the government; that these fell into the hands of the Villatistas, and that it is from this source that the imputation comes. The Villa government itself would have to produce—it could not refuse to produce—the books, if such books are in existence.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. What is that last statement the Senator made, please?

Mr. ROBINSON. Those who claim to possess the books, the Villa government, would in good faith feel compelled to produce them, having authorized the statement, if it has authorized the statement, or else disavow it. If it disavows it, if it declares that it has no such records in its possession——

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Why, Mr. President, I am surprised that the Senator from Arkansas should say that there is any authority under the Senate of the United States or under the judicial power of the United States to go into a foreign country and compel the production of documentary evidence.

Mr. ROBINSON. I did not say anything of the kind. The Senator may have inferred it——

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. No; I asked the question twice over.

Mr. ROBINSON. Just a moment—the Senator may have inferred it from my statement, but I did not intend to say that. The resolution as originally drawn by me gave the special committee authority to visit Mexico and take testimony. If this resolution goes to the lobby committee, the committee can make such investigation as it desires and can report a resolution giving itself additional authority if it is necessary and can go to Mexico or can send a messenger there for the purpose of inspecting the books. There is no difficulty about the practical feature of it.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The Senator misapprehends my suggestion. We could send the committee to Mexico if we had money enough in our contingent fund, but I assert here that there is no power under the Senate of the United States or under the judicial power of the United States to compel the Government of Mexico to disclose what is upon its records.

Mr. ROBINSON. Certainly not; and if the Senator inferred from anything I said that this Government or that any committee——

Mr. STONE. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON. Just a moment—that any committee of the Senate could compel the Government of Mexico or any government, either de facto or de jure, existing in Mexico to do anything, he certainly misinterpreted my statement, but the committee could investigate in its own way and reach a conclusion itself, using all available sources of information, and report to the Senate and to the country whether there was any foundation for the charge.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I read this article in the Washington Post yesterday morning. It purports to be a dispatch from the City of Mexico and states that certain things appear on some records belonging to the Carranza provisional government. I not only do not know of any means by which the committee could have access to those books if they could be found—I have not any idea, of course, where they are now; whether they are in the City of Mexico or in Vera Cruz—but, in addition to that, I want to say to my friend that after the committee got there and found, if we can presume that they should find, an entry on the books laid before the committee such as is detailed in the dispatch in the Post, that would not be any proof except to this extent, that $75,000 had been sent to a gentleman here by the name of Zubaran, representing the Carranza government. Zubaran is the only man that I have ever heard mentioned who knows what he did with the $75,000, if he got it. I saw in the papers yesterday afternoon, or possibly this morning, a very emphatic and somewhat heated disavowal on the part of Zubaran. He said that the thing was not only untrue, but that it was a silly lie. It seems to me we could well leave the whole subject at that point.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from Wyoming, both of whom are eminent lawyers, have suggested a difficulty which is not dissimilar to that which arises in every lawsuit that has been tried involving subjects of this character. The question as to the manner of obtaining evidence would, of course, devolve upon the committee making the investigation. If the Senator wants to say, because he thinks there will be difficulty in arriving at the truth of the matter, that no investigation should be made, good and well; that is upon his own responsibility. I say that if a committee of this body, charged by the Senate with responsibility, makes the investigation and does its duty in regard to it, and makes a report to the Senate, its findings will be in law and in fact persuasive, if not conclusive, as to the truthfulness or untruthfulness of the charge. The objection that it would be difficult to prove that a United States Senator took a bribe is an objection that has arisen in every bribery case since government began. We know here that no one in this body would accept a bribe, but the public does not know it.

Mr. LODGE. They will not know it as the result of an investigation, then.

Mr. ROBINSON. It may be true, as suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts, that they will never know it, or that they will not know it after this resolution has been passed. I can not remain indifferent, I can not take the view of it that some of you do, though it may be that if I had served in this body as long as you I would have been as indifferent to the circumstances as some of you manifest yourselves.

Here is a statement which is a reflection on every Senator, by reason of the fact that it charges corruption and dishonesty against two Members, and specifically states that those two Members are unknown. Now, the matter has resolved itself into this: The opposition to the resolution object to it for two reasons. First, it is dignifying a charge for which they say there is no foundation; second, if the resolution passes it will accomplish nothing, because the proof can not be obtained.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, the Senator is assuming that I am opposing his resolution. I simply make an inquiry for the purpose of securing information.

Mr. ROBINSON. If the Senator declares that he is supporting the resolution, I accept his statement, of course; but I do not think anyone who heard his inquiry would doubt his attitude at that moment concerning the resolution.

Mr. President, I think I have consumed all the time on this subject that I should take. I am willing that the Senate shall vote upon the matter. If the Senator from Utah persists in his suggestion that a motion be made to lay the resolution upon the table, and if the Senate thinks the resolution should go upon the table, the responsibility is with the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I think we have already given a great deal more attention to this matter than it deserves. Here comes a wandering story out of the whirlpool of disorder and anarchy which exists in Mexico, and now in Mexico City. It is a story evidently coming from one faction directed against another faction, with a view, probably, of injuring it. The entry on the books, according to this anonymous statement, is that it was "extraordinary diplomatic expenses" for which this money was spent.

Even if we started on this investigation, how could we possibly find out about the matter? Mexico is not bound to open her books to us. I do not know at this moment who is the government in Mexico. There are one or two presidents going on there; there are two or three governments going on there. The President of the United States, in the very interesting message which we have just heard, omitted to say anything about the Mexican situation. He did not congratulate the country on the success of our policy there, and he did not even tell us who constituted the Mexican Government at this moment. Are we going to send a subcommittee of the Senate down to Mexico City to ask them the truth about this vague, wandering newspaper dispatch?

Why, Mr. President, it seems to me that our own self-respect ought to lead us to treat this thing with perfect contempt. I do not think the Senate or any Senator in it needs the protection of an investigation against such stuff as that. Certainly there is not one of us that needs it, and surely the Senate does not need it. I think the Senate can afford to treat the thing with the silence and indifference which it deserves; and I regret that the Senator from Arkansas, whose motives and intentions I thoroughly appreciate, should have brought it before us at all. I think the best way is to lay it on the table, and get rid of it.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, just a word.

I wish to call the Senator's attention to the fact that in the article itself doubts are expressed as to whether there is anything in the charge, for the last paragraph of the article says:

> Doubts are held here—

That is, in Mexico City—

> as to whether the money ever was paid to Senators, as alleged. It is quite possible the entry might have been made on the books and the story concocted to account for the diverting of the sum in other directions, although the treasury employees who were connected with Carranza's administration insist that the money was cabled to Zubaran to be used in influence Senators.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON. Does not the Senator from Utah think that if a committee of the Senate investigated the charge and found that statement to be true it would be more persuasive and more nearly conclusive than a suggestion made in the same article carrying the imputation? Of course we all know that it is possible; everybody knows that a thing is possible until one has been tried in court and found guilty beyond a reasonable doubt. Many possibilities exist from a legal standpoint.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I do not believe there was ever such an entry made. I do not believe there was ever such a book in existence. I do not believe a committee can possibly find the man who sent the telegram. I do not believe anything will come from an investigation except simply a report stating that there is nothing whatever in it; and I believe every Senator and every newspaper man and every other man in the country who might read the article would come to that conclusion without an investigation of any kind.

I want to say, as far as I am personally concerned, that I need no protection from such newspaper articles. I do not believe the Senator from Arkansas needs any. I am sure he does not. I am sure no Senator in this body needs it, and I think it is magnifying a newspaper report beyond all reason. We can select such reports every morning if we desire to do so and have investigations made, and we could, if desired, have committees of the Senate do nothing else but investigate such ridiculous, untruthful reports as this, and shown to be such upon its face. I therefore move that the resolution be laid on the table.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, before that is done I wish to say one word.

I hope the Senator will not press his motion to lay the resolution on the table. I shall vote against it if he does, although I am in no sense in sympathy with the resolution. I am sorry it was brought in; but when it comes from a Senator of such conservative feeling and judgment and for whom I have such high respect as the Senator from Arkansas, if a Senator of his standing has seen fit to bring it before the Senate I should not like simply to brush it aside in that way.

I have no objection, since the resolution is here, and I am inclined to think, perhaps, it is better since it is here to let it go to a committee. The only thing the committee can do under this resolution will be to make an investigation which entails no expense on the Senate fund. The resolution does not provide for an expense. If it did, it would have to go to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate; and it was stated, when that view of the matter was before the Senate a short time ago, that the resolution would not have to go to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, for the reason that it carried no expense with it.

What I wish to say, Mr. President, is this: If the committee cares to bring Mr. Zubaran or anybody else before it and examine him and receive statements from him, let it be done. If it will better satisfy any Senator here, if one Senator here wishes it, let him be satisfied in that respect. If, however, at any time it is to entail large expense on the Treasury, if it is to result in sending a committee, at the public expense, on a sort of excursion into Mexico to make a waterhaul and return nothing to the Senate, I am not in favor of it.

Of course if the investigation made here by the committee, without expense, should develop something that indicated that some Senators had been corrupted, I would be willing then to spend any amount of money to carry it to the utmost limit. I am satisfied, however, that such investigation as can be made here and will be made will show in itself how empty this charge is; and I have no objection to that sort of investigation being held if it at all satisfies the wishes and judgment of any Senator here.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I wish to make a suggestion just in this connection.

This resolution has been offered and is before the Senate. It does not seem to me that it ought to be disposed of by having it laid on the table. As the Senator from Arkansas has pointed out—and I think that is quite a material and important point to make—this article, published in the Washington Post, a great daily newspaper of tremendous influence throughout the country, is unquestionably quoted by the press from one end of the country to the other, at least to some extent.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for just a moment?

Mr. FLETCHER. Certainly.

Mr. SMOOT. I really feel that the Senate has taken all the time it ought to take upon this question.

Mr. FLETCHER. I only want about 5 or 10 minutes.

Mr. SMOOT. Just a moment, and then perhaps the Senator will not want to say anything further upon it. The reason why I intended to ask that the resolution should be laid on the table was to show my utter contempt for a report like this being noticed by the Senate; but as long as there is one Senator who feels that it ought to be investigated, for his sake——

Mr. ROBINSON. Now, Mr. President——

Mr. SMOOT. Or for the Senate's sake, I certainly shall not insist upon taking that course.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator from Florida yield to me briefly?

Mr. FLETCHER. Certainly.

Mr. SMOOT. Therefore I shall not make the motion, and the resolution can go to the committee as far as I am concerned.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, in good humor, I do not quite appreciate the suggestions of the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from Utah in their last two statements. Upon my personal responsibility and official responsibility as a Senator I introduced this resolution. I have stated the reasons I think the Senate ought to take action concerning it. I make no apology to anyone for the action which I have taken or which I shall take concerning the matter, and I want Senators to do as I have done and am doing—stand upon their own responsibility. I prefer a vote now upon the motion which the Senator from Utah has indicated his purpose to make, but which, after debate, it appears he has not the courage to make.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator desires that, of course I shall do it. It was out of respect for the opinion of the Senator——

Mr. ROBINSON. Oh, I am not sensitive. If the Senate takes the view that it ought to take no notice of this charge, if it can afford to take that action, then let us vote on the Senator's motion to table the resolution.

Mr. SMOOT. All I wanted the Senator to know was that my suggestion was not because I had changed my mind in the least about the matter, but it was made out of the respect I have for the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON. I want to say further that if this investigation is to be made I want it to be a frank and full investigation, in order that it may justify public confidence in the report which the committee may make. I am not introducing the resolution or supporting it on the theory that it will be an entire whitewash. If the charge is unfounded, as I apprehend it is, I want the conclusion of the committee to that effect to be based upon such evidence that I can justify it and that others can justify it.

Mr. SMOOT. I simply want to say to the Senator—and I ask the pardon of the Senator from Florida for interrupting him—that, as far as I am concerned, if we are going to have an investigation, we ought to have a thorough one or it will be a perfect farce. There is not a cent of money appropriated by this resolution to secure any information at all, and I submit that nothing can come from this kind of an investigation. It will be a farce, pure and simple.

I wish to say that I would not have interrupted the Senator from Florida, but I thought, of course, I would hasten matters and pay due deference to the wishes of the Senators here by simply saying that I was not going to make the motion to lay the resolution on the table; but now that the Senator from Arkansas desires it, I shall make that motion as soon as the Senator from Florida concludes.

Mr. FLETCHER. I have no disposition to take up any unnecessary time. In fact, I have made no observations before on this question, and I desire to submit just a few remarks in connection with what has been said.

Some one has said, "Give me the right to prepare the headlines for the newspaper, and you may write the article in any way you see fit." There is not any question but that nine-tenths of the people of this country ordinarily do not get beyond the headlines in reading newspapers, and the headline plays a very important part, it seems to me, in this publication. The headline is:

Seventy-five thousand dollars paid United States Senators by Carranza to have troops quit Vera Cruz—

Then the very insignificant part of the headline appears—says report.

But the people throughout the country will read the headline and perhaps go no further. They will not learn that it is a purported cablegram from some irresponsible party connected with some irresponsible organization in some remote country to which we have not usual access; but the statement is made emphatically in this article, with such specification that it seems to me we can not ignore it, that the records in Mexico City show that there was sent to the agent in Washington of the Carranza interests down there $75,000 for extraordinary diplomatic expenses.

Let us assume—and the committee can assume—to begin with, without sending any special committee to Mexico, which is wholly unnecessary, that the records down there do show precisely what it is stated here they show; there is a party here in Washington, so the article says, by the name of Rafael Zubaran, chief of the Carranzista junta, who is said to have asked for this expenditure, to have called for this money, to have received the money, and to have disbursed it. It can not be a very expensive proposition to call Mr. Zubaran before the committee here and ascertain whether that is true or not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida will pause. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, under Rule VIII of the Senate, the resolution will go to the calendar; and unless other disposition is made of business, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the calendar under Rule VIII.

Mr. LODGE. The calendar under Rule VIII is in order. Regular order!

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The calendar is the regular order.

Mr. FLETCHER. If the regular order is called for, of course I take it, objection is made to discussing the resolution further.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It was imperative on the Chair when the hour of 2 o'clock arrived, to state what disposition was made of the resolution under the rules of the Senate.

THE CALENDAR.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The first bill on the calendar will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 1240) to establish the legislative bureau of the Library of Congress.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will go over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 41) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to sell or lease certain public lands to the Republic Coal Co., a corporation, was announced as the next business on the calendar.

Mr. GRONNA. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will go over.

The bill (S. 2242) making it unlawful for any Member of Congress to serve on or solicit funds for any political committee, club, or organization was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.

Mr. KERN. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 2 o'clock and 2 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, December 9, 1914, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, December 8, 1914.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou great Spirit, Heart of the universe, from which light and life and love are ever going out to Thy children, cleanse us from all unworthiness that we may receive abundantly and reflect that light, life, and love wheresoever we are called to act in the affairs of men; that we may be profitable servants, worthy of the trust reposed in us and stand approved in the light of Heaven and in the hearts of our fellow men; that our harvest may be rich in the fruits of righteousness after the similitude of Him who taught us the way and the truth and the life. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Tulley, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Senate resolution 493.

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with deep sensibility the announcement of the death of Hon. EDWIN A. MERRITT, Jr., late a Representative from the State of New York.

Resolved, That a committee of six Senators be appointed by the Vice President, to join the committee appointed on the part of the House of Representatives, to attend the funeral of the deceased at Potsdam, N. Y.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate a copy of these resolutions to the House of Representatives.

In compliance with the foregoing resolution, the Vice President had appointed as the committee on the part of the Senate under the second resolution Mr. ROOT, Mr. O'GORMAN, Mr. SHERMAN, Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey, Mr. DILLINGHAM, and Mr. SAULSBURY.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the following resolution:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the two Houses of Congress assemble in the Hall of the House of Representatives on Tuesday, the 8th day of December, 1914, at 12 o'clock and 30 minutes in the afternoon, for the purpose of receiving such communications as the President of the United States shall be pleased to make them.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE APPOINTED TO WAIT UPON THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, the committee appointed on the part of the House to wait upon the President and inform him that the House was organized and ready to receive any communication that he might desire to make to it have performed their duty, and the President directs them to report to the House that he desires to be present and deliver his message to Congress at the hour appointed by the House this morning.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

By unanimous consent, Mr. HAWLEY was granted leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of Amos Dahuff (H. R. 9157, 63d Cong.), no adverse report having been made thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. L'ENGLE, indefinitely, on account of illness.

To Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee, indefinitely, on account of illness.

To Mr. KONOP, for three weeks, on account of illness in his family.

To Mr. SELDOMRIDGE, until December 21, on account of illness in his family.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that these requests ought to date back to yesterday. They were on the Speaker's desk, but after the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] offered the resolution about his colleague the Chair did not feel disposed to break in on it.

REPORT OF THE CLERK OF THE HOUSE (H. DOC. NO. 1204).

The SPEAKER laid before the House the report of the Clerk of the House, which was referred to the Committee on Accounts and ordered printed.

ASSIGNMENT OF CLERKS TO COMMITTEES.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following resolution from the Committee on Accounts.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

House resolution 666.

Resolved, That clerks to committees of the House during the session, provided for by the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, be, and they are hereby, assigned for the present session of Congress to the following committees, to wit:

Committee on Education.
Committee on Mines and Mining.
Committee on Railways and Canals.
Committee on Reform in the Civil Service.
Committee on Alcoholic Liquor Traffic.
Committee on Invalid Pensions (assistant clerk).
Committee on the Judiciary (additional assistant clerk).
Committee on Enrolled Bills.
Committee on Disposition of Useless Executive Papers.

Mr. MANN. Is this the usual assignment?

Mr. LLOYD. It is the usual assignment—the same as the last session of Congress.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I also offer the following privileged resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri sends up another privileged resolution, which the Clerk will report.

House resolution 667.

Resolved, That the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Agriculture, the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice, the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Commerce, the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of the Interior, the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Labor, the Committee on Expenditures in the Navy Department, the Committee on Expenditures in the Post Office Department, the Committee on Expenditures in the State Department, the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department, the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department, and the Committee on Expenditures on Public Buildings each be allowed a clerk at the rate of $125 per month; that the Committee on Rules be allowed an assistant clerk at the rate of $100 per month; and that the Joint Select Committee on Disposition of Useless Executive Papers be allowed a messenger at the rate of $60 per month during the third session of the Sixty-third Congress, the salaries of said clerks, assistant clerk, and messenger to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, all these positions were provided for in the last session of Congress excepting one. We provide in this resolution for an assistant clerk to the Committee on Rules, in addition to the clerk which the committee now has, at a salary of $100 per month during the present session. That committee has an extraordinary amount of work, and on account of the Gardner resolution, the Hobson resolution, the woman's suffrage resolution, and numerous important matters before it they have been swamped with correspondence, and they insist that it is necessary to have additional help.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LLOYD. I will.

Mr. MANN. I take it that all of these matters will be disposed of at an early date. This session of Congress is likely to devote most of its time to the appropriation bills and not to reports from the Committee on Rules. Now, what is the necessity for giving the Committee on Rules, which is likely to have less to do in this session than last session, an extra clerk?

Mr. HENRY. If the gentleman will allow me, I desire to state that we needed an extra clerk last session, and frequently I paid the expense out of my own pocket, and even after we dispose of the Gardner resolution, the woman's suffrage amendment, and the Hobson national prohibition amendment, if we ever do, there will still be an abundance of work for the Committee on Rules to do. The force is not sufficient to do the ordinary work of that committee. If this is not done, I will have to employ additional clerical help for the Committee on Rules myself.

Mr. MANN. If I recall correctly, there was a long time at the last session when the Committee on Rules had no meeting at all for reasons of which I will not speak. Are those reasons likely to exist at this session?

Mr. HENRY. No; I think the Committee on Rules will meet very often during this short session.

Mr. MANN. My friend from Texas expects to be here at this session of Congress, I take it?

Mr. HENRY. I was here practically all of last session except when we were marking time.

Mr. MANN. Except when the gentleman was away.

Mr. LLOYD. Question, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

RECESS.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House take a recess for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the House stand in recess for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the House stood in recess.

JOINT SESSION OF THE SENATE AND HOUSE.

At 12 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m. the House was called to order by the Speaker.

The Doorkeeper announced the Vice President of the United States and the Members of the United States Senate.

The Members of the House rose.

The Senate, preceded by the Vice President and by their Secretary and Sergeant at Arms, entered the Chamber.

The Vice President took the Chair at the right of the Speaker and the Members of the Senate took the seats reserved for them.

The Speaker announced as the committee on the part of the House to wait upon the President Mr. UNDERWOOD of Alabama, Mr. FITZGERALD of New York, Mr. HAY of Virginia, Mr. MANN of Illinois, and Mr. MURDOCK of Kansas.

The Vice President announced as the committee on the part of the Senate Senators KERN of Indiana, MARTIN of Virginia, OVERMAN of North Carolina, GALLINGER of New Hampshire, and ROOT of New York.

At 12 o'clock and 28 minutes p. m. the President of the United States, escorted by the joint committee of Senators and Representatives, entered the Hall of the House, standing at the Clerk's desk, amid prolonged applause.

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen of the Senate and the House, I present to you the President of the United States. [Prolonged applause.]

ANNUAL ADDRESS OF THE PRESIDENT TO THE CONGRESS (H. DOC. NO. 1184).

The PRESIDENT. Mr. Speaker, Mr. Vice President, and gentlemen of the Congress, the session upon which you are now entering will be the closing session of the Sixty-third Congress, a Congress, I venture to say, which will long be remembered for the great body of thoughtful and constructive work which it has done, in loyal response to the thought and needs of the country. I should like in this address to review the notable record and try to make adequate assessment of it; but no doubt we stand too near the work that has been done and are ourselves too much part of it to play the rôle of historians toward it.

Our program of legislation with regard to the regulation of business is now virtually complete. It has been put forth, as we intended, as a whole, and leaves no conjecture as to what is to follow. The road at last lies clear and firm before business. It is a road which it can travel without fear or embarrassment. It is the road to ungrudged, unclouded success. In it every honest man, every man who believes that the public interest is part of his own interest, may walk with perfect confidence.

Moreover, our thoughts are now more of the future than of the past. While we have worked at our tasks of peace the circumstances of the whole age have been altered by war. What we have done for our own land and our own people we did with the best that was in us, whether of character or of intelligence, with sober enthusiasm and with a confidence in the principles upon which we were acting which sustained us at every step of the difficult undertaking; but it is done. It has passed from our hands. It is now an established part of the legislation of the country. Its usefulness, its effects, will disclose themselves in experience. What chiefly strikes us now, as we look about us during these closing days of a year which will be forever memorable in the history of the world, is that we face new tasks, have been facing them these six months, must face them in the months to come—face them without partisan feeling, like men who have forgotten everything but a common duty and the fact that we are representatives of a great people whose thought is not of us but of what America owes to herself and to all mankind in such circumstances as these upon which we look amazed and anxious.

War has interrupted the means of trade not only but also the processes of production. In Europe it is destroying men and resources wholesale and upon a scale unprecedented and appalling. There is reason to fear that the time is near, if it be not already at hand, when several of the countries of Europe will find it difficult to do for their people what they have hitherto been always easily able to do—many essential and fundamental things. At any rate, they will need our help and our manifold services as they have never needed them before; and we should be ready, more fit and ready than we have ever been.

It is of equal consequence that the nations whom Europe has usually supplied with innumerable articles of manufacture and commerce of which they are in constant need and without which their economic development halts and stands still can now get only a small part of what they formerly imported and eagerly look to us to supply their all but empty markets. This is particularly true of our own neighbors, the States, great and small, of Central and South America. Their lines of trade have hitherto run chiefly athwart the seas, not to our ports but to the ports of Great Britain and of the older Continent of Europe. I do not stop to inquire why, or to make any comment on probable causes. What interests us just now is not the explanation but the fact and our duty and opportunity in the presence of it. Here are markets which we must supply, and we must find the means of action. The United States, this great people for whom we speak and act, should be ready, as never before, to serve itself and to serve mankind; ready with its resources, its energies, its forces of production, and its means of distribution.

It is a very practical matter, a matter of ways and means. We have the resources, but are we fully ready to use them? And, if we can make ready what we have, have we the means at hand to distribute it? We are not fully ready; neither have we the means of distribution. We are willing, but we are not fully able. We have the wish to serve and to serve greatly, generously; but we are not prepared as we should be. We are not ready to mobilize our resources at once. We are not prepared to use them immediately and at their best, without delay and without waste.

To speak plainly, we have grossly erred in the way in which we have stunted and hindered the development of our merchant marine. [Applause.] And now, when we need ships, we have not got them. We have year after year debated, without end or conclusion, the best policy to pursue with regard to the use of the ores and forests and water powers of our national domain in the rich States of the West, when we should have acted; and they are still locked up. The key is still turned upon them, the door shut fast at which thousands of vigorous men, full of initiative, knock clamorously for admittance. The water power of our navigable streams outside the national domain also, even in the Eastern States, where we have worked and planned for generations, is still not used as it might be, because we will and we won't; because the laws we have made do not intelligently balance encouragement against restraint. We withhold by regulation.

I have come to ask you to remedy and correct these mistakes and omissions, even at this short session of a Congress which would certainly seem to have done all the work that could reasonably be expected of it. The time and the circumstances are extraordinary, and so must our efforts be also.

Fortunately, two great measures, finely conceived, the one to unlock, with proper safeguards, the resources of the national domain, the other to encourage the use of the navigable waters outside that domain for the generation of power, have already passed the House of Representatives and are ready for immediate consideration and action by the Senate. With the deepest earnestness I urge their prompt passage. In them both we turn our backs upon hesitation and makeshift and formulate a genuine policy of use and conservation, in the best sense of those terms. We owe the one measure not only to the people of that great western country for whose free and systematic development, as it seems to me, our legislation has done so little, but also to the people of the Nation as a whole; and we as clearly owe the other in fulfillment of our repeated promises that the water power of the country should in fact as well as in name be put at the disposal of great industries which can make economical and profitable use of it, the rights of the public being adequately guarded the while, and monopoly in the use prevented. To have begun such measures and not completed them would, indeed, mar the record of this great Congress very seriously. I hope and confidently believe that they will be completed.

And there is another great piece of legislation which awaits and should receive the sanction of the Senate: I mean the bill which gives a larger measure of self-government to the people of the Philippines. How better, in this time of anxious questioning and perplexed policy, could we show our confidence in the principles of liberty, as the source as well as the expression of life, how better could we demonstrate our own self-possession and steadfastness in the courses of justice and disinterestedness than by thus going calmly forward to fulfill our promises to a dependent people, who will look more anxiously than ever to see whether we have indeed the liberality, the unselfishness, the courage, the faith we have boasted and professed. I can not believe that the Senate will let this great measure of constructive justice await the action of another Congress. Its passage would nobly crown the record of these two years of memorable labor.

But I think that you will agree with me that this does not complete the toll of our duty. How are we to carry our goods to the empty markets of which I have spoken if we have not the ships? How are we to build up a great trade if we have not the certain and constant means of transportation upon which all profitable and useful commerce depends? And how are we to get the ships if we wait for the trade to develop without them? To correct the many mistakes by which we have discouraged and all but destroyed the merchant marine of the country, to retrace the steps by which we have, it seems almost deliberately, withdrawn our flag from the seas, except where, here and there, a ship of war is bidden carry it or some wandering yacht displays it, would take a long time and involve many detailed items of legislation, and the trade which we ought immediately to handle would disappear or find other channels while we debated the items.

The case is not unlike that which confronted us when our own continent was to be opened up to settlement and industry, and we needed long lines of railway, extended means of transportation prepared beforehand, if development was not to lag intolerably and wait interminably. We lavishly subsidized the building of transcontinental railroads. We look back upon that with regret now, because the subsidies led to many scandals of which we are ashamed; but we know that the railroads had to be built, and if we had it to do over again we should, of course, build them, but in another way. Therefore I propose another way of providing the means of transportation, which must needs precede, not tardily follow, the development of our trade with our neighbor States of America. It may seem a reversal of the natural order of things, but it is true, that the routes of trade must be actually opened—by many ships and regular sailings and moderate charges—before streams of merchandise will flow freely and profitably through them.

Hence the pending shipping bill, discussed at the last session but as yet passed by neither House. In my judgment such legislation is imperatively needed and can not wisely be postponed. [Applause.] The Government must open these gates of trade and open them wide; open them before it is altogether profitable to open them, or altogether reasonable to ask private capital to open them at a venture. It is not a question of the Government monopolizing the field. It should take action to make it certain that transportation at reasonable rates will be promptly provided, even where the carriage is not at first profitable; and then, when the carriage has become sufficiently profitable to attract and engage private capital, and engage it in abundance, the Government ought to withdraw. I very earnestly hope that the Congress will be of this opinion and that both Houses will adopt this exceedingly important bill.

The great subject of rural credits still remains to be dealt with, and it is a matter of deep regret that the difficulties of the subject have seemed to render it impossible to complete a bill for passage at this session. But it can not be perfected yet, and therefore there are no other constructive measures the necessity for which I will at this time call your attention to; but I would be negligent of a very manifest duty were I not to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the proposed convention for safety at sea awaits its confirmation and that the limit fixed in the convention itself for its acceptance is the last day of the present month. The conference in which the convention originated was called by the United States; the representatives of the United States played a very influential part indeed in framing the provisions of the proposed convention; and those provisions are in themselves for the most part admirable. It would hardly be consistent with the part we have played in the whole matter to let it drop and go by the board as if forgotten and neglected. It was ratified in May last by the German Government and in August by the Parliament of Great Britain. It marks a most hopeful and decided advance in international civilization. We should show our earnest good faith in a great matter by adding our own acceptance of it.

There is another matter of which I must make special mention, if I am to discharge my conscience, lest it should escape your attention. It may seem a very small thing. It affects only a single item of appropriation. But many lives and many great enterprises hang upon it. It is the matter of making adequate provision for the survey and charting of our coasts. It is immediately pressing and exigent in connection with the immense coast line of Alaska, a coast line greater than that of the United States themselves, though it is also very important indeed with regard to the older coasts of the continent. We can not use our great Alaskan domain, ships will not ply thither, if those coasts and their many hidden dangers are not thoroughly surveyed and charted. The work is incomplete at almost every point. Ships and lives have been lost in threading what were supposed to be well-known main channels. We have not provided adequate vessels or adequate machinery for the survey and charting. We have used old vessels that were not big enough or strong enough and which were so nearly unseaworthy that our inspectors would not have allowed private owners to send them to sea. This is a matter which, as I have said, seems small, but is in reality very great. Its importance has only to be looked into to be appreciated.

Before I close may I say a few words upon two topics, much discussed out of doors, upon which it is highly important that our judgments should be clear, definite, and steadfast?

One of these is economy in Government expenditures. The duty of economy is not debatable. It is manifest and imperative. In the appropriations we pass we are spending the money of the great people whose servants we are—not our own. We are trustees and responsible stewards in the spending. The only thing debatable and upon which we should be careful to make our thought and purpose clear is the kind of economy demanded of us. I assert with the greatest confidence that the people of the United States are not jealous of the amount their Government costs if they are sure that they get what they need and desire for the outlay, that the money is being spent for objects of which they approve, and that it is being applied with good business sense and management.

Governments grow piecemeal, both in their tasks and in the means by which those tasks are to be performed; and very few Governments are organized, I venture to say, as wise and experienced business men would organize them if they had a clean sheet of paper to write upon. Certainly the Government of the United States is not. I think that it is generally agreed that there should be a systematic reorganization and reassembling of its parts so as to secure greater efficiency and effect considerable savings in expense. But the amount of money saved in that way would, I believe, though no doubt considerable in itself, running, it may be, into the millions, be relatively small—small, I mean, in proportion to the total necessary outlays of the Government. It would be thoroughly worth effecting, as every saving would, great or small. Our duty is not altered by the scale of the saving. But my point is that the people of the United States do not wish to curtail the activities of the Government; they wish, rather, to enlarge them; and with every enlargement, with the mere growth, indeed, of the country itself, there must come, of course, the inevitable increase of expense. The sort of economy we ought to practice may be effected, and ought to be effected, by a careful study and assessment of the tasks to be performed; and the money spent ought to be made to yield the best possible returns in efficiency and achievement. And, like good stewards, we should so account for every dollar of our appropriations as to make it perfectly evident what it was spent for and in what way it was spent.

It is not expenditure but extravagance that we should fear being criticized for; not paying for the legitimate enterprises and undertakings of a great Government whose people command what it should do, but adding what will benefit only a few or pouring money out for what need not have been undertaken at all or might have been postponed or better and more economically conceived and carried out. The Nation is not niggardly; it is very generous. It will chide us only if we forget for whom we pay money out and whose money it is we pay.

These are large and generous standards, but they are not very difficult of application to particular cases.

The other topic I shall take leave to mention goes deeper into the principles of our national life and policy. It is the subject of national defense.

It can not be discussed without first answering some very searching questions. It is said in some quarters that we are not prepared for war. What is meant by being prepared? Is it meant that we are not ready upon brief notice to put a nation in the field—a nation of men trained to arms? Of course we are not ready to do that; and we never shall be [applause] in time of peace so long as we retain our present political principles and institutions. And what is it that it is suggested we should be prepared to do? To defend ourselves against attack? We have always found means to do that, and shall find them whenever it is necessary without calling our people away from their necessary tasks to render compulsory military service in time of peace. [Applause.]

Allow me to speak with great plainness and directness upon this great matter and to avow my convictions with deep earnestness. I have tried to know what America is, what her people think, what they are, what they most cherish and hold dear. I hope that some of their finer passions are in my own heart—some of the great conceptions and desires which gave birth to this Government and which have made the voice of this people a voice of peace and hope and liberty among the peoples of the world, and that, speaking my own thoughts, I shall, at least in part, speak theirs also, however faintly and inadequately, upon this vital matter.

We are at peace with all the world. No one who speaks counsel based on fact or drawn from a just and candid interpretation of realities can say that there is any reason to fear that from any quarter our independence or the integrity of our territory is threatened. Dread of the power of any other nation we are incapable of. [Applause.] We are not jealous of rivalry in the fields of commerce or of any other peaceful achievement. We mean to live our own lives as we will; but we mean also to let live. [Applause.] We are, indeed, a true friend to all the nations of the world, because we threaten none, covet the possessions of none, desire the overthrow of none. Our friendship can be accepted and is accepted without reservation, because it is offered in a spirit and for a purpose which no one need ever question or suspect. [Applause.] Therein lies our greatness. We are champions of peace and of concord. [Applause.] And we should be very jealous of this distinction which we have sought to earn. Just now we should be particularly jealous of it, because it is our dearest present hope that this character and reputation may presently, in God's providence, bring us an opportunity such as has seldom been vouchsafed any nation, the opportunity to counsel and obtain peace in the world [applause] and reconciliation and a healing settlement of many a matter that has cooled and interrupted the friendship of nations. This is the time above all others when we should wish and resolve to keep our strength by self-possession, our influence by preserving our ancient principles of action.

From the first we have had a clear and settled policy with regard to military establishments. We never have had, and while we retain our present principles and ideals we never shall have, a large standing Army. [Prolonged applause.] If asked, Are you ready to defend yourselves? We reply, Most assuredly, to the utmost. And yet we shall not turn America into a military camp. We will not ask our young men to spend the best years of their lives making soldiers of themselves. There is another sort of energy in us. It will know how to declare itself and make itself effective should occasion arise. And especially when half the world is on fire we shall be careful to make our moral insurance against the spread of the conflagration very definite and certain and adequate indeed. [Applause.]

Let us remind ourselves, therefore, of the only thing we can do or will do. We must depend in every time of national peril, in the future as in the past, not upon a standing army, nor yet upon a reserve army, but upon a citizenry trained and accustomed to arms. It will be right enough, right American policy, based upon our accustomed principles and practices, to provide a system by which every citizen who will volunteer for the training may be made familiar with the use of modern arms [applause], the rudiments of drill and maneuver, and the maintenance and sanitation of camps. We should encourage such training and make it a means of discipline which our young men will learn to value. It is right that we should provide it not only, but that we should make it as attractive as possible, and so induce our young men to undergo it at such times as they can command a little freedom and can seek the physical development they need, for mere health's sake, if for nothing else. Every means by which such things can be stimulated is legitimate, and such a method smacks of true American ideas. It is right, too, that the National Guard of the States should be developed and strengthened by every means which is not inconsistent with our obligations to our own people or with the established policy of our Government. And this, also, not because the time or occasion specially calls for such measures, but because it should be our constant policy to make these provisions for our national peace and safety.

More than this carries with it a reversal of the whole history and character of our polity. More than this, proposed at this time, permit me to say, would mean merely that we had lost our self-possession, that we had been thrown off our balance by a war with which we have nothing to do, whose causes can not touch us, whose very existence affords us opportunities of friendship and disinterested service which should make us ashamed of any thought of hostility or fearful preparation for trouble. [Applause.] This is assuredly the opportunity for which a people and a Government like ours were raised up, the opportunity not only to speak but actually to embody and exemplify the counsels of peace and amity and lasting concord which is based on justice and fair and generous dealing.

A powerful navy we have always regarded as our proper and natural means of defense [applause]; and it has always been of defense that we have thought, never of aggression or of conquest. But who shall tell us what sort of navy to build? We shall take leave to be strong upon the seas, in the future as in the past; and there will be no thought of offense or of provocation in that. Our ships are our natural bulwarks. When will the experts tell us just what kind we should construct—and when will they be right for ten years together [laughter and applause], if the relative efficiency of craft of different kinds and uses continues to change as we have seen it change under our very eyes in these last few months?

But I turn away from the subject. It is not new. There is no new need to discuss it. We shall not alter our attitude toward it because some amongst us are nervous and excited. [Laughter and applause.] We shall easily and sensibly agree upon a policy of defense. The question has not changed its aspects because the times are not normal. Our policy will not be for an occasion. It will be conceived as a permanent and settled thing, which we will pursue at all seasons, without haste and after a fashion perfectly consistent with the peace of the world, the abiding friendship of states, and the unhampered freedom of all with whom we deal. Let there be no misconception. The country has been misinformed. We have not been negligent of national defense. We are not unmindful of the great responsibility resting upon us. We shall learn and profit by the lesson of every experience and every new circumstance; and what is needed will be adequately done.

I close, as I began, by reminding you of the great tasks and duties of peace which challenge our best powers and invite us to build what will last, the tasks to which we can address ourselves now and at all times with free-hearted zest and with all the finest gifts of constructive wisdom we possess. To develop our life and our resources; to supply our own people, and the people of the world as their need arises, from the abundant plenty of our fields and our marts of trade; to enrich the commerce of our own States and of the world with the products of our mines, our farms, and our factories, with the creations of our thought and the fruits of our character—this is what will hold our attention and our enthusiasm steadily, now and in the years to come, as we strive to show in our life as a nation what liberty and the inspirations of an emancipated spirit may do for men and for societies, for individuals, for states, and for mankind. [Prolonged applause.]

At 1 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m. the President and his Cabinet retired from the Hall of the House.

At 1 o'clock and 11 minutes p. m. the Vice President and Members of the Senate returned to their Chamber.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the President's message be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means for distribution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] moves that the President's message be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

COTTON AND TOBACCO.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY], pending as unfinished business, to recommit with instructions. The Clerk will first report the title of the bill and then the motion to recommit.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 6398) to amend section 1 of an act approved May 30, 1908, entitled "An act to amend the national banking laws."

Mr. HENRY moved to recommit the bill S. 6398 to the Committee on Banking and Currency, with instructions to report the same with the following amendments, to wit:

"SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Treasury shall deposit in national banking associations and in State banks situated in States producing cotton or tobacco, or both, the sum of $250,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this act. The said Secretary shall make such deposits under the terms of this act and under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by him to carry out this act. The deposits herein directed to be made shall be apportioned among the several States in accordance with the number of bales of cotton or pounds of tobacco produced therein during the year 1913, as ascertained by the Department of Agriculture. The Secretary of the Treasury, in lieu of the securities he is now authorized or required by law to exact of the banks in which the funds of the United States are deposited, is authorized and hereby directed to accept as security for the deposits directed to be made in this act cotton-warehouse and tobacco-warehouse receipts, where the cotton or tobacco thereby represented has been fully insured, at a valuation that represents the fair market value of the cotton or tobacco covered by such receipts. The deposits herein directed to be made shall be made only on the condition that the banks accepting such deposits will loan the same, under reasonable terms and conditions, at a rate of interest not to exceed 4 per cent per annum, to the producers of cotton or tobacco, or the owners of lands upon which same was produced during the year 1914, and the said Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to make all necessary rules and regulations concerning the terms and conditions under which these deposits shall be loaned by the banks that accept the same.

"SEC. 4. That the Secretary of the Treasury shall, in his discretion, either immediately cause to be prepared United States notes to the extent of $250,000,000, to be used for the purpose of making the deposits in compliance with this act, which said notes shall have all the legal qualities of the United States notes now outstanding, and shall be of such denominations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, and said notes shall bear interest at the rate of 2 per cent per annum from the date of their issuance and shall be payable in gold coin of the United States or its equivalent on January 1, 1916; or he may sell not exceeding $240,000,000 of Panama Canal bonds, heretofore authorized by law, at a rate of interest not exceeding 4 per cent per annum, and the act or acts heretofore passed authorizing the disposition of said bonds are hereby amended so as fully to authorize the disposition and use of such bonds as herein prescribed; or, in his discretion, the Secretary of the Treasury may use both the proceeds of the bonds and the notes in order to carry out the purposes of this act, not to exceed in the aggregate $250,000,000.

"SEC. 5. That the Secretary of the Treasury shall not require the repayment of any deposit made under the provisions of this act prior to December 31, 1915.

"SEC. 6. That when the deposits herein authorized are called in by the Secretary of the Treasury the same shall be and become a part of a special fund, to be kept and held separate and apart from the general funds of the Government, for the redemption and retirement at maturity of the Panama Canal bonds in such cases and to such extent as the proceeds of such bonds have been used to make the deposits herein provided."

During the reading of the motion to recommit,

Mr. BARTLETT rose and the following colloquy occurred:

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. BARTLETT. To make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BARTLETT. Has the previous question been ordered on this motion, or is it subject to debate?

The SPEAKER. It is not subject to debate if the previous question is ordered on it.

Mr. BARTLETT. I asked the question if the previous question had been ordered on the motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman's question whether the previous question had been ordered?

Mr. BARTLETT. I desired to know whether the previous question on the motion to recommit had been ordered.

The SPEAKER. The recollection of the Chair is that by an order of the House certain bills, including this one, were made a special order.

Mr. MANN. There was a vote on the previous question.

Mr. HENRY. The previous question was ordered by a vote on this motion.

Mr. BARTLETT. Then it is not subject to debate at this time.

The SPEAKER. That is true.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Texas to recommit, which has just been read.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HENRY) there were—ayes 51, noes 116.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that no quorum is present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order that no quorum is present, and evidently there is not a quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 80, nays 237, answered "present" 2, not voting 110, as follows:

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

The doors were opened.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Banking and Currency without instructions. I also ask that I may make a statement that will consume about two minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia makes two requests. One is, he asks unanimous consent that this bill be recommitted to the Committee on Banking and Currency without instructions, and, secondly, that he be allowed to make a short statement. Is there objection?

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, in regard to the first request, which is to recommit the bill S. 6398, I wish to say that this bill was considered to be of great importance at the last session just as Congress was adjourning, and it seems to me that it is of just as much importance now, and therefore I shall object, and I call for the regular order.

Mr. GLASS. Does the gentleman from Texas object to my making a short statement?

Mr. HENRY. Not after we have taken a vote, but I do object now.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to make a statement not to exceed two minutes.

Mr. HENRY. I shall object at present.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. Has the bill been read a third time?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I think the Clerk read the title of the bill before he read the motion to recommit.

Mr. MANN. He read the title of the bill, but the motion to recommit comes before the third reading.

The SPEAKER. The motion to recommit comes between the vote to engross and read a third time and the third reading. The Clerk will read the bill a third time.

The bill was read a third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HENRY) there were—ayes 3, noes 86.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, this is a very important bill, and I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

CORRECTION OF THE RECORD.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I arise for the purpose of making a statement to correct the RECORD of October 8, 1914, page 16344, from which it appears that I was paired against the Clayton antitrust bill with Representative PETER G. GERRY, of Rhode Island. The fact is I was paired with Congressman GERRY in favor of the Clayton bill, and he against it, which clearly appears from the written request, signed by both Congressman GERRY and myself, and filed with the pair clerk of the House on October 6, 1914, that I now hold in my hand.

I have been assured by the Clerk of the House that the permanent RECORD will be corrected in accordance with the facts I have stated.

I make this statement merely for the purpose of showing why the RECORD was corrected as well as the House Journal.

Mr. MANN. The pairs do not appear in the House Journal.

The SPEAKER. They appear in the RECORD.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. I understand that the permanent RECORD will be corrected.

The SPEAKER The statement that the gentleman from Minnesota has just made will appear in the RECORD, but will not appear in the Journal.

AMENDING SECTIONS 11 AND 16 OF THE FEDERAL RESERVE ACT.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill (S. 6505), with amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 6505) to amend sections 11 and 16 of an act to provide for the establishment of Federal reserve banks, etc., approved December 23, 1913, and commonly known as the Federal reserve act.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Illinois rise?

Mr. MANN. I think the bill has been disposed of, except as to the final vote or a motion for a third reading. This bill was acted upon by the House prior to action upon the other bill; that is, final action.

The SPEAKER. Well, this bill has not been disposed of by the House.

Mr. MANN. No; it is pending, as I understand, on going to the third reading, unless I am mistaken. The bill was adopted by the House; I do not know whether the amendments——

The SPEAKER. It was adopted by the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. MANN. The amendments may not have been disposed of.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk says that the amendments——

Mr. GLASS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GLASS. At what time would it be in order for me to make a motion to recommit this bill?

The SPEAKER. After the vote for the engrossment and third reading and before the third reading is the time to make the motion. What the Chair was trying to find out was what this rule means.

Mr. GLASS. My understanding is the amendments have been already agreed to.

The SPEAKER. They were acted on in the House as in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. The rule says:

At the conclusion of the debate on all said bills each bill with amendments thereto shall be voted upon separately and the previous question shall be considered as separately ordered on each bill with the amendments to final passage without intervening motion, except one motion to recommit.

The Chair is inclined to think that the motion is on the engrossment and third reading.

Mr. MANN. I take it from the reading of the rule that the amendments have not been disposed of.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them in gross.

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. GLASS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to move to recommit this bill to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer an amendment to the motion to recommit.

Mr. GLASS. And I desire to move the previous question on the motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman did not do it.

Mr. WINGO. My amendment is to recommit the bill to the Committee on Banking and Currency with instructions to report it back immediately with an amendment striking out all that part of the bill——

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman send up his amendment?

Mr. WINGO (continuing). All that part of the bill after line 2, page 1, down to and including line 5, page 2.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk had better reduce that to writing. Will the gentleman from Arkansas repeat that slowly so the Clerk can reduce it to writing?

Mr. WINGO. Report the bill back with an amendment striking out all that part of the bill after line 2, on page 1, down to and including line 5, on page 2. In other words, strike out all that part of the bill with reference to reserves and leave that part with refefence to clearances.

Mr. GLASS. And on that motion I demand the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia moves the previous question.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer an amendment to or a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arkansas.

The SPEAKER. The Chair knows, but the gentleman from Virginia was recognized first.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, I was speaking out in meeting first, but unfortunately I did not catch the Speaker's eye.

The SPEAKER. There is a good deal of uproar and it is hard to catch the ear or eye either. The question is on the motion for the previous question on the motion to recommit.

The question was taken, and the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arkansas to the motion of the gentleman from Virginia to recommit.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. WINGO. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 19, noes 67.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently there is not. The Doorkeeper will lock the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 64, nays 207, answered "present" 1, not voting 157, as follows:

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the following requests for leaves of absence, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BEALL of Texas requests leave of absence until January 1, 1915.
Mr. HART requests leave of absence indefinitely, on account of important business.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, these requests will be granted.

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I have no doubt that these requests may be proper; but four times this afternoon, on the day when the President came before the House and addressed it, and there was a very large membership, we have had a roll call because there was lacking a quorum when the vote was taken. How far we ought to go in excusing Members who are not here I do not know, but if there is any intention of this House not to sit here all next summer we will have to have fewer points of no quorum and roll calls on account of it. That side of the House is responsible for it. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to these requests?

There was no objection.

AMENDMENT TO THE FEDERAL RESERVE ACT.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 15038) proposing an amendment to the Federal reserve act relative to acceptances, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 13, paragraphs 3, 4, and 5, of the act approved December 23, 1913, known as the Federal reserve act, be amended and reenacted so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 13. That any Federal reserve bank may discount acceptances which are based on the importation or exportation of goods and which have a maturity at time of discount of not more than three months and indorsed by at least one member bank. The amount of acceptances so discounted shall at no time exceed one-half the paid-up capital stock and surplus of the bank for which the rediscounts are made, except by authority of the Federal Reserve Board, and under such regulations as said board may prescribe.

"The aggregate of such notes and bills bearing the signature of indorsement of any one person, company, firm, or corporation rediscounted for any one bank shall at no time exceed 10 per cent of the unimpaired capital and surplus of said bank, but this restriction shall not apply to the discount of bills of exchange drawn in good faith against actually existing values.

"Any member bank may accept drafts or bills of exchange drawn upon it and growing out of transactions involving the importation or exportation of goods having not more than six months' sight to run, but no bank shall accept such bills to an amount equal at any time in the aggregate to more than one-half of its paid-up capital stock and surplus, except by authority of the Federal Reserve Board, under such regulations as said board may prescribe."

With the following committee amendments:

On page 1, line 12, after the word "paid-up," insert the words "and unimpaired"; on page 2, line 1, strike out the word "and"; in line 2, after the word "such," insert the word "general"; in line 15, after the word "paid-up," insert the words "and unimpaired"; and in line 17, after the word "such," insert the word "general."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which has just been read. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. Speaker, I can explain the bill in a word. Under the Federal reserve act banks engaged in financing the exportation and importation of goods are restricted in the volume of their operations to an aggregate amount not exceeding one-half of their paid-up capital stock and surplus. The organization committee of the Federal reserve system, in going over the country getting information preliminary to the inauguration of the new system, found that there were a great many large acceptance houses—State banks and trust companies—throughout the country that had built up an extensive business in financing exportations of American products. These large banks and trust companies in various parts of the country are anxious to become members of the Federal reserve system; but owing to this restriction have not and can not become members because it is not to their interest to do so. Some of these houses do an immense amount of business in financing the exportation of American products, and this simple amendment is designed to facilitate the financing of American exportations. The bill has been unanimously reported from the Banking and Currency Committee of the House, and I have reason to believe that there is no objection to it from any quarter.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them in gross.

There was no demand for a separate vote, and the amendments were agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman from Virginia yield?

Mr. GLASS. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. I notice what I think is an error in line 7, page 1, where the words "section 13" occur. I think that ought to go out. It is very plain that this is not the beginning of the section. This is to amend paragraphs 3, 4, and 5 of section 13. Of course, the words "section 13" come at the beginning of the section and ought not to be repeated in the middle of the section.

Mr. GLASS. I think that is true. And I move to amend by striking out those words.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 7, page 1, strike out the words "section 13."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. GLASS, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

RAILWAY MAIL PAY AND SECOND-CLASS MAIL MATTER (H. DOC. NO. 1257).

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to present a report of the Joint Committee on Postage on Second-class Mail Matter and Compensation for the Transportation of Mail.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to present a report of the Joint Committee on Postage on Second-class Mail and Compensation for the Transportation of Mail. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Preliminary report of the Joint Committee on Postage on Second-class Mail Matter and Compensation for the Transportation of Mail.

The SPEAKER. The report will be referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads and ordered printed.

THE PRINTING LAWS.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD three proposed amendments to section 85 of the printing bill, which will come up for consideration to-morrow. It has to do with the proposed changes in the law relative to printing Government envelopes. There have been many inquiries of the committee as to the nature of the amendments that may be offered. The committee has decided to submit three amendments for consideration by the committee to-morrow, and I ask unanimous consent to have them printed in the RECORD so that they may be readily found.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD three proposed amendments to the printing bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The amendments are as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BARNHART: Page 124, line 19, after the word "General," insert "with the approval of a board consisting of the Postmaster General, the Secretary of Labor, and the Public Printer."

Page 125, line 4, after the word "Provided," insert "That from and after the 30th day of June, 1915, it shall be unlawful for the Post Office Department, or any officer, head of bureau, or chief of division thereof, to print or have printed, or sell or offer to sell any stamped envelope bearing upon it a printed direction giving the name of any individual, firm, or company, or any number, or number of any post-office-box, drawer, or any street number, or the name of any building in which it shall be returned if uncalled for or undelivered; but this provision shall not apply to those envelopes printed with a return card left blank as to name, address, box, drawer, street number, or building, and which only give the name of the town or city, with the State, District, or Territory: Provided further."

Page 125, line 13, after the word "heretofore," insert:

"Provided further, That whenever the Government Printing Office shall be equipped to manufacture and print envelopes as provided for in this section at as low a cost as the Government may then be paying for envelopes made or printed elsewhere, such work shall thereafter be done at the Government Printing Office; but this provision shall not in any way interfere with or prevent the carrying out of any contract then existing relative to the manufacture and printing of envelopes."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, under the terms of the printing bill, if I recall correctly, if the bill were a law, it would be impossible to print this very thing in the RECORD. However, I shall not object. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARNHART. Oh, the gentleman is mistaken about that.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 19422) making appropriations for the expenses of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916. Pending that motion, I would like to see if I can reach some agreement with the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] as to the time to be used in general debate.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Speaker, I have had requests on this side for two hours and a half, and there are one or two others who, I think, would like to use a little time. I therefore suggest that we have about six hours of general debate, three hours on a side.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I have no disposition to limit the time unnecessarily, but it seems to me that that is a little bit long for general debate upon this bill, particularly in view of the fact that this is at the beginning of the session, and that we have just had an election.

Mr. MANN. My recollection is that when we were in the majority after an election, and remained in the majority, the other side of the House wanted to debate for many hours to explain why it had not succeeded.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I think it would take a great many hours for that side of the House to explain why it did not succeed in the last election, but there will be other appropriation bills, and in view of the fact that there are 12 other appropriation bills to come into the House I will ask the gentleman if we can not agree on two hours on a side? The gentleman can cut down the time that he has agreed to yield, and those gentlemen who desire it can obtain time on some other bill.

Mr. DAVIS. I have two requests that will take about all of the 2 hours—one of an hour and another of 45 minutes.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Perhaps the gentleman might get the gentleman who wants the full hour to cut his time down to 45 minutes.

Mr. DAVIS. The gentleman who desires an hour is really clamoring for more time. I have cut him down to an hour and the other I have cut down to 45 minutes.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. How much time can the gentleman use this afternoon?

Mr. DAVIS. I think we could use 45 minutes this afternoon in one speech.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. The gentleman is not going to insist upon six hours—three hours on a side?

Mr. DAVIS. Suppose we insist upon three hours upon this side, and then the gentleman's side can agree to use less than three hours?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. This side does not care to make an arrangement of that sort. I would be entirely satisfied with an hour and a half on this side if the gentlemen on that side will also accept an hour and a half.

Mr. DAVIS. The gentleman forgets that there are two parties on this side and only one, apparently, on the other.

Mr. MANN. I think it is fair to say to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. PAGE] that the time asked for is extended somewhat because the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] expects to address the House on Thursday, and everyone will recognize, under the circumstances, the propriety of his having time allotted to him.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I suggest to the gentleman from Minnesota that we compromise on five hours—two and a half hours on a side.

Mr. MANN. Make it two and three.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Oh, no; two and a half on a side, the time to be controlled by the gentleman from Minnesota and by myself.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Speaker, I will consent to that.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, then I couple with my motion a request that the time for general debate be limited to five hours, two hours and a half to be controlled by the gentleman from Minnesota and two hours and a half by myself.

Mr. DAVIS. However, that is upon this condition, that this side will go to the firing line but once this afternoon.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. That is all right. I accept that.

Mr. DAVIS. And after that the gentleman will move that the committee rise?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Yes; that is agreeable.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider the District of Columbia appropriation bill, and, pending that, asks unanimous consent that the time for general debate be limited to five hours, two and a half hours to be controlled by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] and two hours and a half by himself. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the District of Columbia appropriation bill, with Mr. GARNER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 19422, the title of which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 19422) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and for other purposes.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND].

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, the discussion of a bill relating to city affairs brings to our minds the question of the freedom of elections in the great cities of our country. Inasmuch as legislatures in all the States will be dealing with reform in the election laws during the coming winter it seems proper at this time to give some consideration to this very basic principle in American political life. The danger in politics exists in the congested centers—the cities. However much we may wish to do so, it is extremely difficult to secure absolute equality and freedom of suffrage in the cities. The larger the cities grow the more difficult this problem becomes, and they are growing larger each decade. To-day nearly 50 per cent of the population of this Nation is urban, and this condition is increasing rather than decreasing. In the cities special safeguards must be thrown around the exercise of the suffrage in order to secure anything like an expression of popular opinion.

In the last few years we have come to a new era representing the aspirations and hopes of Democracy; an era of direct action by the people upon the candidates for office and upon propositions of a legislative character. Having undertaken to submit these directly to the people, we owe it to them to safeguard the expression of their opinion so that the system may be safe and may result in a fair determination of the result. No man in or out of public life will disagree with the axiomatic statement that every man is entitled to one vote, and no man is entitled to more than one vote, and if under any system any man or set of men have or claim to have more than one vote apiece, there is something wrong with the system. There is scarcely a great city in the land where there is not some man or set of men who claim to have practically the controlling vote in any political party that may be named. The question is, How does this arise?

In my State of Missouri a few years ago we adopted a primary election law, a law with which I am in entire sympathy. I believe it was the greatest step in advance that has been taken for many, many years. It was an improvement over the convention system. It was possible to control the views of delegates to conventions, and the expenses connected with it and methods by which the delegates were chosen were such that they went into the convention practically pledged to this, that, or the other candidate for some office on the ticket. The ticket was eventually made up by a system of trading and logrolling by which no one man on the ticket could feel the ticket itself was the expression of the party's will. No one man, whatever office he may have run for, was big enough politically or personally to dominate the ticket which ran with him. A skillful trader with a mere handful of votes in the convention might easily put himself or his favorite on the ticket by a careful manipulation of a small minority of the votes. I believe in the primary system. I believe that the primary system is a vast improvement over the old convention system. That primary system has been in operation now long enough to reveal some of its weaknesses and dangers, but the fact that there are weaknesses and dangers in it does not militate against the fact that it is a vast improvement over the old convention system.

The convention system lent itself to the worst form of political manipulation. It lent itself to every undiscoverable form of corruption and manipulation which, thank heaven, the primary system does not. In the country districts or in any district where voters are reasonably well known to each other the primary system may work admirably, and yet it has suffered great criticism in the cities of the land. The reason is that no sufficient safeguards have been formed as are required for a system of that kind.

Much criticism has been leveled at the primary system. It is denounced as a failure; it is said that the so-called "bosses," with their massed and organized political strength, can control the primary as easily as they controlled the convention system, and that no candidate, however worthy, can be nominated without their support. Let us see how much of this is true, and why. Do not let us abandon the primary unless it is hopelessly defective. Let us examine it, not in a spirit of hostility but of helpfulness. The greatest question before the people of Missouri to-day is the freedom and purity of elections. The legislature must deal with it with promptness and courage. It lies at the base of all reforms. It is the lifeblood of free government.

In great cities like Kansas City and St. Louis there are wards filled with hotels and lodging houses of various kinds. Often from 50 to 200 voters are registered from a single building.

Under our election system in Missouri, a registration is made in the middle of March for the city election which takes place on the first Tuesday of April. Twenty days before the city election a registration is made. At that time in the lower wards of St. Louis and Kansas City there are hundreds and thousands of voters, the best of whom are construction-gang operators and unskilled laborers. During the working season of the year they are engaged in works on the railroads and on the construction work of the great West. They come into the cities during the winter; they remain long enough to register and possibly to vote at the spring election, and then they go away; and yet the city is their only home, and is possibly their proper place for voting. There is no additional registration between that and the first Tuesday in August, when the primaries are held to nominate the candidates for office. It is not extravagant to say that there is precinct after precinct in those great cities where not 15 per cent of the men who were there in March and registered for the city election are there in August and able to cast their vote in the primaries. The best of those men are out "on the job." Who remains? The men who are actually workingmen and good citizens and entitled to vote are away from the city a thousand miles earning their wages as unskilled laborers, and their names are on the election books, and, with hardly a single, solitary exception, they are voted at the August primary.

Mr. IGOE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. IGOE. The gentleman may speak for Kansas City, and I do not want to get into any controversy as to Kansas City; but I would like to remind the gentleman that under the law of Missouri, before the August primary, there is a revision of the primary lists, and, so far as the city of St. Louis is concerned, the judges and clerks of election revise those lists, and every name on the registration books is canvassed before the August primary; and, while there is no new registration, the names on the list are canvassed and those that have moved away must, under the law, be notified and the name stricken from the lists.

Mr. BORLAND. Now, let me say in reply to my colleague that he possibly has not looked into this matter with the same care that I have, because I have in my possession a list of names in the city of St. Louis where registered letters were sent to the voters whose name were on the registration lists and whose names were actually voted, and yet were returned by the post office as dead or removed from the city of St. Louis. There were 533 of these in 15 precincts of a single ward.

Mr. IGOE. Will the gentleman yield to me a moment?

Mr. BORLAND. I realize what the law of Missouri is, and if my colleague will bear with me I will tell him where the defect exists.

Mr. IGOE. Am I correct in saying that the law provides for a revision of registration before the primary day?

Mr. BORLAND. You are; and the law so provides. The gentleman's illustration is a little unfortunate. Conditions are much worse in St. Louis than they are in Kansas City.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to put into the RECORD detailed information on that point and some other information also.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks as indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. IGOE. The gentleman does not mean to say that if a registered letter is not signed for by the man to whom it is sent he is not there?

Mr. BORLAND. It is possible.

Mr. IGOE. Does not the gentleman know that letters were sent to prominent Republicans and Democrats in the city of St. Louis—the president of the police board, I think, and others—and they were not there to receive them?

Mr. BORLAND. I hardly think any of them were marked as dead or out of town. I do not think that kind of work is done by the Post Office Department.

Mr. IGOE. I do not excuse false registration or anything of that kind, but I hope the gentleman will not give the impression that ward after ward in the city of St. Louis contains lists of voters who do not live there.

Mr. BORLAND. I will assure my colleague that I will not make any statement for which I have not record evidence. I certainly would be as loath as he to make a statement that is not justified by public record, and every statement I make, if it is not justified by public record, I will be glad publicly to withdraw. But we can not by a glossing over these things get at the real evil. If the evil is there, let us know where it is and why it is, because I know that neither my colleague nor myself advocate a system that would practically deny the vote to honest citizens in St. Louis or other parts of Missouri by killing the honest vote of the country Democrat with the "ghost vote" of the lower wards of St. Louis. I contend that there are thousands of tax-paying citizens in and out of St. Louis whose votes by the system that is now in vogue are offset and canceled by ghost votes. Neither one of us wants to justify such a system. If this record or any portion of it in the contested case of Gill against Dyer is true, then there is necessity for some reform in the election laws of Missouri and in possibly other States, and I have certainly a right to speak as to Missouri.

In 1912 L. C. Dyer, a Republican, was returned as elected in the twelfth congressional district, containing the fifth ward of the city of St. Louis. MICHAEL J. GILL, the Democratic candidate, contested the election before the committee of the House of Representatives. The evidence, which is all a matter of public record, showed frauds so numerous and so gross that Dyer was unseated by Congress and GILL declared elected. It was not claimed that Dyer had personally participated in the frauds, but he was the beneficiary. The frauds were of every variety. The count was crooked. In the second precinct the judges and clerks returned 199 votes for Dyer and 5 for GILL. The recount showed 106 for Dyer and 73 for GILL. Third precinct, the judges and clerks returned 67 votes for Dyer and 49 for GILL. The recount showed 72 for Dyer and 82 for GILL, and so on. Ballots were changed openly and flagrantly. GILL'S name was scratched off and Dyer's written in. The photographic copies show that these changes were all in the handwriting of Democratic judges in the booth.

Charles A. Hanson, a voter in the third precinct, testified that he voted the straight Democratic ticket. When his ballot, No. 110, was examined on the recount GILL'S name had been scratched and Dyer's name written in.

Joe Botto, William B. Sherman, Henry Jaenecke, and Theodore Thompkins, voters in the fourth precinct, gave the same testimony. In the ninth precinct John McGuire, a Catholic priest, James Thomas, Joseph Flannery, Thomas H. Long, and Walter A. Hamilton gave similar testimony and their ballots had suffered a like fate. Each precinct revealed the same sordid story. In the sixteenth precinct Walter Pfeiffer voted the Progressive ticket; Thomas J. Cockrell voted the Socialist ticket; Thomas B. Fluke, Esau James, and Arthur L. Franklin voted the Republican ticket, but when the ballots corresponding with their numbers were examined they were all found to be Democratic tickets with GILL'S name scratched and Dyer's written in in the same handwriting. If these things can happen in the general election when the two great parties are supposed to be opposing each other, what chance is there for a fair primary? What show of nomination does a worthy Democrat stand who happens to lack the machine indorsement? There is a crying need for reform in this, as it strikes at the very root of free government.

The singular thing is that the Democratic leader, or reputed leader, of the district where all this fraud occurred, Colin Selph, was appointed to the best-paid Federal office in the State of Missouri, postmaster of the city of St. Louis. The appointment was made at the insistant demand of Senator REED. The position pays $8,000 per year, which is more than the salary of the governor of Missouri, the chief justice of the State, the mayor of St. Louis, the judge of the United States circuit court, or even the Assistant Postmaster General. Was this a reward for distinguished party service in aiding to send a member of the opposite political faith to Congress to vote against a Democratic administration? When I criticized this appointment on the floor of this House on the ground that no special fitness for the position had been shown by the appointee, the only member of the Missouri delegation to rise to the defense of Mr. Selph was L. C. Dyer, who within a short time thereafter was ousted from his seat by a vote of Congress. It is only fair to the rank and file of the Democratic Party in St. Louis to say that they protested vigorously against this appointment, and it is only fair to President Wilson to say that he has accepted no further recommendations from the same source.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. I prefer not to yield. The gentleman simply wants to ask me a political question.

Mr. SLOAN. No; it is not a political question.

Mr. BORLAND. The gentleman evidently wants to ask me a political question. I prefer not to yield.

Mr. SLOAN. It is not a political question.

Mr. BORLAND. I prefer not to yield.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. BORLAND. Conditions in Kansas City, while better in a measure, are still such as to challenge the attention of Democrats to the defects of our election machinery.

[From the Kansas City Star, Wednesday, August 12.]

TAMMANY RULE IN MISSOURI.

The people of Missouri outside of Kansas City will be interested in a few sample comparisons of the voting at the primaries last week in some of the Kansas City precincts and in some of the Jackson County districts. The same candidates were voted on in both city and country. So the comparisons are significant as showing how Democratic voters might line up under normal conditions when the votes are honestly cast and honestly counted and how they are made to appear to line up in precincts where the election machinery is in the hands of the Tammany Hall of Kansas City, which is masquerading as a Democratic organization.

These comparisons show vividly how the honest country vote may be killed by the manipulations of a crooked city machine. Take the case of the candidates for Congressman, for instance. In the first ward of Lees Summit the voters evidently felt that Congressman BORLAND had made an excellent Representative. They were satisfied with his support of President Wilson, and they knew he had been in Washington long enough to be familiar with conditions and to be in a position to do his best work. So 151 Democrats voted for his renomination. Sixty voted for his chief opponent, Mr. Pew.

In the fifth precinct of the first ward of Kansas City—a North End precinct—it is doubtful whether 20 voters even knew the names of the candidates. Yet the votes there were counted 151 for Mr. Pew and not one for Mr. BORLAND. The expressed will of 151 honest country Democrats was absolutely nullified by repeaters and by the manipulation made possible by the existing election system at the mandate of the Kansas City Tammany.

Here are some sample comparisons of returns in boss-controlled precincts in Kansas City and in country districts of Jackson County. They ought to be studied by every Missouri voter. The voters in the country in particular should study them. If they do, they will not rest until the legislature provides an election system that will not lend itself to such skullduggery:

This is a condition that affects the whole State. The good citizens of Kansas City appeal to the people of the country, who control the legislature, to help them get laws that will end this sort of thing.

Down with the Missouri Tammany!

And how does the honest voter in these wards fare? A poor man who lives in an humble neighborhood has one priceless right—the right to vote and to have his vote counted as cast. But the rights of the poor are brutally trodden underfoot. I submit this forcible letter from an old soldier, who is a strong Democrat:

427 DELAWARE STREET, KANSAS CITY, MO.,
August 10, 1914.

Hon. WILLIAM P. BORLAND.

DEAR SIR: I received a card from you a few days before the primary asking my support. You might as well have sent me a miniature pitchfork and asked me to try to change the river current—that is, as far as the ward I live in is concerned. This whole registration is a most disgraceful and scandalous fraud. I just got a list of registration in wards 1 and 2. I am familiar with the class of persons who stay in those rooming houses; three-fourths are a floating class who care nothing about local elections and have no interest whatever in voting. This is done by the gang who run things here; get a list of the names of those men, put them on the register. I find men's names on who claim unoccupied store rooms as their residence. I went up to the registration office last Saturday and asked for a list of registrations of precincts 2 and 1. I was astonished when I read it: 512 Main Street, 34 votes; 532 Main Street, 25 votes; 544½ Main Street, 18 votes; 547½ Main Street, 43 votes; 548 Main Street, 61 votes; 555 Main Street, 59 votes.

This is the most damnable fraud that possibly has been perpetrated on the citizens of Kansas City. Those men whose names are given in the register list not 10 per cent of them ever went and registered. But you and every other citizen of Kansas City is to blame for this condition. The lawyer is too busy, the merchant has no time, the clerk in the store or office can't neglect his business, the mechanic who works all day can't spare time, and the result is the very basic principle of this Government is undermined and popular elections are a failure.

Yours, very truly,

GEORGE DONEGAN.

If the registration occurs in March and no additional names are added between that time and August, and it is manifest that if a large number of voters have changed their residence, there ought to be a materially lessened vote at the August primary. In the residence districts of St. Louis and Kansas City that is the case. Even in districts where people own largely their own property a large number of people move and change their residence, or move out of the residence precinct in a single year, so that if you go into a single residence ward in St. Louis and Kansas City and can find from 60 per cent to 70 per cent of the voters there in August who were there in March you are very fortunate. That is the general average. But in some of these lower wards, particularly the lodging-house wards, where the voters are of a more transient class, there will frequently be an amazingly high percentage of the vote cast in August that was registered in March.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in the very nature of things that can not be the case. My colleague says there is a revision of the names in August. So there is.

Mr. IGOE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for just a moment there—for just a question?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes; I will yield for a question.

Mr. IGOE. Not only was there a revision in the city of St. Louis this year—and I think it was true also two years ago—but we had a special election coming just before the primary election, and under the State laws that throws the books open to a new registration just as it did in the special election, so that in the city of St. Louis there were two revisions of the lists, and then there was an additional registration for the special election, the last being for the primary only.

Mr. BORLAND. I will tell you why that revision was not sufficient. The primary laws of the State of Missouri require that the revision shall be conducted—in fact, that the primary election shall be conducted—by the regular election officials at the regular polling places. The law provides for three Democratic officials and three Republican officials, two of whom are named as clerks, and it provides that the Democratic and Republican clerks shall go and revise the lists by calling at the houses. My observation has been that in a residential precinct those two clerks exercise their powers with fidelity and strictness, and every possible doubt it resolved against the voter. For example, if a man is a railway mail clerk, or if he is a railroad conductor, or if he is a traveling salesman, or if his wife is away for the summer and the house is locked up, or even if she is down town and does not respond to the ring of the doorbell, a notice is left to the effect that no response was had to the inquiry of the clerk, and unless the man appears on the following Saturday and shows cause his name will be stricken off the list. Names of hundreds of men are stricken off who are permanent tax-paying citizens, because the laws are enforced strictly by the clerks who feel that they ought to do so. But in the lodging-house wards a similar result does not seem to be produced. Evidently the clerks go together and hand a list of from 65 to 150 names across the bar and say, "Are these men still lodging with you?" The answer is, "Yes, sir." They say, "Thank you," and then walk out.

Now, that is no revision of the list, because the results indicate that there is no revision in the list. There should be as much slump, or more, in the voting in those precincts as there would be in other precincts in the city, and yet there is no slump whatever.

Mr. DECKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. DECKER. You say the list of names is handed across the bar?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes. Most of those lodging houses are conducted in a building where there is a saloon.

Mr. DECKER. Do not you think the best way to purify the ballot in Kansas City and perhaps in St. Louis would be to do away with that bar? [Laughter.] What is your idea on that?

Mr. BORLAND. I do not know but that the gentleman is at least right to that extent, that no voters ought to be registered in a place that is licensed to sell liquor.

Mr. DECKER. What would be the effect on the ballot in St. Louis and Kansas City if we would cut out the bar?

Mr. BORLAND. I could not tell exactly, but I know it would eliminate a large vote in those wards if a law were passed that no registration should occur in any place where liquor was licensed to be sold.

Mr. DECKER. I am not talking about registration from that place, but about cutting out the place, you understand—the bar, the saloon.

Mr. BORLAND. I say it would eliminate a large vote.

Mr. DECKER. An illegal vote in Kansas City?

Mr. BORLAND. Probably. In some cases it is illegal. There is evidence that it was illegal in the case of Gill against

Mr. IGOE. Was there anything in the Gill and Dyer case about registration? Was it not about the count?

Mr. DECKER. The gentleman from Missouri has been over in Kansas, has he not?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. DECKER. They do not take the lists in and submit them to the barkeepers there, do they?

Mr. BORLAND. I take it not, because they are not supposed to find the barkeepers there.

Mr. DECKER. Is it not a fact that, no matter how you write the laws, as long as there are places that profit by illegal registration there will be a good deal of illegality in Kansas City and St. Louis?

Mr. BORLAND. There may be a close connection between this and the liquor traffic. There is a large chance for reform irrespective of the liquor traffic. There is no doubt about that in my mind.

Mr. DECKER. If you want to get at corruption in politics, that would be the hardest lick to give it. If we had the courage to do it, to put the blow where it would kill, that would be the first place to hit, would it not?

Mr. BORLAND. I think the gentleman has a good point there. In fact, most of the nominations in some of the cities are passed across the bars.

Mr. DECKER. Is it not a fact that in that good city a man would not be so presumptuous as to run for a State office who was hostile to some of those bars that revise the registration lists?

Mr. BORLAND. I rather think that is true. I want to explain to this committee that this element that controls this massed vote are the people who, by controlling the vote as a unit, practically nominate every officer in Missouri, from the governor to constable. There is hardly a man in private life big enough, well enough known, or with a personal following sufficient to even ask for a nomination unless he be on the slate of the men who control this massed vote.

Mr. DECKER. And these slates are worked in connection with the bars in Kansas City?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. DECKER. These same men regulate the sending of men to the national conventions that nominate the President of the United States?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Are the two gentlemen from Missouri speaking from experience and information or from observation?

Mr. DECKER. From observation.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman says that no one could be nominated except by permission of this power, and yet both gentlemen have been nominated and elected.

Mr. DECKER. I never have been in Chicago but once, but it looks to me as if it is the same there.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, I can not yield further. Now, on the question of registration, it occurs to me that the purging of the list ought to be done by a sworn officer of the election commissioners and not by the resident clerk in the precinct. I have personally found that in St. Louis and Kansas City, where there is scarcely any real party line drawn, when it came to purging the lists——

Mr. IGOE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. I can not yield further. I have yielded courteously to the gentleman, but I must continue my argument.

Mr. IGOE. I only wanted to ask the gentleman one question.

Mr. BORLAND. I have yielded to the gentleman, and if I have time I will yield further. When we come to the primary we find that the law provides for challengers, ostensibly for the purpose of finding out what men are not qualified to vote and keeping them from voting—insisting on the enforcement of the law. But inasmuch as the primary is held for both parties on the same day, and the Republicans are busy nominating their men and the Democrats are busy nominating their men, and they ought not to be interfering with each other's nomination, the result is that the Democratic primary challenger and the Republican primary challenger are not there for the purpose of challenging anybody. Everybody that they think ought to be brought to the polls is brought there. So, instead of being challengers they are exactly the reverse—they are whips for their particular party. These challengers are in almost all cases men who are on the pay roll of the city, county, or State, and who are using their opportunities and their place on the pay roll to canvass their precincts and wards and to secure the information upon which they can put in the requisite votes on primary day.

That is not a challenge, but is the farthest distance away from a challenge. The taxpayers are made to pay out of the public treasury for the services of a man who is there for the express purpose of putting in a machine vote. In other words, the boss who has his grip on the county treasury or the city treasury has the means to pay several hundreds of these whippers-in whom the law politely designates challengers, and they, on the city or the county time, canvass their wards and get in the requisite votes. The chance of that fellow holding his job in the courthouse depends upon his delivering that precinct. If he can not deliver it, another man is put there who can deliver it. That is practical politics, as every man knows.

What chance does an independent Democrat stand who is not on the machine slate to get a nomination under these circumstances? He is met at the polls by an army of trained precinct workers, paid out of the money of himself and other taxpayers, who are busy putting in votes for the machine slate. Must he hire a similar set of workers to put in votes for him? The law bars his way from doing this. The amount which the candidate is permitted to spend for both primary and general elections is not sufficient to hire workers in half the wards of the city for the primary alone. And if he had the money, the law further bars his way by refusing to permit each candidate to have independent challengers. When there are 128 candidates on the primary ballot the right of each candidate to have independent challengers at each precinct is plainly absurd. The result is that one set should not be allowed challengers to the exclusion of the others.

It ought to be a crime in the State of Missouri or any other State for any man drawing public pay to act as a challenger or an election official in any capacity. There is no possible excuse for it.

Mr. DECKER rose.

Mr. BORLAND. Just one minute. The mere fact that the dominant party has control of the taxpayers' treasury and can hire its men at the taxpayers' expense to do that work puts on the minority party the necessity of promising to the men who will do the same work for their party a similar reward in case they win at the polls. If they win, they must pay that debt out of the taxpayers' money, because they have no other way of paying it.

Mr. IGOE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. For a question.

Mr. IGOE. The gentleman made a statement that people drawing public pay should not act as judges and clerks of election. Does not the law of Missouri disqualify those men now?

Mr. BORLAND. No.

Mr. IGOE. It does in the city of St. Louis.

Mr. BORLAND. From acting as judges and clerks, yes; but I was speaking of challengers.

Mr. IGOE. The gentleman made a statement that might mislead some of the other gentlemen present.

Mr. BORLAND. Another evil is the sample ballot. The law requires the official ballot to be printed on white paper and delivered only to the election judges.

In a primary election one official ballot of the party he calls for is given to the voter after he has entered the booth and after it is ascertained that he is duly registered in that precinct. But the law permits imitations of the official ballot printed on tinted paper to be circulated to an unlimited extent. These sample ballots are not used to stuff the ballot box, as their color would betray them. They are used in getting votes for the "slate." A "slate" is a list of candidates satisfactory to the machine. A "slate" is treason against the spirit if not the letter of the primary law. It is commonly supposed to be invincible, because it is backed by an organized force paid out of the taxpayers' treasury. At the close of the week preceding the primary word is sent down the line as to what candidates are to be on the "slate." On the Sunday preceding the eventful first Tuesday in August hundreds of precinct workers are to be found clustered in back rooms in the various wards marking sample ballots to correspond with the slate. This is the machine at work preparing "raw" material. On primary day these precinct workers, transformed by law into challengers, are at the polls passing these sample ballots to voters, or at least to those who are to be voted. The voter takes the sample ballot into the booth and marks his official ballot to correspond. If the judges are very friendly, the challenger follows him in and looks over his shoulder or helps him do it. This accounts for the miracle that 250 men in a precinct can agree on 25 names out of a list of 128 without a single mistake. Possibly a mistake of the voter in voting as he darn pleases can be corrected on the final count. If the voter does not vote "right," there is no use in his repairing afterwards to the shed in the alley in the rear of the polls, for the challenger will not be there to meet or to greet him.

Legislation is needed to forbid the printing and circulation of sample ballots. It ought to be a crime to distribute marked ballots at the polls or to have them in possession. The ordinary publication of the official ticket in the newspapers is ample for the information of the public.

These are a few of the most glaring defects of the primary law in great cities; and yet the primary law is our only hope and must be preserved. It is democratic in its very nature.

As I said at the beginning, I believe in the primary law. Defective as it is, it is much better than the old mob primaries or the convention system. We shall never go back to the old abuses. As time and trial have revealed the defects and dangers of the primary system, let us correct them. Let us give to the humblest laboring man in the humblest quarter of the great cities freedom and equality to exercise his rights as an American citizen. Let us stop paying out of the taxpayers' treasury for the defeat of the people's will.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GARNER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, December 9, 1914.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we come before Thee to settle each day anew those eternal issues that can never be written into the laws of our land. Before we would strive to serve our fellow men we would receive from Thee moral and spiritual authority to say "Thou shalt" and "Thou shalt not." Unless we conform to the divine policy in our Government we shall never succeed in going onward and upward to ever-inviting fields of human progress. Give us wisdom, give us vision, give us a due discernment of the need of the hour. May we address ourselves to our tasks with a conscience void of offense. We ask for Christ's sake. Amen.

FOOT-AND-MOUTH DISEASE.

Mr. GORE, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to which was referred the bill (S. 6689) making appropriation for the arrest and eradication of the foot-and-mouth disease, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 831) thereon.

Mr. SHAFROTH. From the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate I report back favorably, with an amendment, Senate resolution 490, submitted by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] on the 7th instant. As it is a matter of urgency, I should like very much to have the resolution acted upon at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution. The amendment of the committee was, on page 2, line 5, after the word "employ," to strike out "stenographers and such other assistants as it may deem necessary" and to insert "a stenographer at a cost not exceeding $1 per printed page," so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry of the Senate, or any subcommittee thereof duly authorized by said committee, be, and it is hereby, instructed to make inquiry concerning and report to the Senate thereon:

First. The extent and location of the territory affected by the foot-and-mouth disease and the number of cattle, hogs, sheep, and other animals affected thereby or exposed thereto.

Second. What quarantine or other measures have been adopted by the Federal or State authorities for the prevention or eradication of said disease.

Third. What changes, if any, should be adopted by the Federal or State authorities in their methods of quarantine.

Fourth. What remedy or remedies are known or used in preventing or eradicating said disease.

That said committee or subcommittee is authorized to sit during the sessions of the Senate and during any recess of the Senate; to hold sessions at such place or places as it shall deem most convenient for the purposes of the investigation; to employ a stenographer at a cost not exceeding $1 per printed page; to send for persons, books, records, and papers; to administer oaths, and as early as practicable to report to the Senate the results of its investigation, including all testimony taken by it; and that the expenses of the inquiry shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers to be approved by the chairman of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I hope the resolution will be promptly passed; and as I see several members of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry present, I will express the further hope that the committee will very promptly proceed with the inquiry provided for by the resolution. It relates to what is really a very serious matter.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I will state to the Senator from Ohio that the committee met this morning, took some testimony with relation to this matter, and reported favorably a bill providing for an additional expenditure, I think, of $1,500,000 to meet any emergency that may confront the department either in connection with this disease or with any other disease which may appear.

Mr. BURTON. Do I understand the Senator from Colorado intends to bring up that bill immediately after the adoption of the pending resolution?

Mr. SHAFROTH. No; that bill will not be in my charge. The resolution I have reported simply provides for the payment of a stenographer and for the investigation, so that it may proceed regularly. The bill to which I have referred will probably come up either this afternoon or to-morrow morning.

Mr. BURTON. I trust very early consideration may be given to it, because a most serious emergency exists in the State of Ohio and also in other States.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The committee recognize the great emergency, and therefore determined this morning as to the amount which should be added to the funds of the Agricultural Department for this very purpose.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as amended.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I introduce a bill and ask that it be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The bill (S. 6856) to authorize the United States, acting through a shipping board, to subscribe to the capital stock of a corporation to be organized under the laws of the United States or of a State thereof or of the District of Columbia to purchase, construct, equip, maintain, and operate merchant vessels in the foreign trade of the United States, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the bill the Senator from Missouri has just introduced refers to a matter in which many of us are deeply interested. I should like to ask him if the bill is along the same lines as the so-called Alexander bill in the House?

Mr. STONE. It is the Alexander bill. I will say, however, that there is this difference: An amendment has been interpolated which Mr. ALEXANDER himself wrote in, and I am introducing it in that form.

Mr. BURTON. I should like to inquire what bill this is?

Mr. STONE. It is a shipping bill, a merchant-marine bill.

Mr. BURTON. What does the Senator from Missouri propose to have done with the bill?

Mr. STONE. To have it referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That action has been taken.

TEXAS STATE CLAIMS.

Mr. CULBERSON. I submit an amendment proposing to reimburse the State of Texas in full payment of all claims of any nature whatever on account of expense incurred by that State prior to February 9, 1861, intended to be proposed by me to the general deficiency appropriation bill. I ask that the amendment be printed and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That action will be taken.

EMPLOYMENT OF STENOGRAPHER.

Mr. GORE submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 496), which was read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, or any subcommittee thereof, be authorized during the Sixty-third Congress to employ a stenographer at a price not to exceed $1 per printed page to report such hearings as may be held in connection with any subject which may be pending before the said committee; and the expenses thereof shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

REGULATION OF IMMIGRATION.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 6060, known as the immigration bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Carolina moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 6060, which will be read by title.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 6060) to regulate the immigration of aliens to and the residence of aliens in the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from South Carolina.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Immigration with amendments.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Shall the bill be regularly read, or the formal reading of the bill being dispensed with, shall it be read for amendment?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with.

Mr. REED. I call for the reading of the bill. If I had been here in time, I would have objected to its consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be read, but the question is, Shall the amendments be considered as the Secretary proceeds with the reading of the bill?

Mr. REED. I call for the regular order, the reading of the bill in full.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be read.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I now ask that the committee amendments be acted upon in their order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment. If there be no objection, the committee amendments will first be acted upon.

The first amendment of the Committee on Immigration was, in section 1, page 1, line 6, after the word "Indians," to insert "of the United States," so as to read:

That the word "alien" wherever used in this act shall include any person not a native-born or naturalized citizen of the United States; but this definition shall not be held to include Indians of the United States not taxed or citizens of the islands under the jurisdiction of the United States.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I desire to inquire as to the parliamentary situation. Is this bill now before the Senate by unanimous consent or on a vote?

The VICE PRESIDENT. On a vote.

Mr. REED. The time for its consideration, then, will expire at 2 o'clock for to-day?

The VICE PRESIDENT. No; there is no unfinished business.

Mr. REED. How could it be made the unfinished business during the morning hour?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has not been, yet.

Mr. REED. Oh, I understand the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is simply being taken up by the Senate on motion, as the rules provide, and being considered.

Mr. REED. It may be taken up?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is taken up.

Mr. REED. Taken up now, during the morning hour; but its right of way will expire, as I understand the Chair, at 2 o'clock?

The VICE PRESIDENT. No. There is no unfinished business. If there were unfinished business, it would expire then. There being no unfinished business, it will proceed until displaced by something else. The question is on agreeing to the first amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 3, after the words "Canal Zone," to insert "or any insular possession of the United States," so as to read:

That the term "United States," as used in the title as well as in the various sections of this act, shall be construed to mean the United States, and any waters, territory, or other place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, except the Isthmian Canal Zone; but if any alien shall leave the Canal Zone or any insular possession of the United States and attempt to enter any other place under the jurisdiction of the United States, nothing contained in this act shall be construed as permitting him to enter under any other conditions than those applicable to all aliens. That the term "seaman," as used in this act, shall include every person signed on the ship's articles and employed in any capacity on board any vessel arriving in the United States from any foreign port or place.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, page 2, line 16, after the words "tax of," to strike out "$5" and insert "$6," so as to read:

That there shall be levied, collected, and paid a tax of $6 for every alien, including alien seamen regularly admitted as provided in this act, entering the United States.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I raise the question of the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-nine Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 16, after the words "tax of," strike out "$5" and insert "$6."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 18, after the words "United States," to insert "except that with respect to an alien accompanied by his wife, child, or children said tax shall be $4 for each such alien, wife, and child," so as to read:

That there shall be levied, collected, and paid a tax of $6 for every alien, including alien seamen regularly admitted as provided in this act, entering the United States, except that with respect to an alien accompanied by his wife, child, or children said tax shall be $4 for each such alien, wife, and child.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, do I understand that the bill is now being read in full for committee amendments?

The VICE PRESIDENT. No; it has been read in full. It is now being read for the committee amendments.

Mr. REED. It must be read in full.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has been read in full.

Mr. REED. It must be read in full for the amendments.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is not any doubt about it. The amendments are now being read, and that is in accordance with the rules of the Senate.

Mr. REED. I simply wanted to be sure that I understood the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is not a question of doubt about the rule. A request was made this morning to omit the reading of the bill, and read it simply for the amendments. The Senator from Missouri objected, and asked for the regular order. The bill has now been read in its entirety. It is in the Committee of the Whole, and in accordance with the rules of the Senate it is now being read simply for committee amendments. That does not involve the necessity of rereading the bill but simply reading the amendments, so that it does not have to be read in full.

Mr. REED. I desire to ask the Senator in charge of the bill what important reason impelled the committee to raise the head tax from $5 to $6?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Under the existing law and the bill as it came over from the House, the tax is $5, without any discrimination. The committee in charge of the bill raised it on such individuals as are here set forth—every adult alien, including alien seamen—to $6, and lowered it to $4 on the wives and children, so as to equalize it and make it practically the same according to the number that come in. I will state to the Senator that the wives and children do not enter into competition here; they are more or less a burden when they come in; and we therefore lowered the tax on them, while we raised the tax to $6 in the case of those of earning age.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator will allow me one moment, of course what we desire to encourage is the immigrant with a family. The idea of the committee was to make the tax as low as it now is on a man with a family, and to increase the tax on the man who comes here without a family—the single men, many of whom are of that class which is most prejudicial in many ways, who come here in the spring, work through the summer, and go back in the autumn, and have no intention of ever becoming American citizens. They come here simply to get the benefit of our opportunities. It was never intended to make the tax fall in such a way as to burden the most desirable immigrants.

Mr. REED. What is the present head tax?

Mr. LODGE. Four dollars. The house made it $5, and it passed at $5 in the last Congress in both Houses. The House made it $5 in this bill, and we have put the tax on men with families back at the figure named in the present law.

Mr. REED. I notice that a little later in the bill the committee has amended it by striking out the clause which exempts from the tax those aliens who have declared their intention of becoming citizens. May I ask the purpose of that change?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Can the Senator refer me to that particular section?

Mr. REED. It is on page 3, the lines that are stricken out—lines 14, 15, and 16.

Mr. LODGE. I will say to the Senator that those lines are not in the existing law. That is new legislation, added by the House. It was the opinion of the department that it was better not to make that exception, as it opened the door to fraud.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. That particular part was stricken out, as the Senator from Massachusetts has said, because one might declare his intention to become a citizen and then abuse the law, as already set forth by him, by immediately returning. If you will read further, it says:

Shall not be levied—

And then those lines are stricken out—on account of aliens who shall enter the United States after an uninterrupted residence of at least one year immediately preceding such entrance.

Mr. REED (reading):

In the Dominion of Canada, Newfoundland, the Republic of Cuba, or the Republic of Mexico.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Yes—

Nor on account of otherwise admissible residents of any possession of the United States.

Mr. REED. Yes. Of course, that leaves it that if a man has declared his intention to become a citizen he, nevertheless, must pay this tax.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. GRONNA. I was simply about to say that I believe this amendment should be changed by an amendment. I believe the words "accompanied by" should be stricken out, so that the amendment will read:

Except that with respect to an alien, his wife, child, or children, said tax shall be $4.

My reason for that is this: Very often it happens that the husband will come to this country, and after he has earned sufficient money will send for his family. Now, unless the family are accompanied by the husband they will not get the advantage of the reduction in the head tax. I think it was the intention of the committee—at least, it was my intention—that the desirable immigrant, whom we want, should have the benefit of the $4 tax instead of the $6 tax.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Will the Senator restate his amendment?

Mr. GRONNA. It is simply to strike out the two words "accompanied by."

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. On what page?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POMERENE in the chair). In lines 18 and 19, page 2.

Mr. GRONNA. Yes; lines 18 and 19, so that the amendment will read:

Except that with respect to an alien, his wife, child, or children, said tax shall be $4.

There certainly should be no objection to that.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I accept the amendment.

Mr. LODGE. How did the Senator word it finally—just striking out the words "accompanied by"?

Mr. GRONNA. Just striking out the two words "accompanied by."

Mr. LODGE. I agree with the Senator that it should not be limited to the occasion of being accompanied by them.

Mr. GRONNA. That was the intention of the committee.

Mr. LODGE. I think simply leaving out those words makes the amendment a little blind, but that can be remedied subsequently.

Mr. GRONNA. Do I understand that the chairman of the committee has accepted my amendment?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I accept the amendment.

Mr. GRONNA. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, lines 18 and 19, in the committee amendment, strike out the words "accompanied by."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment to the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Mr. President, I have a suggestion to make that, I think, will be accepted by the Senator in charge of the bill, and will make the phraseology regarding this change satisfactory. It is to strike out in lines 18 and 19 the words "an alien accompanied by his" and substitute for the word "his," in line 19, the word "the," and insert the words "of an alien" after the word "children," so that the two lines will read:

Entering the United States, except that with respect to the wife, child, or children of an alien, said tax shall be $4 for each such alien, wife, and child.

Mr. LODGE. That puts it in proper form.

Mr. GRONNA. Would not that prevent the husband from getting the low rate?

Mr. LODGE. Oh, no; he is made a special exception just the same.

Mr. O'GORMAN. It permits the wife and child or children of an alien to secure a reduced rate, whether they accompany the parent or not.

Mr. LODGE. Whether they accompany the parent or are sent for.

Mr. O'GORMAN. It accomplishes, I am sure, just what the Senator from North Dakota has in his mind.

Mr. GRONNA. Then I did not hear the Senator from New York correctly. Will the Senator restate his amendment?

Mr. O'GORMAN. Beginning with the word "except," in line 18, on page 2, the clause will read:

Except that with respect to the wife, child, or children of an alien, said tax shall be $4.

Mr. GRONNA. What will be the tax on the alien?

Mr. O'GORMAN. Six dollars.

Mr. GRONNA. I intended that the tax of $4 should apply to the husband as well as to the wife and children.

Mr. LODGE. It does, as the Senator from New York has drafted it.

Mr. GRONNA. I think not.

Mr. LODGE. It says "with respect to the wife, child, or children of an alien said tax shall be $4 for each such alien, wife, and child."

Mr. O'GORMAN. It will cover it.

Mr. LODGE. It makes the tax $4 for each of the family—father, wife, and children. I think that is just what the Senator wants to effect and it is in better language.

Mr. GALLINGER. But, manifestly, there is then a discrepancy between the $6 assessed on line 16 against an alien. That would have to be changed.

Mr. LODGE. Where?

Mr. GALLINGER. In line 16, which provides "that there shall be levied, collected, and paid a tax of $6 for every alien."

Mr. LODGE. This is an exception. It excepts a man with a family.

Mr. GRONNA. Does it not except the wife and children?

Mr. LODGE. It excepts them all, because it says "with respect to the wife, child, or children of an alien said tax shall be $4 for such alien, wife, and child." What is such alien? The alien who has a wife and children. It is as clear as it is possible to make it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Does the Senator think that it is good policy to assess a tax of $6 upon aliens who are without families and $4 upon aliens who have families?

Mr. LODGE. I think it is much better. I explained the reason why to the Senate when the Senator was out. The desirable immigrant, of course, is the man who comes here with a family and children intending to settle and become a citizen. The presence of his family is a guarantee of that intention—that he comes here meaning to remain. A large portion of the adult males who will pay the $6 tax are men who come to this country in the spring, work through the summer, and go back in the autumn, taking their wages with them. That tax affects a class that is undesirable in many respects, and the single men who come here with the intent of remaining can afford to pay the $6. The provision equalizes the tax and gives a distinct advantage to the man with a family, which the bill as it passed the House does not give.

Mr. SMOOT. May I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. GRONNA. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to say to the Senator from Massachusetts that in an untold number of cases the husband comes in advance of his family.

Mr. LODGE. Certainly, and we have changed the bill so as to cover those cases by adopting the amendment of the Senator from New York.

Mr. SMOOT. Then I happened to be out of the Chamber and did not know it.

Mr. LODGE. The clause has been rephrased. I will state to the Senator it now reads "except that with respect to the wife, child, or children of an alien said tax shall be $4 for each such alien, wife, and child."

Mr. GALLINGER. That necessarily implies that the family accompany the alien; but if the alien precedes them, then what?

Mr. LODGE. It was phrased by the Senator from New York with the precise object of covering it whether the family accompanies the alien or is sent for, and it seems to me it is so plain that no distinction can be drawn. It says that the tax shall be $4 on the wife, child, or children of an alien; that is, if the wife and children be the wife and children of an alien, they pay $4, and also the tax shall be $4 on such alien—that is, the alien who has a wife and children—no matter how he comes.

Mr. GALLINGER. No matter whether they are in Europe or on shipboard.

Mr. LODGE. Of course the tax can not be levied on them if they are in Europe.

Mr. GALLINGER. But let us understand this provision. The Senator sees it very clearly. I do not. An alien comes here in advance of his family. Are you going to assess only $4 on him because he has a wife and children in Europe who are coming here? Is that the idea?

Mr. LODGE. Yes; that is the understanding.

Mr. GALLINGER. They may never come.

Mr. LODGE. He has to make proof of it, of course.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think it is not as clear as the Senator thinks it is.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator agrees with me to make the tax $4 on that alien and on his wife and children.

Mr. GALLINGER. But then it is a discrimination against the man who has not a wife and children and pays $6, provided the wife and children never come.

Mr. LODGE. I see the objection the Senator makes. On the other hand, it is undesirable to limit it to accompanying the alien, because he may come here with the intent of sending for them later, and we want to relieve him of the payment of the extra $2.

Mr. GRONNA. Do I understand that the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York was adopted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has not yet been adopted. It is pending.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. GRONNA. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. May I ask for a reading of the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York in order to clarify this ambiguity?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the amendment to the amendment.

The SECRETARY. Amend the proposed amendment of the committee on page 2, beginning in line 18.

The committee propose at that point, after the words "United States," to insert the words:

Except that with respect to an alien accompanied by his wife, child, or children said tax shall be $4 for each such alien, wife, and child.

The Senator from New York proposes to amend by striking out the words "an alien accompanied by his" and inserting the word "the" before the word "wife," and after the word "children," in line 19, to insert the words "of an alien," so that the amendment of the committee if amended will read:

Except that with respect to the wife, child, or children of an alien said tax shall be $4 for each such alien, wife, and child.

Mr. GRONNA. The amendment which I offered was accepted by the chairman of the committee. We will then have to reconsider that amendment before this amendment can be adopted.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I do not think that is necessary if the Senator prefers the amendment of the Senator from New York.

Mr. GRONNA. I have no objection to the amendment of the Senator from New York.

Mr. LODGE. It will be open to further amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN] to the committee amendment.

Mr. REED. Does the Senator from Idaho desire to offer something?

Mr. BORAH. Not if the Senator from Missouri is going to discuss this particular amendment.

Mr. REED. I was not. I was going to ask for some more light as to the parliamentary situation.

Mr. BORAH. I should like to have some light also.

Mr. REED. I want to inquire if the motion to take up this bill was made in the morning hour by unanimous consent, and if unanimous consent was given to make the motion?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I should like to state to the Senator from Missouri that immediately upon the announcement by the Vice President that the morning business was closed I moved to take up the bill. The question was put to the Senate, and, by a vote, it was taken up in regular order, and the Senate is now proceeding with its consideration under that agreement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina has correctly stated the order that was made by the Senate, as the Chair understands it.

Mr. REED. The point on which I am making inquiry is whether the morning business had been concluded and it had been so announced.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. It had.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It had been so declared.

Mr. REED. I still have the floor. If the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] desires to discuss this phase of the matter, I will yield the floor to him.

Mr. BORAH. No; I was simply desiring to satisfy my mind as to just what this amendment means. I think, as I understand it, I have no objection to it. Therefore I do not care to discuss it.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I merely wish to make a suggestion with reference to the amendment that has just been adopted, which was offered by the Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota will permit the Chair to state that the amendment to the amendment has not yet been adopted. It is pending.

Mr. McCUMBER. Then let me make this suggestion. It is to a certain extent very obscure, as has been suggested by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER]. Suppose a married alien comes here first. He is not bringing his family with him. There must therefore be an assessment of $6 against him, although he is married. Then if we adopt the amendment offered by the Senator from New York, it will provide after you have already assessed and collected $6 the charge against that alien shall be $4, because it says "for each such alien, wife, and child." Any alien who is fit to come to the United States I think probably could stand the test of the two extra dollars; we do not need to spend a great deal of time on this question, but the law ought to be certain as to what shall be charged against the alien as he enters one of our ports. We can not fix it at $6 and then in the very last part of the amendment provide that such alien shall pay $4 whether he is accompanied by his wife or not.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield.

Mr. LODGE. I think the point made by the Senator from New Hampshire and the Senator from North Dakota is well taken, and it leaves a very doubtful point about the alien who comes and whose wife and children are left behind. I think we shall have to reword the amendment to reach the object that we all desire to attain. I would suggest to the chairman that we might pass over this amendment for the present and dispose of it later, when we shall have had an opportunity to put it in proper form.

Mr. GALLINGER. I hope that will be done.

Mr. McCUMBER. I will state to the Senator that if we desire to charge $6 when the alien comes alone without a family in the first instance and only $4 if he accompanies his family, that amendment could be made by striking out, in line 20, the words "such alien."

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be passed over and the committee will reword it in such form as to meet the very point now made.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Before it is passed over I suggest this language, which will completely cover it:

Except that the tax on the wife, child, or children of an alien shall be $4 each for such wife and child and for such alien if said wife, child, or children accompany him.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. That is exactly what we have now.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say to the Senator that there are innumerable cases of aliens coming to this country unaccompanied by wife and children, but they come here to become citizens and as soon as they get money enough they send for their families.

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. SMOOT. A man of that kind should not be taxed $6, it seems to me. I think he ought to be taxed $4, the same as the man who has his family accompanying him.

Mr. LODGE. The amendment will have to be reworded to meet those cases. I hope the Senate will pass it over so that it may be put in proper shape.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I meant to say only a word. If a man comes without his family, I want him to pay $6. I meant to put it clearly that he would pay $6 if he did not bring his family with him at the time he came. You will produce almost inexplicable confusion if you undertake to make him pay $4 when he has a wife and children abroad and says he probably will bring them in at a future time. It will be a simple proposition to say that the tax shall be $6 unless he brings his family along with him.

Mr. SMOOT. The amendment suggested by the Senator from Georgia plainly states that.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That is what I meant by it.

Mr. GALLINGER. I join in the request made by the Senator from Massachusetts. I am sure the chairman of the committee will see to it, if the amendment is passed over, that it shall be given proper consideration. It is a very important matter.

Mr. GRONNA. I have no objection to the amendment being passed over; but I am quite sure that by striking out the words I suggested we could dispose of it. I am quite sure that if the husband accompanied his family he would have to pay only $4. I am also quite sure that if he did not accompany his family the family would have to pay only $4. Of course he would have to pay $6 if he came alone, and that, I understand, the committee intends to be the law.

Mr. LODGE. That is just what we want to reach. I think it needs to be worded carefully, and therefore it should be passed over.

Mr. GRONNA. I do not object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the pending amendment will be passed over and the next amendment will be stated.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum is suggested. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Hughes	O'Gorman	Smith, Ariz.
Bankhead	James	Overman	Smith, Ga.
Borah	Johnson	Page	Smith, S. C.
Bryan	Kenyon	Perkins	Smoot
Burton	Kern	Pittman	Sterling
Camden	La Follette	Pomerene	Stone
Chamberlain	Lane	Reed	Thomas
Clark, Wyo.	Lee, Md.	Robinson	Thompson
Culberson	Lippitt	Root	Thornton
Dillingham	Lodge	Saulsbury	Tillman
Gallinger	McCumber	Shafroth	Walsh
Gore	Martin, Va.	Sheppard	Warren
Gronna	Martine, N. J.	Sherman	White
Hardwick	Myers	Shively	Works
Hollis	Norris	Simmons

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to make the same announcement of pairs that I made on the last roll call.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I desire to make the same announcement with reference to the pair of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON] that I made a while ago. I will let that announcement stand for the present.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I was requested to announce that the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA] is unavoidably absent on public business.

Mr. THORNTON. I again desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. RANSDELL] on public business. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-nine Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The Secretary will read the next amendment of the committee.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, what became of the amendment which was pending?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It was passed over by unanimous consent.

Mr. REED. Oh, no; unanimous consent was not asked or granted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The statement was made by the Chair that it would be passed over unless there was objection, and no objection was interposed.

Mr. REED. I did not hear the Chair's statement, but that would not amount to a unanimous consent.

I wish to say to the Senators in charge of this bill that I have not any desire to try to obstruct its passage, but I want an opportunity to examine it. I do not know what is in it. No one but the committee has had any opportunity to know what is in the bill. We meet here on what is substantially the first day of the session a bill of far-reaching importance, without any intimation or notice that it will be called up for action, but suddenly a motion was made only a few moments after the Senate was in session.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Will the Senator from Missouri allow me?

Mr. REED. I will yield in a moment, when I finish this statement. Only a few moments after the Senate had convened a motion is made to take up the bill, and there is, it seems to me, a manifest purpose to push it through as rapidly as possible. It is a bill we have no right to pass upon hastily. It ought to be carefully examined. It ought to be thoroughly understood by the Senate.

I think the friends of the bill would be acting in accordance with the proprieties of the situation if they would not attempt to force this bill through to-day, but would take some action that would permit an examination of the bill and an understanding of it. It is rather unusual for a great bill of this kind to be brought in and not a single man representing the committee or anyone else to have a word to say about it or in any way to elucidate it or to state the reasons for the legislation or what is contained in the bill. I say it is exceedingly unusual.

The bill may be one of great merit; it may be one fraught with great evil; I do not know. So far as I am concerned, I intend to take such action as may be necessary in order to secure a reasonable time in which to examine this measure. I think that ought to be granted willingly by the committee.

I now yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. If the Senator from Missouri will refer to the title-page of the bill he will see that it passed the House February 5, 1914, and came to the Senate and was sent to our committee and there considered, and it was reported from the committee last March. The bill has been printed in its present form and has been upon the calendar since some time in March. From time to time I have attempted to bring the bill up, but on account of other pressing matters its consideration was postponed.

I wish to state further that I suppose there never has been a bill introduced in the Senate that has had as much discussion as this bill. This is practically the identical bill that was introduced, discussed, and passed by both Houses and then vetoed by President Taft. It was passed by the Senate over the President's veto, but it was defeated in the House by a small majority. It was then reintroduced, and at the beginning of the present session of Congress it passed the House overwhelmingly and came to the Senate and was considered by the committee and reported nearly six months ago, with a full report made by the chairman, with the assistance of the Commissioner General of Immigration, meant to cover all the points and giving reasons for the few verbal changes that the Senate committee made, for we made none of any vital importance in the general text of the bill. We merely corrected some verbal errors, and in one instance alone did we leave out a section which was objected to and which objection appeared valid to the committee, the section in reference to putting matrons, inspectors, and surgeons on board foreign vessels bringing immigrants to our shores. We simply changed that so as to provide for inspection on this side.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. BORAH. I want to ask the Senator from South Carolina if there are any distinct or substantial differences between this bill and the bill which was previously passed by Congress?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. There are none. It is practically identically the same bill, with just a few verbal changes to make the meaning clearer. As I said a moment ago, the only changes were where there was strenuous objection from the representatives of foreign Governments against permitting our physicians and matrons to be put on board their vessels.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri has the floor. Does he yield further?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. GRONNA. I wish simply to say, being a member of the committee, that, while what the chairman has said is true, of course in many respects, this is the same as the immigration bill which was passed during the last Congress, there are also some new things in the bill which are very different; there are some provisions which are entirely new. Take, for instance, the provision on page 1, which was just agreed to. It is of very great importance, but it was not in the bill which was passed during the Taft administration.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. But it was in the bill as it passed the other House at the last session, and substantially it is the same. The changes made by the Senate committee are very unimportant, and the changes made by the other House, so far as I have been able to ascertain by referring to the old bill and to the present law, are not vitally material.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. REED. I will yield to the Senator from New Jersey, unless he wishes to make some extended observations on the bill. If so, I should like to conclude this colloquy, and then I shall yield the floor.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Very well.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, what the Senator from South Carolina, who is in charge of the bill, has stated is true; and yet it is a good illustration of the fact that a man can state the exact, absolute truth, and yet the matter not be presented in a very complete form. It is true the bill was sent here by the other House on the 5th day of February, 1914; that during all of that time the bill has been here; and any Senator who desired to do so might have examined it; but it is also true that it was well understood at the last session that this bill would not be brought forward at that session; that there were other matters of more pressing importance. Accordingly, no Senator was called upon to study the bill; indeed it was his duty to devote his time and attention to measures which were then pressing for passage. The fact that a bill has been sent here does not at all imply that it is the duty of Members to undertake its analysis and study under conditions of that kind. There are a great many bills upon the calendar, but none of us undertake to read those bills long in advance of the time they are to be brought forward, unless we are upon committees to which they have been referred or are otherwise specially concerned in them.

I have not had the opportunity to read this bill, and many other Senators, I suppose, are in the same position in which I am. It is an important bill; it affects a great many of our citizens, because many of them have left behind them their families and relatives who are dear to them. Then it affects generally the whole population of the country, because it raises the great questions always involved in matters concerning immigration. It is true an immigration bill was passed two years ago and vetoed; it is true that that bill was afterwards passed by the Senate over the veto of the President, Mr. Taft; but surely we are not going to pass this bill upon debates which took place before another Congress, two years ago, particularly when it is well known that the bill is not identical with the one which was then under consideration.

Some Senator ought to give the Senate some light as to the reasons why it is necessary to make these radical changes in our immigration laws. The bill ought not to be passed in the dark or in a hurry. I say again to the chairman of the committee that I hope he will allow the bill, under some proper agreement—I have no desire to have the bill lose its parliamentary advantage, if any it has—to be laid aside until we can have an opportunity to examine it. Otherwise we shall be compelled to take the time of the Senate in discussing various phases of the bill, as we have been during the last hour. I hope the chairman of the committee will adopt that suggestion.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, the present status of affairs is that we are now considering committee amendments to the bill. As I said before, practically all of the Senate committee amendments are not of very great importance; they are merely verbal changes. I do not know that there need be any very extended explanation of them. Such explanation, however, as is necessary I hope I can give as the committee amendments are reached. After the committee amendments are disposed of, as a matter of course each and every Senator will have ample opportunity, which the Senate always guarantees to every Member, to discuss the bill in its vital relations. I am simply trying to dispose of the Senate committee amendments in order to get the bill in the proper shape to be presented as a principle to be discussed by the Senate. The bill has proceeded thus far, and I hope the Senator from Missouri has had ample opportunity to discharge his duty as a Senator, to study the bill in its entirety, and will vote for it or against it as his judgment may dictate.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Mr. President, I am a member of the committee from which this bill has been reported, although I am not in accord with the majority of the committee regarding at least one vital feature of the bill. That feature is the so-called literacy clause. I am opposed to that clause, and I know there are other members of the committee who are opposed to it.

In common with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], although a member of the committee, I was surprised that this measure was pressed upon the attention of the Senate to-day. I was engaged at a committee meeting held at 12 o'clock to-day, when, as I am informed, immediately upon the convening of the body the chairman of the Committee on Immigration sought and obtained permission to have this bill considered by the Senate. As one of the committee I think the request tendered by the Senator from Missouri is a reasonable request. No intimation has been given to this body during the two or three days that we have been together that this very important bill was going to be pressed upon our attention to-day, or, indeed, at any time during the session. On yesterday we attended with the other House in the Chamber of the House of Representatives and listened to the message of the President. The President indicated certain phases of necessary legislation which, in his judgment, ought to receive our attention during this short session. He evidently was not impressed with the need of taking up this immigration problem at this time, for he made no reference to it.

I do hope that the chairman of the committee will withhold his objection to what I conceive to be a very reasonable request made by the Senator from Missouri, that the bill be laid aside at least for a day or two.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, it does seem to me that if ever a bill should have been referred to the Committee on Education and Labor this bill should have been so referred. Being a member of that committee, I felt an interest in the matter and had a hope that the bill might go to that committee, and that I at least might have an opportunity to express my views on the subject. For reasons I know not, however, the bill was referred to the Committee on Immigration. Of course, immigration is affected by the bill.

I am opposed to the bill, and if it has got to pass this body in the shape in which it is now presented, while I am willing to concede that there may be much of good in the measure, at the same time, according to my views and understanding, there is much of evil in it.

I am opposed in toto to that clause of the bill found on page 8, beginning at line 10, which bars "all aliens over 16 years of age, physically capable of reading, who can not read the English language or some other language or dialect, including Hebrew or Yiddish."

I am opposed to a literacy test. I claim that such a test proves nothing. The most glib-tongued scoundrel and consummate villain that God's sun ever shone upon might be able to translate all the languages known to the human tongue and yet be a man who would be evil and detrimental to a community. I claim that notwithstanding the fact that one is not able to read or translate Yiddish or Hebrew, he may be a surpassingly good citizen. I have known in the course of my life many men in the city of New York, where I was born, who were utterly and absolutely incapable of reading the English language, who could neither read nor write their own names, and yet who carved out great fortunes in that metropolis, who made of themselves splendid citizens, and who reared grand families.

To press such a proposition as this would be almost inhumane. It is un-American; it is utterly ungenerous. As I said a year ago, when a bill of a similar character, which was vetoed, was under consideration here, this proposition, carried to its finis, would have barred my good mother, from whose bosom I drank the milk of justice and liberty; and, by the eternal heavens, I shall never vote for a measure that would bar one with a clean body, a moral mind, a holy, generous, and humane purpose, from the blessings of liberty that this Government and this grand land vouchsafe.

I trust, if the bill is going to be pressed in its present shape, that it may be overwhelmingly defeated. I shall earnestly sustain any proposition to recommit this bill to the committee or which ultimately, I hope, will absolutely defeat it in its present form.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the next committee amendment.

The next amendment was, in section 2, page 3, after the word "vehicle," at the end of line 3, to insert "or when collection from the master, agent, owner, or consignee of the vessel, transportation line, or other conveyance, or vehicle bringing such alien to the United States is impracticable," so as to read:

> The said tax shall be paid to the collector of customs of the port or customs district to which said alien shall come, or, if there be no collector at such port or district, then to the collector nearest thereto, by the master, agent, owner, or consignee of the vessel, transportation line, or other conveyance or vehicle bringing such alien to the United States, or by the alien himself if he does not come by a vessel, transportation line, or other conveyance or vehicle, or when collection from the master, agent, owner, or consignee of the vessel, transportation line, or other conveyance, or vehicle bringing such alien to the United States is impracticable.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. REED. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. KERN. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA]. This announcement may stand for the day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-eight Senators have answered to their names. So a quorum is present. The Secretary will state the next committee amendment.

The next amendment of the Committee on Immigration was, in section 2, page 3, line 8, after the word "vehicle," to strike out "or" and insert "of," so as to read:

The tax imposed by this section shall be a lien upon the vessel or other vehicle of carriage or transportation bringing such aliens to the United States, and shall be a debt in favor of the United States against the owner or owners of such vessel or other vehicle, and the payment of such tax may be enforced by any legal or equitable remedy.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, page 3, line 14, after the word "levied," to strike out "on account of aliens who have in accordance with law declared their intention of becoming citizens of the United States or," so as to read:

That the said tax shall not be levied on account of aliens who shall enter the United States after an uninterrupted residence of at least one year immediately preceding such entrance in the Dominion of Canada, Newfoundland, the Republic of Cuba, or the Republic of Mexico, etc.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I have requested, in as courteous a manner as I am able to command, that the chairman of the committee permit this bill to lie over, in order that it may be examined. He has declined to do that. I say again that I do not desire to be put in the attitude of obstructing the consideration of any bill or of obstructing this particular bill, but if a committee insists on forcing action upon a bill without debate, without consideration, and without time for consideration, the only thing left to a Member is to insist upon getting the time in some other way.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I sympathize with the desire of the Senator to have an opportunity to investigate and discuss so important a measure. I have thought it probable that the Senator in charge of the bill would be willing to agree upon a day certain to vote sufficiently late in the session to allow every Senator to have an opportunity to investigate the bill. I inquire if that would be satisfactory to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I do not want to commit myself in regard to the measure at all. I do not know what is in it; I have had no opportunity to ascertain what is in it.

Mr. BORAH. My idea was that if the day to vote was postponed sufficiently long, even though we were not in favor of the bill, we would vote upon it at some time, and that it would be safe to agree upon a day certain to vote if the date were far enough along to enable us to know precisely what we were voting on. I merely suggested that, and thought it might facilitate the consideration of the measure.

Mr. REED. The difficulty about an agreement of that kind with reference to a bill that has not been examined, and with no opportunity afforded for its examination, is that one would be bargaining about a "pig in a poke," speaking of the bill with all due respect. It is one thing to agree on a day certain with reference to a bill that you have examined and the merits of which you understand; it is quite another thing to agree to vote on a particular day with reference to a bill that is not understood and has not been discussed.

I do not like to be put in the embarrassing position of demanding roll calls. I want it fully understood that, if I am doing so, it is because the committee is insisting upon action at this time and under these unusual and remarkable circumstances.

We have been told by the chairman of the committee that all the committee are asking is to consider the committee's amendments. How is any man to understand the importance of a committee amendment who has never read the bill and has had no opportunity to read the bill? How is he to tell whether the amendment is proper or improper until the bill has been examined? Manifestly he can not do so. Therefore it becomes necessary to get time by whatsoever method time can be obtained.

I say, Mr. President, it is a very remarkable spectacle to find a bill brought forward that affects the lives and fortunes of millions of people, that affects for good or bad the entire country, and not a single man rise to advance an argument in favor of the bill; not a single man undertake to make a statement with reference to its contents or the necessity for its enactment; and it is a very singular performance, an unusual performance, to have a bill of this character thrust forward at this period of a session. We were detained here nearly all summer. After a short recess we come back. The first day is given to a few moments confined to the matter of organization and roll call, all business awaiting the message of the President. The second day the President delivers his message, and says not a word with reference to this proposed legislation.

I arrived at the Senate to-day, I think, about seven or eight minutes past 12 o'clock, the hour of convening—I may have entered the Chamber a very few minutes later—and found this bill had been placed, by motion, in the position of unfinished business. I do not think that is the right way to bring forward a measure of this importance—I say it with great respect to the committee—and I do most sincerely trust that we shall not be compelled to gain time by insisting upon every parliamentary right.

So far as I am concerned, when I have had an opportunity to examine this bill, if I have anything to say with reference to it I shall say it, and that will end the matter. If I have nothing to say, I shall be prepared to vote when the vote is reached; but if the bill is to be brought forward in this way and no time given, I shall with very great regret do whatever I am obliged to do in order to get time.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, it is needless for me to repeat what I have already said, but I want to emphasize one fact: There was no attempt made to take snap judgment on the Senate; there was no attempt made to debar any man from discussing the bill. That goes without saying. The committee believed that every Member of this body was more or less familiar with the bill and with its intent and purposes. As I said to the Senator from Missouri in the beginning, and repeat now, the Senate amendments do not touch the vital issue in the bill. They are more or less simply verbal corrections to the general text.

The bill is now before the Senate. It can make what disposition it pleases of the bill. So far as concerns time being given to discuss its merits or demerits, I presume there will be ample time for that; but I do feel that in a way I have been derelict in my duty in not pressing it more vigorously since it has been reported out of our committee. In deference to certain other legislation, however, certain pressure here that seemed insurmountable, I yielded when perhaps I should have made a more strenuous fight. The House had expressed itself time and time again in a nonpartisan way; the Senate had expressed itself upon practically the same bill; and I was laying myself open to criticism here because of what some seemed to think were dilatory tactics or lack of interest in the bill itself.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me a word at this point?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. To be sure.

Mr. LODGE. The bill now under consideration is almost precisely the same as the bill that passed in the last Congress, as the Senator has just stated. That bill was thoroughly discussed in both Houses, was vetoed by President Taft, and was passed by the Senate over his veto. There is no essential change at all in the bill.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I believed it lacked less than 10 votes of passing in the House, also, over the President's veto.

Mr. LODGE. Yes; it passed here over the veto.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I disclaim and am unwilling to be put in the attitude of attempting by indirection to do what I have a right to do directly on this floor. I gave notice before the close of the last session that at this session of Congress I should use every opportunity to bring up this bill and force it to passage. As the Senator from Georgia reminds me, two days before the session closed I gave that notice. I have used no indirection. I am not trying to railroad anything. This bill and all of its contents are more or less familiar to every man on this floor, and I do feel that I have been more or less derelict in my duty as the chairman of a committee in charge of a bill of such importance as this because I have not been more insistent in forcing it to the attention of the Senate.

This morning I came in, and when the President of the Senate announced that morning business was closed I got up and in the regular order moved to take up this bill and proceed to its consideration. The motion was put and carried, and then, when we had gotten into the bill, the Senator from Missouri came in and asked for time. As a matter of course, that is a question for him to decide. My duty, as the chairman of the committee charged with a bill that has been on the calendar for the entire session, is to see that it is given due consideration, and now that it is before the Senate to keep it before the Senate until its final disposition.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Carolina state whether any of his colleagues on the committee have requested him to withhold consent to the request made by the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. They have not. I hope they would not attempt to do such a thing.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I assume that the Senator in his action is attempting to reflect the desires and wishes of the entire committee. As a single member of the committee, I indicated some time since that I think the request of the Senator from Missouri is a very reasonable one and ought to be granted, and I should be surprised to learn that any other member of the committee would not entertain the same view that I have expressed regarding the reasonableness of the Senator's request. No harm can be done. No one will complain that the very able and distinguished chairman of the committee has not done everything in his power to advance the bill. I know he did it at the last session, and I am sure he will do it at this session; but I think, consistently with every effort he desires to make, he might well, so far as it rests with him, yield to the request made by the Senator from Missouri to have this matter simply laid aside temporarily for a day or two, without prejudice to the parliamentary situation.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, so far as the request of the Senator from Missouri is concerned, I repeat that these amendments are not vital. Whether they are accepted or rejected will not change the general meaning and features and principles of the bill. It was in the hope of expediting the general business that I wished to get the matter out of the way. The Senate can either accept or reject the bill, as it sees fit. So far as I am concerned, I shall perhaps from time to time, if the debate justifies it, ask that the bill be temporarily laid aside without prejudice; but as far as I am able, now that the bill is before the Senate, I do not propose that it shall be displaced by any other matter until it is disposed of. I do not propose to have it lose its place as the unfinished business until it is finished.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, possibly we might harmonize the conflicting views and give those who hesitate about voting now an opportunity for further consideration, if they would meet the friends of this measure halfway by a unanimous-consent agreement, fixing a day the latter part of next week, say, upon which we shall vote upon this bill.

There are a number of Senators who are very deeply interested in this measure, who brought it before the Senate a number of times at the last session, both on the floor of the Senate and in the Democratic caucus, and who were seeking to make it the very next business to be considered by the Senate at the last session. On the Thursday before the last session adjourned I had occasion on the floor of the Senate to refer to this measure and my earnest desire to see it pressed to speedy passage, and at that time the Senator from South Carolina, as chairman of the committee, assured the friends of the measure that at the first possible moment he would endeavor to take up the measure and put it before the Senate and keep it before the Senate until it could be acted upon.

I know how rapidly the Senator from Missouri masters any questions upon which he puts his mind. I would not wish to press this bill to a vote until he had had opportunity to give it careful examination. Those of us who are ready to vote are largely influenced by the result of the careful attention we gave to the measure at the last Congress, when it was fully debated, and when we had the satisfaction of passing it, despite the veto of the President; at least, we passed it through the Senate. I think a number of us have been right with the Senator from South Carolina in the purpose to make this measure the first unfinished business of the present session. I know that was the plan before the last session of Congress adjourned. We have at the first opportunity made it the unfinished business. If Senators now desire to have it temporarily laid aside, it seems to me it is as little as they can do to join with that request a unanimous-consent agreement that, say, not later than Friday or Saturday of next week we shall have a vote upon the bill, and continue to vote upon the bill and amendments until it reaches its final passage.

This is not a new matter before the Senate. It is not a new matter to any of the Senators who were here at the last Congress. The great bulk of the matter in this bill is just what we then had before us, and what was quite elaborately discussed upon the floor of the Senate and passed almost unanimously by the Senate. The real issuable feature in this bill, really the feature that is the great issue in this bill, the literacy test, was in the last bill; and with almost unanimity—with, I believe, at least a three-fourths vote—the Senate adopted the literacy test. I am myself cordially for it. I do not know a better plan than its use by which to handle the subject. There are some changes, which it seems to me are not very important, from the bill that we passed before; and surely the Senator from Missouri in two or three days will have all the time he may wish to investigate it. I, for one, would be glad to concede a request that the bill be temporarily laid aside if we could obtain a unanimous-consent agreement to vote upon it not later than the last of next week. If we can not, however, then we are going to consume time on it. This is the short session, and I am not sure that we will not make our best progress by keeping it before the Senate and consuming the time.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question? Does the Senator from Georgia think that the interests of the bill can be prejudiced by having it temporarily laid aside by consent for a day or two, without exacting conditions which, of course, would not be granted?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not know but that they would be granted. My personal view was that they would be. The suggestion is merely that it be temporarily laid aside without losing its place as the unfinished business. What we would object to, speaking for myself alone, would be to having the bill lose its place as the unfinished business.

I confess that I am more interested in this measure than I am in some other measures that will be pressed during the present session of Congress, and I am quite averse to the bill losing its status as the unfinished business. Barring that, if it is not to lose its status as the unfinished business, I think without any injury at all it may be temporarily laid aside for a day or two.

Mr. O'GORMAN. That was the suggestion of the Senator from Missouri. He specifically stated that he had no desire to see the bill lose its parliamentary advantage.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I lost that part of his suggestion.

Mr. REED. I have not the slightest desire to obstruct the passage of this bill by any parliamentary tactics, or by seeking to cause it to lose any of its present advantages. I simply wanted time to examine the bill. I thought there would be ready acquiescence in a request for unanimous consent to lay aside the measure temporarily without prejudice, which is all I have asked. When that has been done, and the time arrives to take it up again, I shall be disposed to do all I can to facilitate its consideration, reserving to myself, of course, the right to take such action as I may deem proper at the time with reference to the merits of the bill or any amendment to it.

I have not tried to displace the bill. I have not asked that, and I do not intend to delay its progress. If it goes over until day after to-morrow, that will give us a day to look at it.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I wish to say to the Senator from Georgia that it is quite an unusual thing, when a Senator makes a request such as the Senator from Missouri has made, not to grant it, where there is evidence on his part that there is to be no effort to delay the measure when he has had an opportunity to familiarize himself with it.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. If the Senator from Utah will allow me, I will say, in reply to the Senator from Missouri, since he has frankly stated that he does not desire to have any other bill take the place of this bill, that if it is according to the rules of the Senate, or if the Senators here will by unanimous consent agree to laying it aside temporarily, and that no other measure shall be made the unfinished business, and state definitely the time at which it shall be taken up——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It will come up to-morrow at 2 o'clock.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. But I want an understanding to that effect, because the rules provide that if another bill, by motion, is taken up and discussed, this bill will be displaced until that bill is disposed of.

Mr. SMOOT. Let me suggest to the Senator right there that the friends of the measure could vote down any other bill that might be presented to the Senate. The matter is entirely in the hands of the Senate. It is impossible to displace this bill. I am ready to vote upon it at this very minute; but I want to say to the Senator from South Carolina that he is perfectly safe in temporarily laying aside the bill without coupling it with the different statements or conditions made by him.

I know that this is virtually the second day of the session, and the Senate has not yet gotten into working order, and I think the request of the Senator from Missouri is a very reasonable one. The Senator can ask unanimous consent that the bill be temporarily laid aside; and if that is not objected to, it becomes the unfinished business.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, just a word. This bill can not be displaced by any other measure, because the Senator knows, as I do that a large majority of the Members of the Senate are in favor of the bill. If the Senator now asks unanimous consent that it be temporarily laid aside, it will come up again to-morrow at 2 o'clock, and the Senator can then make the same request, if he thinks it desirable, and put it over another day; but it will still retain its place as the unfinished business. The Senator will be amply protected in every right under the rules by that procedure.

Mr. SMOOT. Not only that, but I can say to the Senator that I believe a majority of the Senate are in favor of the consideration of this bill, and he can make a motion at any time to take it up.

Mr. GALLINGER. That would not be necessary.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator would be perfectly safe in taking that course.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I have no disposition whatever to be discourteous or to refuse any reasonable request. Therefore, with the distinct understanding that this bill is to be temporarily laid aside, and that no attempt is to be made to take up any other measure——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That can not be done. The friends of the measure will resist any effort to displace it. I think we have the votes.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Very well. Then, with that understanding, I ask that the bill be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PITTMAN in the chair). The Senator from South Carolina requests that the pending bill, H. R. 6060, be temporarily laid aside. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and that course will be taken.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. STONE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 18 minutes spent in executive session, the doors were reopened, and (at 3 o'clock and 37 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, December 10, 1914, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, December 9, 1914.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, we pray for a profounder faith, a greater religious awakening in the hearts of men, that the moral fiber of our being may be increased and enable us to withstand the temptations which surround us and avoid the blighting effects of sin; that we may go forward to the higher civilization, which in our better moments we all long for; that the kingdom of heaven, which millions pray for, may indeed come and unite the world in the bonds of brotherhood; that the clash of arms, the roar of battle, the deadly conflict of hate and revenge may pass forever into the calm of peace and purity on earth as it is in heaven. For Thine is the kingdom and the power and the glory forever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY—CODIFICATION OF PRINTING LAWS.

The SPEAKER. This is Calendar Wednesday, and the unfinished business is the bill H. R. 15902, and the House automatically resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. PAGE] will take the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 15902, with Mr. PAGE of North Carolina in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 15902) to amend, revise, and codify the laws relating to the public printing and binding and the distribution of Government publications.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the pending amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 108, in line 2, strike out the word "five" and insert the word "twenty."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, this is the paragraph of the printing bill providing for the publication of Consular and Trade Reports of the Department of Commerce. The law now provides, I believe, for the publication of not to exceed 5,000 copies for free distribution. I have offered an amendment to make this 20,000 copies. There has been a very large development on the part of the Department of Commerce in our foreign relations in an effort to obtain foreign trade. Their efforts are published largely in the Daily Consular and Trade Reports. I think we ought to have a sufficient number of copies of the reports to furnish information to the people of this country who may wish to engage in foreign trade. They go to great expense in gathering the information. It is desirable to make it known to the people who may engage in foreign trade. I think we might well afford, at not great expense, to increase the number of copies which may be furnished free to the people of this country.

Mr. MURDOCK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. MURDOCK. Will the gentleman explain to me how this present quota is distributed? I recollect receiving a few myself and sending them out when I received them.

Mr. MANN. They are distributed directly from the Department of Commerce, Bureau of Trade Relations, to certain people who are entitled to them, and this bill provides for a restriction of the persons to whom they may be sent. They now sell a certain number, as they are authorized to do, but people do not subscribe to them very much. In former days, a number of years ago, these consular reports were sent out very often upon the request of Members of Congress. Constituents desiring to engage in foreign trade would request the Member of Congress, who would transmit the request to the department, and they were sent out, but that scheme no longer prevails.

Mr. MURDOCK. When did that cease? I know it did cease.

Mr. MANN. I think it ceased when they commenced the daily form instead of the monthly form, but I am not sure about that.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. STAFFORD. I understand the existing practice has no means by which an outside party can purchase these copies as provided in this bill.

Mr. MANN. I do not know; I was under the impression they could.

Mr. STAFFORD. I have been informed through replies of the department that there had been no means of purchasing them.

Mr. BARNHART. I oppose the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois for the reason that the commercial bodies of the United States have already passed favorably on this proposition. The Department of Commerce is now distributing these reports very largely on a sale basis, and it was done for the purpose that the 20,000 that were being furnished were not nearly sufficient to fill the requirements that came to Members of the House from different parts of the country. These trade reports drifted into the hands of all sorts of document collectors. The Department of Commerce realized this. And now to call your attention to the fact that the gentleman from Illinois is hardly representing the opinion of his own constituents, I want to refer to the report of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States under Referendum No. 5, published November 8, 1913. I read from it this statement:

In order to promote efficient and adequate distribution of publications, the Daily Consular and Trade Reports should be sent free of charge only to public officials, libraries, and commercial organizations, and to all other applicants they should be sold practically at cost. Other reports should be sent free only to public officials and commercial organizations, and sold practically at cost to other applicants.

Furthermore, on this proposition I will say that the gentleman from Illinois has 23 commercial organizations in his city, and on this vote the American Association of Refrigeration voted 3 for the abolishment of the free distribution of these documents. The Association of Commerce voted 10; the Board of Trade, 9; the Bureau of Barley and Malt Statistics, 1; Central Supply Association, 1; Garment Manufacturers' Association, 1; Illinois Commercial Federation, 1; Illinois Manufacturers' Association, 6; Industrial Club, 1; International Association of Manufacturing Photo-Engravers, 1; Millinery Jobbers' Association, 1; National Association of Box Manufacturers, 1; National Association of Retail Druggists, 10; National Association of Tanners, 1; National Confectioners' Association of the United States, 3; National Implement and Vehicle Association, 2; National Shoe Wholesalers' Association of the United States, 1; National Slack Cooperage Manufacturers' Association, 1; National Veneer and Panel Manufacturers' Association, 1; Tight Barrel Stave Manufacturers' Association, 1; United Typothetæ of America, 9; Western Cigar Box Manufacturers' Association, 1.

Every single one of these associations voted in favor of the proposition contained in this bill. They did it in their national meeting. The total vote in this National Chamber of Commerce was 624 yeas in favor of the provisions of the bill as against 3 nays.

Mr. TOWNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARNHART. Not just now, but a little later.

Several Members of the House living in industrial centers asked me if it were possible to secure more of these free consular trade reports, and when I informed them that it was up to the Department of Commerce they said they hoped it would be placed on a commercial basis, on a sales basis, for the reason that they could not possibly get enough to supply the demand; that when they sent a report to one man some other man—a curious individual, possibly—would want to have one, and they could not supply him, and therefore it caused trouble; that when they got their quota exhausted there was still a demand for more. And along came these commercial organizations agreeing with the bill and agreeing with the opinion of the Department of Commerce that public officials and secretaries of these organizations should be furnished with a copy, but, further than that, any firm sufficiently interested in promoting their trade should gladly pay the cost of this publication; and that is all the committee is asking in this bill. I trust, gentlemen, for the sake of convenience, for the sake of economy, and for the sake of relieving many Members from embarrassment by reason of the fact that they can not get enough of these to supply the demand, that 5,000 be supplied to the public officials of the country, to regularly recognized commercial organizations, and to the libraries, and that those who want additional copies can get them at cost.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on this amendment is exhausted.

Mr. TOWNER. I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa is recognized.

Mr. TOWNER. I presume that all the Members of Congress receive, as I do, these consular reports from day to day. I presume many of the Members of Congress do as I do—send them out to persons to whom they think they will be interesting, from time to time. And I call the chairman's attention to this matter: At the close of the year I sent to the department asking them to give me a file for the year for the purposes of binding and preservation, and they informed me that they were unable to do so inasmuch as they had not a supply. Does not the chairman of the committee think that the Members of Congress, at least, ought to have a file in order that the copies for the year may be bound and preserved?

Mr. BARNHART. That is exactly what you would get under the provisions of this bill.

Mr. TOWNER. I do not so understand it.

Mr. BARNHART. Yes; it allots 5,000, and if the gentleman from Iowa would make his application to the Department of Commerce he would receive a copy, inasmuch as he is a public official.

Mr. TOWNER. Yes; but we now receive a copy from day to day.

Mr. BARNHART. Yes; but if the gentleman does not keep it, he can not now have a complete file at the end of the year. We receive copies of many other publications, but if they are not retained by us and the supply is exhausted we can not have them bound. Under this provision they now all go to the Department of Commerce, and you get your copy through the courtesy of the Department of Commerce, and others go out according to the recommendation of the various bodies that I have quoted.

Mr. TOWNER. Does not the gentleman know it would be absolutely impossible for a Member of Congress to retain a file of these reports which are issued from day to day? Some of the copies would be lost and it would be impossible to obtain any other copies, according to the gentleman's statement.

Mr. BARNHART. I have not any doubt the gentleman could have them retained.

Mr. TOWNER. Ought we not to have an opportunity to have a file that we could obtain at the close of the year?

Mr. BARNHART. If the gentleman would make the application, they would be retained for him.

Mr. TOWNER. I have told the gentleman that I have made the application and the department has said they could not supply the demand.

Mr. BARNHART. Yes; but he makes the application when the supply is exhausted instead of making it at the beginning of the year. So far as I am concerned I have had very little use for the publication. I have had, as I remember, only three requests for it, and yet I represent one of the greatest manufacturing districts in the United States.

Mr. TOWNER. The point with me is this, and it seems to me other Members will be interested as I am: We send out these daily reports from time to time as we can. It is impossible to preserve them until the end of the year or to the end of the part of the year that constitutes a volume of the publication. But at the end of the year we do want the volume, because we want to preserve it. It is a valuable thing, and we want to have it in our libraries. But under the present arrangement and under the law, as I understand it will be, if we adopt this measure, we shall be unable to obtain a copy for our own use. It seems to me that is entirely unreasonable.

Mr. BARNHART. The gentleman is mistaken about that.

Mr. TOWNER. I think not. If we are entitled to only one copy and it is sent to us from day to day, how can we obtain any others?

Mr. BARNHART. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. TOWNER. Certainly.

Mr. BARNHART. The provision is that it shall be sent to such officials as ask for it. Such is clearly set forth in the bill. So far as I am concerned I do not know that I shall ask for it. I would perhaps for the sake of having it bound and put into my library so long as I am in Congress, but perhaps not otherwise.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the law now provides for the issuance of 20,000 copies of these daily reports or bulletins for free distribution. We appropriated an additional amount of money in the last Congress to increase the work for the commercial attaché service, which is the same thing so far as this work is concerned. The department has recently organized to obtain this information, and yet you propose to close it off. Two dollars and a half a year is the price of these daily consular reports when purchased. Well, you can purchase a daily newspaper that contains ten times as much space for a dollar and a half. People will not buy these reports until they learn about them. Sending one to a commercial organization does no practical good. The members of the organization do not go to the headquarters to read these consular reports. The way to get the trade is to bring close home to the people the opportunities which we have discovered in foreign lands. The only way to do that is to keep hammering it into them. Then they will go after the trade. We ought not to decrease the number from 20,000 copies to 5,000 copies. We ought rather to increase the number now being issued. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. MANN. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois demands a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 53, noes 46.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana demands tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed Mr. BARNHART and Mr. MANN to act as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported ayes 63, noes 68.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 73. PAR. 3. To enable the Director of the Census to compile and publish the Official Register of the United States, the Secretary of the Senate, the Clerk of the House of Representatives, and the head of each executive and judicial department, independent office, and establishment of the Government, in connection with which salaries are paid from the Treasury of the United States, shall, as of the 1st day of July, 1915, and biennially thereafter, supply to the Director of the Census the data required to be published under the provisions of this section, upon forms approved and furnished by him, in due time to permit the publication of the Official Register as herein provided; and no extra compensation shall be allowed to any officer, clerk, or employee of the Bureau of the Census for compiling the Official Register.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, I offer two committee amendments to make the section more complete.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 110, line 23, after the word "Representatives" insert the words "the executive office and judicial."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 110, line 23, after the word "executive" strike out the words "and judicial."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 73. PAR. 4. Of the Official Register there shall be printed and bound a sufficient number of copies for the following distribution to be made by the superintendent of documents: To the President of the United States, 4 copies, 1 copy of which shall be for the library of the Executive Office; to the Vice President, each Senator, Representative, Delegate, and Resident Commissioner, 2 copies, to be delivered to the document room of the Senate and the House of Representatives, respectively; to the Secretary and the Sergeant at Arms of the Senate and the Clerk and the Sergeant at Arms of the House of Representatives, 1 copy each; to the library of the Senate and the House of Representatives, not to exceed 15 copies each; to the Department of State, not to exceed 100 copies; to the Treasury Department, not to exceed 150 copies; to the War Department, not to exceed 50 copies; to the Navy Department, not to exceed 20 copies; to the Department of Justice, not to exceed 30 copies; to the Department of the Interior, not to exceed 200 copies; to the Post Office Department, not to exceed 100 copies; to the Department of Agriculture, not to exceed 25 copies; to the Department of Commerce, not to exceed 150 copies; to the Department of Labor, not to exceed 25 copies; to the Smithsonian Institution, 4 copies; to the Government Printing Office, 4 copies; to the Interstate Commerce Commission, 2 copies; to the Civil Service Commission, not to exceed 20 copies; to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, 1 copy each; to the Public Library of the District of Columbia, 2 copies; to the Pan American Union, 2 copies.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Printing if copies of this Official Register are now sent to the libraries that are official depositories of public documents?

Mr. BARNHART. Yes; they are.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I would like to ask if this section proposes a limited edition of about 2,000 copies of a very elaborate compilation? Are the State libraries to have none?

Mr. BARNHART. Why, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is mistaken about the State libraries having none. The State libraries are supplied through the general distribution which is provided for in a previous section of the bill. They are all provided for, and some States have more than one library.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes; certainly. I wanted information.

Mr. BARNHART. In fact, every depository library is taken care of in the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. So that this paragraph does not limit the number of copies to the number stated here?

Mr. BARNHART. No; that applies to the general features of the bill.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARNHART. Certainly.

Mr. FINLEY. The Library of Congress is provided with more, is it not?

Mr. BARNHART. Oh, yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 75. No report, document, or publication of any kind distributed by or from an executive department or independent office of the Government shall contain any notice that the same is sent with "the compliments" of an officer of the Government or with any special notice that it is so sent, except that a request for an acknowledgment of its receipt may be made.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 112, in line 25, after the word "department," by striking out the word "or" and insert in lieu thereof a comma.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 113, line 1, after the word "office," insert a comma and the words "or establishment."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 77. PAR. 1. No printing or binding shall be done unless authorized by law and necessary to the public business, and each requisition for printing or binding shall cite the specific authority of law for its execution: Provided, That no publication not having to do with its ordinary business transactions shall be printed on the requisition or order of any executive department, independent office, or establishment of the Government unless the same shall have been expressly authorized by Congress.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 113, line 17, after the word "with," strike out the word "its" and insert the word "the."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 113, line 18, after the word "transactions," insert "of his branch of the Government service."

Mr. MANN. That does not make very good grammar. It would read, "that no publication not having to do with its ordinary business transactions of his branch of the Government service shall be printed on the requisition," and so forth.

Mr. BARNHART. The relative pronoun there is certainly misused.

Mr. MANN. The word "his" should be "its" if you follow the rest of the language.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, the amendment would read as follows: "That no publication not having to do with its ordinary business transactions of his branch of the Government service shall be printed on the requisition," and so forth. Now, if we strike out the words "department, independent office, or establishment of the Government," it would read all right.

Mr. MANN. Changing it in that way it would read all right.

Mr. BARNHART. There is another amendment on the desk that does that.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana wish to withdraw his first amendment?

Mr. BARNHART. No; let it stand, and let the Clerk read the other amendment. The two go together.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 113, line 19, strike out the words "executive department, independent office, or establishment" and insert in lieu thereof the word "officer."

Mr. MANN. Has the word "its" been changed to "the" in line 17?

Mr. BARNHART. It has.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the first amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

The question was considered, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment striking out the language in line 19.

The amendment was considered and agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 77. PAR. 2. Binding for Congress, the Executive Office, the executive and judicial departments, independent offices, and establishments of the Government shall be done in paper, plain sheep, skiver, book cloth, buckram, canvas, or other similar material not more expensive than half turkey morocco, the material and style of binding, except as otherwise provided, to be determined by the Public Printer, having proper regard to economy and the purposes for which the work is intended: Provided, That the messages and papers of the President of the United States, manuscripts and portfolios of the State Department, and valuable or rare books and manuscripts for the Library of Congress, may be bound in full morocco when the necessity therefor is certified to the Public Printer by the Secretary to the President, the Secretary of State, or the Librarian of Congress, respectively, but no such binding shall be done for the Library of Congress without the approval of the Joint Committee on Printing: Provided further, That record and account books may be bound in material best adapted to their preservation.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 113, line 23, after the word "office," insert the words "the judiciary."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 113, line 23, after the word "executive," strike out the words "and judicial."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 114, line 1, after the word "half," strike out the word "turkey."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 77. PAR. 3. Each committee or commission of Congress shall be entitled to the binding, for official committee use, of not to exceed 50 copies in all of any Government publication or any manuscript germane to the work of such committee or commission, in material no more expensive than buckram, except as otherwise provided by law: Provided, That one copy of any publication for the official use of any committee or commission may be bound in material no more expensive than half turkey morocco, and an account of all binding for committees shall be kept by the printing clerk of each House, respectively; Provided further, That the Public Printer shall have plainly marked on the cover of every document, report, paper, manuscript, or publication the name of the committee or commission for which such binding is done.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 114, line 24, after the word "half," strike out the word "turkey."

Mr. MANN. Does not the gentleman think that is a violation of the President's neutrality order? Now that Turkey has joined in the European conflict, the first thing we do is to strike a blow at Turkey. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARNHART. It might be viewed from a good many angles. There are other considerations in regard to Turkey, and the committee has duly considered them.

The amendment was considered and agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 77. PAR. 4. The Vice President, each Senator, Representative, Delegate, and Resident Commissioner, the Secretary of the Senate, and the Clerk of the House shall be entitled to the binding, in material no more expensive than half turkey morocco, of but one copy of any Government publication to which he may be entitled, an account of which shall be kept by the printing clerk of each House, respectively; but the Public Printer shall not honor any requisition for such binding which does not specify by name the person or committee for whom the same is ordered, and the provisions of this paragraph shall apply to each of the persons named herein until the convening of the next session of Congress following the expiration of his term of office: Provided, That the Public Printer is hereby authorized to bind at the Government Printing Office any books, maps, charts, or other Government publications upon application of the Vice President, any Senator, Representative, Delegate, or Resident Commissioner upon payment of the actual cost of such binding.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 115, line 10, after the word "half," strike out the word "turkey."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, on page 115, line 23, by striking out the word "payment" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "prepayment."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 78. On and after July 1, 1915, all printing, binding, and blank-book work for Congress, the Executive Office, the judiciary, and every executive department, independent office, and establishment of the Government shall be done at the Government Printing Office, except such work as shall be urgent and necessary to have done elsewhere than in the District of Columbia for the exclusive use of any field service outside of said District, such work as can be done at the several Indian schools for the Office of Indian Affairs, or such work as is otherwise provided for by this act; and no part of any appropriation out of the Treasury of the United States shall be used in payment for printing, binding, and blank-book work done elsewhere than at the Government Printing Office, except as herein provided, unless the act making the appropriation shall specifically so authorize: Provided, That a copy of every bill for such work done by private contractors shall be promptly furnished the Public Printer by the officer who audits the account: Provided further, That no paper or material shall be used at the Government Printing Office in any printing or binding operation unless such paper or material is furnished by the Public Printer as provided for in this act: Provided further, That the Smithsonian Institution and the Pan American Union are authorized to have executed at the Government Printing Office any printing and binding required for their purpose, notwithstanding that payment therefor is to be made from funds other than those appropriated by the Government of the United States: Provided further, That the provisions of this act shall not apply to printing, binding, and blank-book work for the government of the Territories and insular possessions of the United States and the Panama Canal unless such work is done at the Government Printing Office in Washington, D. C.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendments, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 117, after the word "act," in line 6, insert:

Provided, further, That the Public Printer shall execute such printing and binding and blank-book work as shall be ordered by any establishment or officer of the Government authorized to procure the same upon payment of the cost thereof, and all moneys received from such sources shall be deposited or transferred to the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the appropriation for printing and binding for the year in which such work is done, and all sums so received and a description of the work done thereunder shall be set forth in the annual report of the Public Printer.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 117, amend, after the word "Columbia," in line 17, by inserting the words "or to such engraving, printing, and binding as is authorized by law to be done at the Bureau of Engraving and Printing."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 79. PAR. 2. No report, bulletin, or document shall be printed in excess of 2,500 copies of each in any one fiscal year for any executive department, independent office, or establishment of the Government, unless otherwise authorized by law, except that of the annual report of the head of an executive department, independent office, or establishment of the Government, without appendices, there shall be printed in any one fiscal year not to exceed 5,000 pamphlet copies for his distribution, and not to exceed 100 and 500 copies, respectively, for the use of the Senate and House document rooms, to be supplied them in pamphlet form as soon as published: Provided, That the Secretary of War may authorize the printing of such number of copies of the military publications of the War Department as may be necessary for the instruction of the Army and of the National Guard of the various States: Provided further, That the Secretary of Commerce may authorize the printing of such number of copies of the special publications of the Bureau of Corporations and the Bureau of Lighthouses and of census bulletins and reports authorized by law as he may deem for the best interest of the Government: Provided further, That the Civil Service Commission may print not to exceed 20,000 copies of its annual report: Provided further, That the Interstate Commerce Commission may print such number of its annual report and other publications incident to interstate commerce for distribution by said commission as it may deem expedient: Provided further, That publications printed for distribution by any executive department, independent office, or establishment of the Government shall not be bound in material more expensive than buckram: Provided further, That nothing in this paragraph shall be construed to prevent the head of any executive department, independent office, or establishment of the Government from printing such number of copies of laws, rules, regulations, instructions, opinions, decisions, and official notices as may be necessary to the proper administration thereof.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 119, line 7, after the word "than," strike out the word "buckram" and insert the word "cloth."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, is not that making a reduction in binding so as to practically make a lot of these bound documents valueless?

Mr. BARNHART. It is the present law. They are bound in cloth instead of buckram, which is a higher priced material than cloth.

Mr. MANN. I supposed a good many of them were now bound in buckram.

Mr. BARNHART. Probably some of these are, but the department heads have said that cloth would be entirely satisfactory, and it would effect quite a saving.

Mr. MANN. Personally, I think a cloth-bound volume of a Government publication is just wasting that much binding. It is no better than a paper binding and of no value if you keep it very long.

Mr. BARNHART. If they are bound now in buckram, they are bound in direct violation of existing law. Cloth is satisfactory to the heads of the departments.

Mr. MANN. A cloth-bound Government publication is no better than a paper-bound Government publication.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 81. PAR. 1. A division of publications shall be established in each executive department, independent office, and establishment of the Government, and under the immediate control of the head thereof: Provided, That there shall also be a division of publications in the Weather Bureau: Provided further, That nothing in this section shall be held to apply to the printing and distribution of orders, circulars, changes in regulations and manuals, bulletins, and blank forms for the Army, the Navy, or the Marine Corps, or of pamphlets pertaining to ordnance and ordnance material of the Army.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 120, line 25, and page 121, line 1, after the word "department," strike out "independent office and" and insert the words "and in each independent."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 81. PAR. 2. The distribution of publications and all printing and binding for each executive department, independent office, or establishment of the Government and the Weather Bureau shall be done under the supervision of its respective division of publications. It shall be the duty of the chief of such division to require that manuscripts to be printed are properly prepared, edited, and indexed, and that all unnecessary or unauthorized matter and illustrations are excluded therefrom, to transmit to and receive from the Public Printer all matter for printing and binding, to prepare all requisitions upon the Public Printer for such work and keep an account of the estimates and charges therefor, together with the condition of all funds available and used for printing and binding, to distribute all blank books and forms and all publications for official use the distribution of which is not otherwise provided for by this act, and to prevent unnecessary duplication in the public printing and binding and the distribution of Government publications and to call such duplication on the part of other branches of the Government to the attention of his superior officer, who shall endeavor to secure a discontinuance of the same or make a report thereon to the Joint Committee on Printing. The chief of each division of publications shall make a detailed report of its work for each fiscal year to the head of his respective department, independent office, or establishment of the Government, who shall transmit the same annually to Congress. Said report shall also contain a detailed statement of the number of copies of each publication received and distributed for the preceding five years, and the number on hand. The chief of each division of publications shall also perform such other duties as may be required of him by the head of his respective department, independent office, or establishment of the Government.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 121, line 11, after the word "department," by striking out "independent office, or" and inserting "and each independent."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 122, lines 9 and 10, after the word "department," strike out the comma and the words "independent office."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 122, lines 16 and 17, after the word "department," strike out the comma and the words "independent office."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 82. When any executive department, independent office, or establishment of the Government shall require printing or binding to be done, requisition shall be made on the Public Printer by the head of such department, independent office, or establishment of the Government, who may request the Public Printer to furnish an estimate of its cost by the principal items, and upon the completion of said work the Public Printer shall place the cost thereof, to be ascertained as provided in this act, to the debit of the appropriation or allotment of appropriation to which it pertains: Provided, That no printing or binding shall be charged to any appropriation or allotment of appropriation other than that for the fiscal year in which the work is done: Provided further, That for the purpose of furnishing estimates and computing and charging the products of the Government Printing Office, the Public Printer shall prescribe a uniform schedule of charges annually to be effective when approved by the Joint Committee on Printing, which schedule shall be based on all expenditures from all appropriations made under the public printing and binding, except appropriations for salaries, stores, and general expenses in and for the office of the superintendent of documents, so that the total charges for work executed shall not be less than the total amount actually expended from all of said appropriations: Provided further, That the Public Printer shall furnish the head of every executive department, independent office, and establishment of the Government, and the printing clerks of the Senate and the House, respectively, with a copy of each schedule of charges as soon as the same may become effective.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 122, line 24, after the word "and," strike out the words "upon the completion of said work."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 123, line 11, after the word "appropriations," strike out the words "made under" and insert the word "for."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 123, line 12, after the word "binding," strike out the word "except" and insert "including salaries of office force and payments for holidays and leaves of absence for the Government Printing Office, and excepting."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 123, line 16, after the word "appropriations," strike out the remainder of the section and insert the words "in any fiscal year."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 84. Heads of the executive departments, independent offices, and establishments of the Government and the superintendent of documents are authorized to exchange their publications for such other Government publications as may be required by them when the same can be done to the advantage of the public service: Provided, That no executive department, independent office, or establishment of the Government shall transmit any publications to any other executive department, independent office, or establishment of the Government except upon request of the latter, or in accordance with sections 62 and 65 of this act.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 124, line 17, after the word "with," strike out the words "sections 62 and 65 of."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 85. The Postmaster General shall contract, for a period not exceeding four years, for envelopes, stamped or otherwise, designed for sale to the public, or for use by any executive department, independent office, or establishment of the Government, and may contract for them to be plain or with printed matter as may be prescribed by the officer making the requisition therefor, but no envelopes shall be sold by the Government containing any lithographing or engraving, except the stamp, or any printing or advertisement, except a printed request to return the letter to the writer: Provided, That the Public Printer shall contract for all envelopes required for the public printing at the Government Printing Office as provided for in section 5 of this act, said envelopes to correspond in quality to the standards of paper as fixed upon by the Joint Committee on Printing; and this provision shall become effective on the 1st day of July, 1915, until which time the departments, offices, and establishments of the Government may continue to furnish envelopes to the Public Printer as heretofore.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the section.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee makes the point of order against the section. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, this is a bill that purports to amend, revise, and codify the laws relating to the public printing and binding and the distribution of Government publications. Section 85, I think, is not germane to the subject, because it provides that—

The Postmaster General shall contract for a period not exceeding four years for envelopes, stamped or otherwise, designed for sale to the public, or for use for any executive department, independent office, or establishment of the Government, and may contract for them to be plain or with printed matter, as may be prescribed by the officer making the requisition therefor.

It is not germane to a bill of this character to attempt to control the administrative conduct of an entire department—the Post Office Department. It is not the province of any printing law to prohibit the Postmaster General from doing that which the law permits him to do now—to contract for any period he sees fit for envelopes, stamped or otherwise, designed for sale to the public—and it occurs to me that an attempt to control by legislation the acts of the Post Office Department in the performance of a duty that is conferred upon that department expressly by law is not germane to the subject of this bill—to amend and revise the printing laws. Secondly, I object to this section because of the absence of jurisdiction of the Committee on Printing to present for the consideration of the House the question involved in section 85. The rule and the law fixes the jurisdiction of the Committee on Printing and how far it may act in the control of Government printing and how far it may not act as a joint committee. The law provides that the Postmaster General shall make the contracts for envelopes, stamped envelopes and otherwise, and it is within the jurisdiction of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads to say what contracts shall be made, the extent of the contracts, and whether the envelopes shall be stamped or not stamped, regardless of the question of printing. Therefore I insist that this committee, in reporting this section to the House, have encroached upon the province and jurisdiction of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads and that the House can not entertain this section as presented by the Committee on Printing.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, in reply to the argument of the gentleman from Tennessee I desire to say that this bill is to amend, revise, and codify the existing printing laws. The present printing act carries in section 96, under date of January 12, 1895, and under date of June 26, 1906, practically these same provisions. If the Joint Committee on Printing and the Committees on Printing of the two Houses have no jurisdiction over the printing of the Post Office Department, then manifestly they have no jurisdiction over any printing of the Government.

Mr. MOON. Does the gentleman insist that he has the right to say what shall be stamped or not stamped, the number of envelopes that shall be contracted for, stamped and unstamped, and that the Government Printer may do it?

Mr. BARNHART. Anything that has to do with public printing the Committee on Printing insists comes within its jurisdiction. As a matter of fact, under the present arrangement the Postmaster General recognizes the right of the Joint Committee on Printing to specify the kinds of paper that he uses in all the printing of the department except that of envelopes alone. He recognizes the kind of paper which shall be used, and the Public Printer, with approval of the joint committee, furnishes the paper for the printing of the money orders in the Post Office Department. The Postmaster General recognizes the provision, and the attorney for the Post Office Department recognizes it as being authorized by law.

Mr. MOON. That is simply a contract; that is not law authorizing that?

Mr. BARNHART. Well, it is a recognition by the Post Office Department that the Joint Committee on Printing and the Public Printer has to do with the stock which is used by the Postmaster General, all combined under the general head of the duties of the Public Printing Department. Mr. Chairman, if this law is wrong now, if this section is wrong as it is presented, it has been an infringement heretofore upon the rights and privileges of the Postmaster General. If it is wrong now, it is certainly an elimination of all the functions of the Joint Committee on Printing and the Public Printer, because it would take from the Public Printer and the Joint Committee on Printing the right to specify what kind of paper, what kind of printing, and how it shall be done, all of which would be contrary to existing law.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the bill now pending before the House is a bill reported from the Committee on Printing without previous reference to the committee. It was not a bill which had been introduced in the House and referred by the House to the committee, but it is a bill which the committee itself has reported to the House. It has that authority to report that bill to the House, and it only had authority to report a bill containing items over which it had jurisdiction, so that if it did not have jurisdiction of this subject matter it is not too late to make the point of order. If the bill had been introduced through the basket and referred to the committee, I assume that probably it would be too late to make the point of order to any portion of a bill which was referred by the House to a committee and reported back. Now, the rule provides:

All proposed legislation or orders touching printing shall be referred to the Joint Committee on Printing on the part of the House.

Paragraph 14 of Rule XI provides:

That to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads shall be referred all matters relating to the post office and post roads, including appropriations for their support.

Now, what is the pending paragraph? A portion of it relates to printing by contract, and probably would be in order on this bill as a matter in reference to printing; but here is a provision in the paragraph, beginning in line 25, page 124:

But no envelopes shall be sold by the Government containing any lithographing or engraving, except the stamp, or any printing or advertisement, except a printed request to return the letter to the writer.

That is not a paragraph relating to printing. It is not legislation upon the subject of printing. It is purely a post-office matter. It is forbidding certain things. It forbids the Government to sell certain envelopes. It is not a matter which would be referred to the Committee on Printing if it were introduced in the House through the basket as a bill. If a bill had been introduced on this subject, it would be sent to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, because that committee would have jurisdiction of that subject, not as a matter relating to printing, because this does not relate to printing, but as a matter relating to the administration of the Post Office Department, to which it does relate, and hence, in my opinion, the Committee on Printing voluntarily reporting a bill to the House containing this item was without jurisdiction to include this paragraph in the bill.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. BARNHART. In the event this section would be stricken out of the bill and the bill should become a law, where would that leave the Government Printing Office in its relation to the Postmaster General?

Mr. MANN. It would leave it where it is now, but I do not know where that is.

Mr. BARNHART. There would be no law at all.

Mr. MOON. Yes; there would be.

Mr. BARNHART. So far as the relation to the Government Printing Office is concerned there would be no law.

Mr. MANN. The Government Printing Office does not print these now, as I understand. I am not sure but that under the other provisions of the bill they could have them printed at the Government Printing Office. I am not speaking of the printing end of it.

Mr. BARNHART. This section is already in the general printing law of the country, and if you eliminate it you remove from the Postmaster General all responsibility to the Government Printing Office and the Joint Committee on Printing. It releases him entirely from responsibility.

Mr. MANN. According to the gentleman's contention, if we keep it out of the bill, we cut out all law on the subject, and the Postmaster General could not legally print any envelopes of this kind.

Mr. BARNHART. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. That might be desirable.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I want to say that there would be no trouble about that. The Post Office Department does not have to rely on the law under this printing section which the gentleman has. Under the general law it has full power. It has not been 10 hours since we have passed upon this very question in the committee, so far as the manufacture and sale of stamps is concerned. There is no trouble as to the law, because you do not give this committee jurisdiction. Let us see what attitude the department would be in. I am speaking of the partial merits of the case. Suppose the contention of the gentleman was right, then every form that is used in the Post Office Department, every particle of printing that is done there, would have to fall under the jurisdiction of the Committee on Printing. A large amount of this printing is done elsewhere. This would be the trouble, namely, that the Committee on Printing would assume jurisdiction, control, and dictation in a matter of administration for the Post Office Department, which is a senseless and ridiculous proposition to my mind.

Mr. BARNHART. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOON. Yes.

Mr. BARNHART. The committee is simply trying to get information on this point of order, and I would like to have the attention of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] as I read this extract.

Mr. MOON. You wanted to ask me a question.

Mr. BARNHART. I wanted to ask for your opinion as to what would occur by the repeal of the section. This is what is contained in section 96, enacted January 12, 1895:

The Postmaster General shall contract for all envelopes, stamped or otherwise, designed for sale to the public, or for use by his own or other departments, and may contract for them to be plain or with such printed matter as may be prescribed by the department making requisition therefor: Provided, That no envelope furnished by the Government shall contain any business address or advertisement.

In the event the point of order is sustained, what becomes of the general printing law?

Mr. MOON. The general law and power of the department remains. You are not going to repeal it if we can keep you from doing it. But for the purpose of determining whether this committee had the power or jurisdiction, or not, that question is utterly immaterial itself. Here is a committee that is clothed with the power to handle these questions, and is handling them from day to day and from term to term, and here is another that assumes jurisdiction over the question, and proposes that the department shall not even buy or advertise for anything that is to be printed in any way without the consent and dictation of that committee. It is going outside of its province and power and authority under the rules and the general law. This is the first opportunity to complain of the assumed jurisdiction on the part of the committee that we have had. General reservations and points of order and exceptions to this bill were made when it was introduced, but a point of order could not be made until now. Now, I think it is very clear that this is a matter that falls strictly within the jurisdiction of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads and not of the Committee on Printing. I thought the gentleman from Illinois made a very clear statement in support of the position that we take.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] makes his point of order as to the germaneness of this particular provision in the bill, and upon that point made by the gentleman the germaneness of a proposition applies only to an amendment, under the practice of the House, that is proposed to a bill. He also bases his point of order on the right of jurisdiction of the Committee on Printing as to this proposition. If this bill had been introduced in the House through the basket in the usual way, and had been referred to the Committee on Printing and no exception had been taken to that, the point of order would come too late, but no opportunity having been given for making a point of order as to the jurisdiction of committees as touching this particular proposition since this bill was reported to the House from the Committee on Printing, the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. BARNHART. A parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BARNHART. The committee does not want to object to the ruling already made, but the Chair bases his ruling on the assumption that this bill came from another body. That is erroneous. This bill that is now under consideration was introduced in lieu of one that had been introduced in a regular way in the same session of Congress theretofore, and it contained the identical paragraph on which the Chair made his ruling.

Mr. MOON. And if it had been contained in that bill and another committee had jurisdiction of the subject matter, it would have gone out on a point of order when made.

The CHAIRMAN. So far as that statement of the Chair is concerned, the Chair will state to the gentleman from Indiana that the bill was reported in lieu of another bill that had already been reported from the Committee on Printing; and with that modification the decision of the Chair will stand, and the point of order is sustained on the question of jurisdiction. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 86. "An act providing for the public printing and binding and the distribution of public documents," approved January 12, 1895, and all acts and resolutions, or parts of acts or resolutions, amendatory thereof, or by the said act amended or superseded; and all acts and resolutions, or parts of acts and resolutions, inconsistent with the provisions of this act, are hereby repealed: Provided, That this act shall become effective on the 1st day of July, 1915.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 125, line 21, after the word "repealed," strike out the remainder of the section and insert a period.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, as to section 86, on page 125, I offer an amendment to the effect that that section be numbered "85" instead of "86."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Page 125, line 14, strike out the figures "86" and insert "85."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill and amendments to the House, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. PAGE of North Carolina, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 15902) to amend, revise, and codify the laws relating to the public printing and binding and the distribution of Government publications, had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them in gross. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BARNHART, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

CALL OF COMMITTEES.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the next committee.

The Clerk proceeded with the call of committees.

Mr. MANN (when the Committee on Elections No. 2 was called). Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present. The House ought to be informed that the House has finished this printing codification bill, so that the other committees would know.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] makes the point of no quorum. Evidently there is not a quorum present.

CALL OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER. Two hundred and ninety-one Members have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The doors were opened.

The SPEAKER. With the permission of the House, the Chair desires to make a suggestion to those present, and that is that if they do not want an extra session next year they had better remain in their seats. [Laughter and applause.] That is the only way in which we can avoid it. The Clerk will proceed with the call of committees.

EXEMPTION FROM INTERNAL-REVENUE TAX.

Mr. UNDERWOOD (when the Committee on Ways and Means was called). Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the bill H. R. 12303 on the Union Calendar.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12303) to amend section 3246 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, this is a small bill about which I do not think there is any contest. It is a unanimous report, and I ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 3246 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended by section 5 of the act of March 1, 1879 (20 Stats., p. 327), be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding thereto the following:

"Nor shall any special tax be imposed upon manufacturing chemists or flavoring extract manufacturers for recovering tax-paid alcohol or spirituous liquors from dregs or marc of percolation or extraction, if said recovered alcohol or spirituous liquors be again used in the manufacture of flavoring extracts."

So that said section 3246 of the Revised Statutes of the United States shall read as follows:

"SEC. 3246. Nothing in this chapter shall be construed to impose a special tax upon vintners who sell wine of their own growth, or manufacturers who sell wine produced from grapes grown by others, at the place where the same is made or at the general business office of such vintner or manufacturer: Provided, That no vintner or manufacturer shall have more than one office for the sale of such wine that shall be exempt from special tax under this act; nor shall any special tax be imposed upon apothecaries as to wines or spirituous liquors which they use exclusively in the preparation or making-up of medicines.

"Nor shall any special tax be imposed upon manufacturing chemists or flavoring extract manufacturers for recovering tax-paid alcohol or spirituous liquors from dregs or marc of percolation or extraction, if said recovered alcohol or spirituous liquors be again used in the manufacture of flavoring extracts."

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the report be read in my time.

The report [by Mr. KITCHIN] was read, as follows:

The Committee on Ways and Means, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 12303) to exempt flavoring-extract manufacturers from the payment of the internal revenue tax for reclaiming alcohol—

A bill to amend section 3246 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended by section 5 of the act of March 1, 1879.

Be it enacted, etc., That section 3246 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended by section 5 of the act of March 1, 1879 (20 Stat., 327), be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding thereto the following:

"Nor shall any special tax be imposed upon manufacturing chemists or flavoring-extract manufacturers for recovering tax-paid alcohol or spirituous liquors from dregs or marc of percolation or extraction, if said recovered alcohol or spirituous liquors be again used in the manufacture of flavoring extracts."

So that said section 3246 of the Revised Statutes of the United States shall read as follows:

"SEC. 3246. Nothing in this chapter shall be construed to impose a special tax upon vintners who sell wine of their own growth, or manufacturers who sell wine produced from grapes grown by others, at the place where the same is made or at the general business office of such vintner or manufacturer: Provided, That no vintner or manufacturer shall have more than one office for the sale of such wine that shall be exempt from special tax under this act; nor shall any special tax be imposed upon apothecaries as to wines or spirituous liquors which they use exclusively in the preparation or making up of medicines.

"Nor shall any special tax be imposed upon manufacturing chemists or flavoring-extract manufacturers for recovering tax-paid alcohol or spirituous liquors from dregs or marc of percolation or extraction if said recovered alcohol or spirituous liquors be again used in the manufacture of flavoring extracts"— having considered the same, report thereon with the recommendation that it do pass.

The amendment provided for in this measure merely extends to manufacturers of flavoring extracts the same rights and privileges now enjoyed by wholesale drug houses and manufacturing chemists to distill from their marc alcohol already used without requiring them to pay a tax on the still used in the operation. The reuse is an incident of the business, and the alcohol so recovered is not of a character that would permit of its introduction in any other business. The amount remitted involves a curtailment of approximately $600 in Government revenues. The Secretary of the Treasury reports on this amendment as follows:

"In addition to placing beyond controversy a right which is conceded by this department to attach under existing law, goes further and authorizes manufacturing chemists or flavoring-extract manufacturers to recover alcohol or spirituous liquors from dregs or marc of percolation or extraction to be again used in the manufacture of flavoring extracts without liability to special tax as rectifiers. As it is the understanding of this department that, while such reused alcohol has to some extent been refined or purified over its previous condition, it can not be so perfectly refined or purified that it may again be used on the open market in competition with ordinary spirits, this department will offer no objection to the passage of the bill."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. UNDERWOOD, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

COMPENSATION OF THE COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS, OMAHA.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the bill H. R. 6867 on the Union Calendar.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6867) to increase and fix the compensation of the collector of customs for the customs collection district of Omaha.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, this bill is on the Union Calendar. It is to correct a clerical error. It is a unanimous report and is recommended by the department, and I ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the compensation of the collector of customs for the customs collection district of Omaha shall be increased from $2,500 per annum, as provided in the plan of reorganization of the customs service promulgated by the President on March 3, 1913, to $3,500 per annum, and that compensation at the said rate of $3,500 per annum shall be paid to the said collector of customs for the whole of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, this bill is to fix the salary of the collector of customs at Omaha. There was a mistake made when President Taft made his order fixing the salaries generally throughout the United States. The Treasury Department has said that this salary ought to be $3,500, but it was fixed by this order at $2,500. The House can readily recognize the fact that $2,500 is a powerfully low salary to fix for a collector of customs of a town the size of Omaha. This is to correct the clerical error and make it $3,500 instead of $2,500.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does this provide for the payment of back salary?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That is a question for the gentleman's committee.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, no; it is not. If I caught the reading correctly, this bill provides that the compensation shall be paid for the entire fiscal year of 1914. I do not think we ought to pay this increased rate prior to the time this bill becomes a law.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman from New York yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman will remember that we reorganized the collection districts.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; but a collector was appointed to this office at the salary fixed.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from New York is mistaken. The collector was in the office before the salary was changed, and this salary was fixed through a clerical error.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But that collector has gone out since that time.

Mr. MANN. No; it is the same collector. The salary was cut down by a clerical error.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It was cut down from what he had been receiving, anyway.

Mr. MANN. It was cut down from what he had been receiving; yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will ask the Clerk to report again that part of the bill which provides for the payment of the salary.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will give the gentleman a copy of the bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I wish to call the attention of the gentleman from Alabama to the fact that this bill provides that compensation shall be paid at the rate of $3,500 per annum for the whole of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914. That would be up to the 30th of last June, and then, from that time until this bill becomes a law, he would get paid at the rate of $2,500 a year.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is the effect of the bill as it now reads. I will move to strike that part out. The gentleman can see that as this bill is now worded he is to be paid at the rate of $3,500 up to the 30th of June, 1914, and that from July 1, 1914, until the time the bill takes effect the salary would still be $2,500.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will state to the gentleman that this bill, of course, was introduced some time ago.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I understand that.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It was expected to be passed some time ago, but this is the first opportunity we have had to call it up. I will say further that we have been very liberal in the matter. The present occupant of the office is a Republican, who has been holding it all of the time.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I had hoped that he might go out when we cut the salary down. [Laughter.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The situation is simply this: When President Taft made his order in this matter, through a purely clerical error this man's salary was cut to twenty-five hundred dollars a year when it ought to have been thirty-five hundred dollars a year. He had been receiving the higher salary before that time.

The Treasury Department, I understand, assured him that it would recommend that the salary be placed back where it was, and he went on holding the office under those circumstances. I do not know whether he would have held the office regardless of that assurance or not. He probably would, but, nevertheless, it was cut down through a mistake, and there is no question in the world that $3,500 is not an unreasonable salary to pay the collector of customs at Omaha. It is the absolute recommendation of the Treasury Department, and there is no question about the fact that when the order of President Taft was made it was simply and purely a clerical mistake through which this man's salary was cut to $2,500. I see no reason why the man should not have the salary.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will suggest to the gentleman from Alabama that if he thinks he should be paid at the rate of $3,500 this part of the bill to which I refer should be amended.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will be very glad to amend that.

Mr. MANN. It ought to cover the expired portion of the fiscal year 1915.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Why not make it read "shall be paid at the rate of $3,500 from March 3, 1913"?—although I would like to add also a proviso that this Republican either resign or be removed peremptorily from the office. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. Privately, and not for publication, I might say to the gentleman from New York that I think the chances are that a successor would have been appointed to this office in place of the present incumbent if it had not been for this clerical mistake, which the Treasury Department, as I believe, thought warranted his remaining in office at least until this mistake was corrected.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, I have not anything against any Republican retiring to private life, but would Godspeed them all from public life. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. Oh, the wish is father to the thought, but the tide is running the other way, I will say to my friend.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, no; it is only a temporary lull.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend by striking out, in lines 10 and 11, after the word "customs," the words "for the whole of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914," and inserting in place thereof the words "from and after the 3d day of March, 1913."

Mr. MANN. I think that should be July 1, 1913.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That is correct.

Mr. MANN. The reorganization took effect July 1.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That is correct. It should read "from and after the 30th day of June, 1913."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out, in lines 10 and 11, the following language: "for the whole of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914," and insert in lieu thereof the following: "from and after June 30, 1913."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the committee amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 7, strike out the figures "$4,500" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$3,500," and in line 9, strike out the figures "$4,500" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$3,500."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. UNDERWOOD, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS, LAREDO DISTRICT, TEXAS.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I call up House resolution 570 for consideration at this time.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 570.

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to transmit to the House of Representatives all papers or copies thereof and all facts in his possession with reference to the conduct of the collector of customs of the Laredo district, in the State of Texas, as shown by all reports and papers received at the Treasury Department within the last 60 days.

With the following amendment:

Line 2, after the word "directed," insert the words "if not incompatible with the public interest."

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I will ask to have the report read.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes.

Mr. MANN. The latter part of the resolution reads:

As shown by all reports and papers received at the Treasury Department within the last 60 days.

Of course, if that be left in the resolution, it will not produce what the author of the resolution had in mind.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I had overlooked that, and in view of that fact, and of the further fact that I do not see the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] present in the Chamber at this moment, I will withdraw the resolution for the present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama withdraws the resolution. Has the gentleman any more business from his committee?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, that is all I desire to call up at this time.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the committees.

ADDITIONAL JUDGE, SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF GEORGIA.

Mr. WEBB (when the Committee on the Judiciary was called). Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill H. R. 17869, providing for the appointment of an additional district judge for the southern district of the State of Georgia.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States shall appoint an additional district judge for the southern district of the State of Georgia, by and with the consent of the Senate, who shall reside in the said district and shall possess the same qualifications and have the same power and jurisdiction and receive the same salary now prescribed by law in respect of the present district judge therein.

SEC. 2. That whenever a vacancy shall occur in the office of the district judge for the southern district of the State of Georgia senior in commission such vacancy shall not be filled, and thereafter there shall be but one district judge in said district.

SEC. 3. That the senior circuit judge of the circuit in which the southern district of Georgia lies shall make all necessary orders for the division of business and the assignment of cases for trial in said district between the several district judges therein.

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that this bill be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. WEBB. Then, Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman from Illinois if we can agree on a time in which we can dispose of the bill? I ask unanimous consent——

Mr. MANN. I do not think this side is likely to take up much time, but I do not know how much time my friend over there may desire——

Mr. WEBB. Very little over here—30 minutes or so.

Mr. MANN. I do not know how much time my friend from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP] may desire.

Mr. WEBB. I do not know whether the gentleman is going to speak on the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair suggests the gentleman has never made his motion.

Mr. WEBB. I thought we automatically went into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The House automatically resolves itself into the committee, and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] will take the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 17869, with Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 17869, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 17869) providing for the appointment of an additional district judge for the southern district of the State of Georgia.

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States shall appoint an additional district judge for the southern district of the State of Georgia, by and with the consent of the Senate, who shall reside in the said district and shall possess the same qualifications and have the same power and jurisdiction and receive the same salary now prescribed by law in respect of the present district judge therein.

SEC. 2. That whenever a vacancy shall occur in the office of the district judge for the southern district of the State of Georgia senior in commission such vacancy shall not be filled, and thereafter there shall be but one district judge in said district.

SEC. 3. That the senior circuit judge of the circuit in which the southern district of Georgia lies shall make all necessary orders for the division of business and the assignment of cases for trial in said district between the several district judges therein.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to take up the time of the committee to make an elaborate discussion of this bill, because its merits are set out fully in the report, which sometimes it is valid to presume we have all read and it is fair in this case to presume it. It is not a long report, but in brief the reasons why we have reported this measure unanimously, both Republicans and Democrats uniting in asking that this additional judgeship be made, is that the judgeship is needed. I have been here 12 years, and I have seen a number of these judgeships created. I have supported some and opposed others. I know I have opposed the creation of a new judge in my own circuit, because I did not think it was needed, and I have supported some in other circuits because I thought they were needed. But during that 12 years, Mr. Chairman, I do not think I have seen a more meritorious bill than this, so far as the creation of a new judgeship is concerned. The State of Georgia is the biggest State east of the Mississippi River in area. It is a large State in population. The southern district of Georgia, where this new judgeship is proposed to be created, is composed of 76 counties and has something more than a million—to be accurate, 1,354,000—population. Florida, with 700,000 population, as against Georgia's 2,609,000 population, has two judges. Alabama, with 450,000 less population than Georgia, has three district judges. Georgia has but two district judges, and this bill does not create an additional permanent judgeship.

The southern district is composed of five divisions, and the eastern division of the southern district runs clear across the big State of Georgia and takes in the entire coast line, including the important seaports of Savannah and Brunswick, and has a great deal of maritime work to do. In order to give a basis on which to form an idea as to the extent of this admiralty work, which this court is called upon to dispose of in addition to the regular run of litigation, we call attention to the fact that Savannah is the largest port for the export of cotton on the Atlantic seaboard and the second largest in the world; it is the largest naval-stores port in the world, and ranked fourth in general exports in the whole country for the year ending June 30, 1912. Courts are held at Albany, Augusta, Macon, Valdosta, and Savannah, five big cities in which there is much litigation, and I do not think that a strong, young, vigorous man could do the work that is required in this southern district. This district has 100,000 more population than the northern district, and instead of having a strong, healthy, active judge, Judge Speer, the presiding judge in this southern district, is a man whose health, as a matter of common knowledge, has been extremely bad for the last five, six, or seven years; so bad that he has found it necessary to leave his district every summer and go to the mountains of Georgia or North Carolina and not return until November or December. It is further known that we passed a resolution last June a year ago authorizing an investigation of the conduct of Judge Speer to determine whether we should ask the Senate to impeach him. The committee had that resolution under consideration for a year or more, and during that time Judge Speer did no work whatever in his district. He did not feel that he should do work while his conduct was under investigation. In the meantime the work was piling up.

The work in this district has grown as its population and wealth have increased. It has also been increased by the new equity rules promulgated by the Supreme Court. Rule 46 of the new rules makes a wide departure from the old equity practice in providing that the testimony of witnesses shall be taken orally, save in matters of account, in which case a refereuce to a master is provided for by rule 59. This imposes upon the judge of the district court a much greater burden than hitherto existed, where it had been the universal practice to have the testimony taken by a master.

Under the new rules it is also contemplated that the judge of each district court shall hold a motion day once each month in each division of his district. On account of the fact that the courts in this district are so far apart, it must necessarily follow that at least one week out of each month will be devoted to this purpose if the rule is complied with.

Hon. George W. Wickersham, then Attorney General, did his best to relieve the congestion of work in this district, and designated Judges Grubb and Sheppard to go into the southern district and help out. That helped temporarily, but the cases have piled up until there are between 500 and 700 cases on the dockets now. If he was a vigorous young judge, he could not clear up this docket within a reasonable time. It is impossible for Judge Speer to do it. He is very frail and weak, and over 66 years old now, and we recommend the appointment of this additional judge, because the business of the district demands it. The lawyers of the district, representing the several parties, all want it. The dockets are crowded, and the cases ought to be heard. Some of our friends from Georgia feel we should create a new judge entirely for Georgia, but the committee did not take that view of it. We simply create this judge and provide that when Judge Speer retires or resigns or passes away by natural causes that his successor shall not be appointed, so this is just a temporary measure to relieve the congested condition of the docket which is in a very lamentable condition at present, as Attorney General McReynolds wrote the committee some four or five months ago.

I have a letter here from the then Attorney General, Mr. McReynolds, in which he makes the statement that the condition of business in the southern district of Georgia is lamentable. The committee is unanimous in its report. I could give you further argument in favor of the creation of this judgeship. I am frank in saying I have never seen a more meritorious proposition presented to the House. It ought to be passed for the purpose of facilitating business. There is no judge there who could clean up the docket inside the next four or five years, if he should start to work now.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from North Carolina a question. Is not the reason for the introduction of this bill to have litigants escape Judge Speer's court?

Mr. WEBB. Oh, no, Mr. Chairman. That is the first suggestion I have ever heard of that kind in my life.

Mr. CULLOP. Well, has there not been complaint in regard to his manner of holding court?

Mr. WEBB. Universally.

Mr. CULLOP. Universally?

Mr. WEBB. Yes, sir.

Mr. CULLOP. Then one of the objects is to have the litigants escape?

Mr. WEBB. Not at all. The litigants in his court have no more cases there——

Mr. CULLOP. The others keep away from the court because of his manner of holding court and his treatment of cases and litigants?

Mr. WEBB. There are between 500 and 700 litigants there now who brought their cases there in his court. They could not bring them elsewhere.

Mr. CULLOP. I notice there is not an extraordinary number set out in this report that would make a docket so that a court could not dispatch the business before him readily. The number of cases is not so large.

Mr. WEBB. As I said a while ago, if we had a strong, vigorous, active judge he might clean up the docket there in three or four years. The maritime business is big in Savannah, and ought to be disposed of readily, because vessels are transient. They have not tried a civil case before a jury in two years in the eastern division in this southern district.

Mr. CULLOP. Does not the gentleman think if the Judiciary Committee would report against Judge Speer, he would promptly resign, and a judge would be appointed there who would dispose of the business of the court?

Mr. WEBB. No.

Mr. CULLOP. That is the unfortunate condition, then, of the people in Georgia, but the population and the amount of business are certainly not such as would require two judges. And it seems to me that the purpose of having this bill passed is practically the retirement of Judge Speer on salary and some other judge to transact the business of the court.

Mr. WEBB. How else would my friend transact the business pending down there?

Mr. CULLOP. Now, there is another way to get at it without appointing another judge and putting an additional salary upon the taxpayers of the country.

Mr. WEBB. I wish the gentleman would suggest it.

Mr. CULLOP. I think if the people take hold of it they can in some way relieve that situation by having Judge Speer resign, and from what the gentleman has said it looks as if there is pretty strong reason for that being done.

Mr. WEBB. The gentleman rom Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD], who is on the committee, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FITZHENRY], and the entire Judiciary Committee, know that Judge Speer is not going to resign or retire until he reaches the age of 70.

Mr. CULLOP. If this practice should be continued, you would have two judges in all the districts of the country.

Mr. WEBB. Yes; the practice has been followed in Maryland during my term of service here and in Pennsylvania, and I believe in some other cases, but there is no other way in which you can relieve the docket. Justice Moody, of the Supreme Court, I believe was retired in the same way.

Mr. CULLOP. Yes, sir. And I believe it was a mistake to enact that legislation.

Mr. WEBB. I will say to the gentleman that if we had reported the impeachment of Judge Speer and called him up here and tried him it would have been the costliest of the two remedies, but it might have been a remedy.

Mr. CULLOP. The fact that Florida has two judges, with perhaps one-third of the population, is not any excuse for having an additional judge in this district. Florida may have too many judges. I know some States with a population of over 3,000,000 that have only one district.

Mr. HOWARD. Will the gentleman from North Carolina permit me to ask the gentleman from Indiana a question?

Mr. WEBB. Yes.

Mr. HOWARD. As a matter of fact, you will admit that all the Federal judges throughout the entire country, so far as provided for by law, are overworked, will you not?

Mr. CULLOP. No; no; not at all. That is not the case in many, many of the circuits.

Mr. WEBB. I do not wish to divert my friend from his original discussion, but I would like to put in the RECORD for his consideration and the consideration of the committee a letter of Judge McReynolds, dated August 4, this year:

OFFICE OF ATTORNEY GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., August 4, 1914.

Hon. EDWIN Y. WEBB,
Chairman Judiciary Committee,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. CONGRESSMAN: Permit me to reply to your letter of this date, inclosing H. R. 17869, providing for the appointment of an additional district judge for the southern district of Georgia, and the report to accompany the same.

Under existing circumstances it seems to me essential that there should be another judge in the southern district of Georgia. The conditions there are lamentable, and I know of no other way in which they can be speedily remedied. I hope that the bill may be promptly enacted into law.

With high regard,
Faithfully, yours,

J. C. MCREYNOLDS,
Attorney General.

I assure my friend the Judiciary Committee have gone into this matter very carefully from every possible angle. Unless my friend from Indiana wants the business to stand congested and clogged as it has been for the last three or four years, then he ought to support this bill.

Mr. CULLOP. I desire to say, Mr. Chairman, in reply to the statement of the gentleman from North Carolina on that subject, that I am not in favor, every time there is a congested court docket, of appointing an additional judge temporarily, as this bill proposes to do, for the purpose of relieving that docket. There are times when court dockets will become congested in nearly every section. There are other times when they are not congested, and if every time a docket becomes congested we are to appoint an additional judge it would simply to be to duplicate these matters over the country.

Now, if Judge Speer is not a satisfactory judge—and from the complaints I have heard here for at least three years, from what has been stated here already, and from what has heretofore been said in reference to this matter, I assume that to be largely the case—that is the misfortune of the people in that district, and it seems to me that if that is the case, some means should be devised to relieve them of that situation, instead of burdening the entire population of the country to sustain a duplicated judgeship there. That is what this means, and nothing more.

Now, many times court dockets will become congested. If every time that happens you are to go to Congress and have a new judge appointed, simply to relieve the situation, such a proceeding would be unfair to the public and unfair to the judiciary of the country.

Mr. WEBB. Well, I do not think the judiciary of the country, represented by the Attorney General—both in the person of Mr. Wickersham and that of Mr. McReynolds—would be unfair to the judiciary. They both think we ought to have another judge down there. The judiciary, I submit, is as fair to the country and to the judiciary itself as the gentleman from Indiana is, and the judiciary thinks that we ought to have another judge there.

If I had the power of physical healing and could by magic make Judge Speer a strong man of 45 years of age, this committee would not ask for a new judge; but, in fairness to the public and to a quarter of a million of people in the southern district of Georgia, we ask to have this bill passed. We can not impeach a man because he is sick, or because he is unable by reason of physical infirmities to do the work, and the people of Georgia ought not to suffer because of that situation, and the House of Representatives ought not to let a people suffer under those circumstances. [Applause.]

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, I think, from the remarks of the gentleman from North Carolina, that he evidently has the wrong bill here. Instead of a bill appointing a judge to assist this judge in clearing the docket he ought to have a bill here for the creation of a new district in the State of Georgia.

Mr. WEBB. I will say to my friend that there is a very powerful sentiment from Georgia knocking at the doors of this Congress in favor of a new district. But in order to be economical, and in order to meet the criticisms of just such men as my friend from Indiana, we held that down and concluded not to do it at this session of Congress, at least, and hoped to get along with a temporary judgeship. I may say that there are bills pending before our committee now asking for a new district and a permanent new judge.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, from the showing that is made in this report, with all deference to my friend from North Carolina, I do not think this bill ought to pass. This practice of legislating in this way is not, to say the least of it, a very good one. Where there is more business than one judge can handle with reasonable effort a new district ought to be created. Some day there will be trouble about jurisdiction in matters of this kind. I do not know what the state of health of Judge Speer is, but I do know that for several years there has been more complaint about the manner of his administration of justice and the administration of his court than there has been about his bad health. It is not long since a resolution was passed by this body, or at least considered by this body, asking for his impeachment. I think consideration of it was had by the Committee on the Judiciary and a report was made. What the report was I do not know. But certainly this is a bad practice to fall into—the duplicating of the judgeships of the country—and some day serious trouble will arise over jurisdiction in matters where this practice is indulged. I hope the bill will not pass.

I reserve the balance of my time, Mr. Chairman. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. VOLSTEAD and Mr. DONOVAN rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD] is recognized.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I would like to say a word in reference to this bill, inasmuch as I was connected with the investigation of the charges made against Judge Speer. This bill has been brought to the judge's attention. He does not ask that another judge be appointed, but I believe there ought to be one appointed. For some time the calendar in his court has been congested. It could not help but be congested, because after the charges were brought against him he quit doing any work. He felt that he ought not to try contested cases while the charges were pending against him. In that I think he was right. During that time—and it has been a long time—there has been a great accumulation of business in his district.

Now, Judge Speer is 64 or 65 years of age.

Mr. WEBB. He is 66; pretty near 67.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. He has been on the bench for almost 30 years. Most judges when they retire have not served for any such length of time as he has, so that no injustice to the public would be done should Judge Speer be retired at his present age. This bill, while it does not retire Judge Speer, relieves him of a part of the work in his district, a thing which it seems to me we may very properly do, in view of his long service and the condition of his health. He will still be able to do considerable work in the future; but I do not believe that in the next three or four years he should be asked to take care of the business in that district in the condition in which it now is. I do not believe he has the strength to do it; he might, if it had not been for the accumulation to which I have referred, an accumulation for which we are in a measure responsible.

It is said that there is a good deal of complaint against Judge Speer. That is true, but he has his friends as well as enemies, as every strong and forceful character such as Judge Speer always has. No one questions his ability. He is one of the brightest and, I believe, cleanest and strongest men on the bench. While he has enemies, I am sure he can without the slightest difficulty try cases in any section of the district except, perhaps, at one point. There is one place perhaps where it would be less fortunate if he was compelled to try cases, and that is the city of Savannah. His enemies appear to be much more numerous there than at any other place. I believe that at Savannah some one else might serve the public better, not because Judge Speer would not be absolutely fair, nor because he lacks ability, but because of this feeling against him. I think it would be better for the public service to have some one else go there and try the cases. I think we should give the people of Georgia the best service we can.

Judge Speer has served the country more than 29 years on the bench. He has, as I believe, served it faithfully and with distinguished ability. With a task too great for his health and strength, why is it not just to give him this relief? I think in the interest of the public service it would be perfectly proper for us to do so. He has enemies because he has rendered conspicuous service with a courage that deserves commendation. I admire him and honor him for the enemies he has made. But this bill is not asked in his interest, but in the interest of the public service. I believe it should pass.

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Speaker, I regret very much that my friend from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP] has offered any opposition to this bill, especially in the face of the report which shows clearly and conclusively that this third judge is so badly needed in our State. As has been said by the chairman of the committee, Mr. WEBB, and as is pointed out in this report, for a number of years Judge Speer has not been a well man, and on account of his health the business in that district has been neglected.

It is pointed out in this report that the eastern division of this court is made up of 16 counties, which embrace the entire seacoast of the State of Georgia, and in it are the two important ports of Savannah and Brunswick. In consequence of that all cases coming within the admiralty jurisdiction of the United States courts and brought in this district are necessarily heard and determined in the eastern division of the southern district of Georgia.

There is no class of cases where a speedy trial is more desirable than in administering the admiralty law. If these cases are speedily tried it is possible to produce before the court witnesses who would be otherwise inaccessible, as most of them are transients. In order to give a basis on which to form an idea as to the extent of this admiralty work which this court is called upon to dispose of, in addition to the regular run of litigation, I call attention to the fact that Savannah is the largest port for the export of cotton from the Atlantic seaboard and the second largest in the world; it is the largest naval stores port in the world and ranks fourth in general exports in the whole country for the year ending June 30, 1912.

So far as the admiralty practice is concerned, for a number of years it has been neglected and has been turned away from the courts at Savannah and Brunswick, for the reason that we have not had a judge to try these cases. Judge Speer resided for a number of years at Macon, Ga., over 100 miles from the city of Savannah, and we have had no judge down there to try this class of cases. The result is that if the citizens of Georgia and the people who are interested in that class of cases wanted their cases tried they had to go to some other State.

Now, we are in a terrible fix down there. The dockets of the court are congested. Relief is absolutely demanded, and I do not want my friend the gentleman from Indiana to give the impression that this is relief for a single State, or even for an immediate district. It is relief for the country at large. It is not only the Georgia people's court, but the court of the people of the country. I am surprised that the gentleman should offer any objection whatever to the passage of this bill, because the need of it is very great, and it is apparent to any man who will study this report carefully and honestly and who is willing to do the fair thing by the people in distress, as we are, and the fair thing by his country.

As far as I am concerned, I would a great deal rather have a third district created and have in that State a third judge permanently. There is Florida, to the south of us, with not half of our population, with not half of our business in the courts, and they have two judges. Alabama, to the west of us, has three judges. And Alabama has a population 450,000 less than the State of Georgia. I dare say that the State of Alabama has nothing like the great number of cases in its three courts that we have in the two. Now, it is not my purpose to say anything against Judge Speer. He is not on trial. For a long time the people of Georgia have been patient and suffering in waiting for the relief that they beg for to-day.

I hope, my friends, that you will come to the relief of a people who have suffered patiently and long. The question may arise in the minds of some gentlemen in this Chamber as to why Judge Speer is not gotten rid of. My friend from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP] asked the question if we can not induce him to resign. Why, you may just as well try to induce the gentleman from Indiana to resign from Congress as to try to induce Judge Speer to resign from the bench. The subcommittee that had under investigation the charges that were preferred against Judge Speer had this to say, and this is the conclusion, on page 164 of the report, that was submitted here by Mr. Chairman WEBB, and, with the consent of the committee, I will insert all of it.

The conclusion of the subcommittee, deduced from the evidence taken and from the construction of the precedents of impeachment trials, is that at the present time satisfactory evidence sufficient to support a conviction upon a trial by the Senate is not obtainable.

In the conduct of the hearings the committee was extremely liberal and did not confine the witnesses to the giving of technically legal evidence. Some evidence of a hearsay nature was received. The committee felt justified in such a course in the light of the fact that it came to the attention of the committee that many witnesses were apprehensive of the consequences of giving evidence against Judge Speer in the event of his acquittal. This feeling and the general disposition on the part of individuals to protect themselves against what was termed the "wrath" of Judge Speer kept from the committee the names of the witnesses and a knowledge of the facts in their possession. Some of the witnesses whose testimony would be absolutely necessary to sustain some of the charges made are dead. Others have removed from the southern district of Georgia and their whereabouts are unknown.

Another phase of the record is that it details a large number of official acts on the part of Judge Speer which are in themselves legal, yet, when taken together, develop into a system tending to approach a condition of tyranny and oppression. There has been an inequitable exercise of judicial discretion, many instances of which have been frequently criticized where the cases in which they were committed have been reviewed by the courts of appeal, while in others litigants were unable, financially, to prosecute appeals. That the power of the court has been exercised in a despotic and autocratic manner by the judge can not be questioned.

The Jamison case is one of many instances shown by the record where the judge, without taint of individual corruption and with the apparently laudable purpose of purifying the community and inaugurating a civic reform, disregarded the law and apparently considered that the end justified the means.

The record shows instances where the judge sitting in the trial of criminal cases, apparently forced pleas of guilty from defendants or convictions, and there is strong evidence tending to show that in one case, at least, he forced innocent parties to enter such pleas through a fear of the consequences in the event of an unfavorable verdict at the hands of a jury presided over by the judge in the manner peculiar to himself.

As was said by the Committee on the Judiciary in reporting a similar case:

"Terror to evildoers, if purchased at the price of judicial fairness and overstrained legal authority, is achieved at too great an expense, for it defeats its own high aim and warps the very fabric of the law itself.

"The temptation of an honest judge to "'Wrest once the law to his authority,

To do a great right—do a little wrong—'

is fraught with such danger to our whole system of remedial justice that it merits the condemnation of every legal mind."

The subcommittee regrets its inability to either recommend a complete acquittal of Judge Speer of all culpability so far as these charges are concerned, on the one hand, or an impeachment on the other. And yet it is persuaded that the competent legal evidence at hand is not sufficient to procure a conviction at the hands of the Senate. But it does feel that the record presents a series of legal oppressions and shows an abuse of judicial discretion which, though falling short of impeachable offenses, demand condemnation and criticism.

If Judge Speer's judicial acts in the future are marked by the rigorous and inflexible harshness shown by this record, these charges hang as a portentous cloud over his court, "impairing his usefulness, impeding the administration of justice, and endangering the integrity of American institutions."

The special subcommittee recommends the adoption of the following resolution:

Resolved, That no further proceedings be had with reference to H. Res. 234.

E. Y. WEBB.
LOUIS FITZHENRY.

Yet my friend from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP] asked if we can not get Judge Speer to resign, and he asked if there are not people there who do not want to bring cases in his court. Mr. Chairman, the conditions there have been and are deplorable, which is a matter of common knowledge throughout that entire section. There are people who do not want to bring cases in his court, who would rather suffer great loss than bring cases in his court. As I stated a while ago, conditions down there normally require a third district and a third judge, but we see that it is not practicable at this time to get a third district; but, gentlemen, please do not deny us this relief. Think of the great port of Brunswick, the great port of Savannah, without a district judge, without courts to try the admiralty cases and other cases that arise there, with the dockets congested, some five or six hundred cases on the dockets to-day. Attorney General Wickersham, under the Republican administration, made a report that I will here insert in my remarks, with the consent of the committee, pointing out wherein a third judge is needed, which report is as follows:

The examiner who examined the office of the United States attorney for the southern district of Georgia two or three months ago reported to me, among other things, the number of civil and criminal cases pending July 1, 1910, and commenced and terminated during the fiscal year ending July 1, 1911. This data showed that the total number of cases instituted during the period from July 1, 1909, to June 1, 1912, was 360, of which 46 were civil and 314 criminal. During the same period 225 cases were disposed of, being 135 less than the number instituted. In other words, the number of cases disposed of equaled about 62 per cent of the number instituted, and at this rate, of course, the work of the office was steadily falling behind. The total number pending July 1, 1909, was 145; July 1, 1910, 157; July 1, 1911, 242; June 1, 1912, 280. On the date of the examination there were 17 civil cases that had been pending for more than two years, and 107 criminal cases that had been pending for longer than one year. As to this the examiner said:

"The fact that the number of pending cases has been increasing seems not to be due to lack of effort on the part of the attorney and his assistants to dispose of the cases, but rather to lack of time on the part of the court to try them. The records show that in numerous instances witnesses have been summoned, appeared, and both parties were apparently ready for trial, but owing to the accumulation of business before the court, or for other reasons, the cases were continued until the following term * * *."

In view of these facts, I instructed Mr. Akerman to take steps to secure some additional assistance in the district to clear up the docket, etc.

Attorney General McReynolds, now on the Supreme Court of the United States, called the condition "lamentable." How much stronger language does my friend from Indiana want from a great man like Mr. Justice McReynolds, who understands the conditions so well? What further proof does he want of the fact that we people down there need and must have relief? I beg of you, my friends, not to so much consider what a gentleman clear across the country from the section concerned, clear across the country from Georgia, thinks, not to consider so much his lack of knowledge of affairs, but to take into consideration what the chairman of this committee has stated, and take into consideration what this report says, what Attorney General Wickersham and Attorney General McReynolds have said, and give to these people relief in order that the public business may be transacted. I stand for economy also, as much as does my friend from Indiana, but at the same time I stand for justice. I want to see economy practiced on every hand, but we do not want to see it practiced at the expense of the public business nor at the expense of the rights of the citizens of the United States. To pass this bill is in the interest of economy and is demanded in order that the people of that judicial district might have relief and in order that the business of the courts might be transacted.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Chairman, in the last session of Congress, when a Pennsylvania judgeship proposition was up, I took occasion to oppose that bill, because I did not think it was right to follow that kind of a policy or adopt that kind of a precedent. In that particular case the matter of the health of the judge was presented in practically the identical form and fashion that it is presented now. Perhaps that feature—the sickness of Judge Holland, in Pennsylvania—was more emphasized. The honesty of the judge there was not impeached. There was no question about his integrity; but the fact that the people of that district needed another judge because of a large and crowded docket, because of the tremendous pending business, and the utter inability of the judge then sitting to perform the duties for which he was paid and which he had sworn he would perform, we were asked to appoint a Federal judge for that district in Pennsylvania to serve until the death of the nonperforming incumbent. We now have the case of Georgia. We have there not only a sick judge—and I understand the sickness is rather of recent development—that is, the acuteness of the diseases with which Judge Speer may be suffering physically is of recent development rather than of general knowledge heretofore—but we have a judge who is not performing his duty, who is violating the oath that he took to faithfully and completely perform the duties of that office. We have no pension system in this country for Federal judges less than 70 years of age. We have ruled against pensioning Federal judges before their retirement. They are permitted to serve during their life, but while they are active on the bench they are obligated to perform their duties, and on the pay roll they are in the same position as a Government employee. We go down here to the Post Office Department and we find some old soldier, northern or southern, or some one else, who gets old and incompetent, and he is booted out of the service; his family is not considered. The earning capacity of that man, and that sort of thing, and his economic necessities are given no consideration whatever. But when a Federal judge gets to a point of this kind you come in and ask for another judge to collect full pay for life. I believe that is wrong. I believe it is wrong and it is a bad precedent to follow, merely because the pending judge is not performing his duties. I think there ought to be some kind of a way to make him make good.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRYAN. Yes.

Mr. HOWARD. What are you going to do in a case like this: Here is a man who is too sick to attend to the business of the court, and who is too poor to lose the money, and who will not resign. Whom are you going to make suffer?

Mr. BRYAN. I think the people who stand for that kind of thing, the people of this country, who will not provide a decent or more satisfactory method of electing judges, ought to suffer.

Mr. HOWARD. Oh, I see. The gentleman thinks that they ought to be elected by the people or recalled. I understand.

Mr. BRYAN. They ought to suffer all over the country until public sentiment demands the election of Federal judges for a definite term, so that when their six or four years, as the case may be, are up, they are compelled to give up their commissions unless they are satisfactory public servants, in the opinion of the electorate, and I think that if we provide these relief measures every time a judge gets sick or is temperamentally unfit to perform the duties of his office, and we provide another judgeship until he shall die, there never will be any opportunity for these more substantial reforms.

Mr. WEBB. I share somewhat in the views which the gentleman has been discussing, but it is not a theory we are dealing with, it is an actual condition.

Mr. BRYAN. That is what I am dealing with, too.

Mr. WEBB. And this is the very best we can do under the conditions. It might be well to change the Constitution and laws later on, and I think I will join with the gentleman myself in changing them, to some extent, but this is a condition we are met with, and we have to meet it the best we can under the imperfect conditions, as he asserts, which the gentleman has been arguing, as we can not do it now according to the way the gentleman desires to have it done. In this connection I want to call the gentleman's attention to a condition which prevails, I think, in Texas. There is a circuit judge, I believe, 83 years old in the fifth circuit. I understand he never goes on the circuit court of appeals at all, and if he does go he is rolled in sitting in a chair, but I understand he does not go at all. He will not resign and he will not or can not work. I agree with the gentleman that under those circumstances something ought to be done. He ought to be forced to resign and take the pay the Government gives him after he reaches the age of 70, or he ought to be impeached, or a new judge should be added to the circuit.

Mr. BRYAN. Well, if there is no protest made when it comes to legislative measures to relieve that condition, if these abortions are not called to the attention of the public in some way through some kind of a protest, we never will get a change. If we are going to allow Federal judges or any particular set of officers to set at naught the laws, disregard the statutes, and violate their oaths by which they pledge themselves to perform their duty, and we allow them to collect their salaries and spend the money of the people that they have not earned, we become as guilty as they. In such a case I think the only way to effect a change is to refuse to grant these temporary relief measures and to allow the people to know by actual experience what they are suffering, and depend on public sentiment to make necessary changes.

Mr. WEBB. That would be punishing the people in the district because of our dereliction here in Congress.

Mr. BRYAN. Oh, no; but the people ought to fire you and me if we do not do the right thing. One gentleman says that the proposition here presented is that this judge is old, that he is weak, and he is in bad health, and he has to go to the mountains and spend half of his time or something of that kind. If that is true and he is not performing the duties of his office, it does not make any difference if he is temperamentally unfit, and it does not make any difference if he is subject to all the charges that have been presented here and that have been incorporated in the speech of the gentleman who preceded me. The fact remains that he is simply violating his oath. The fact remains that whether he is fit or unfit temperamentally he ought to realize the moral condition in which he finds himself when he takes the money of the people for services which he does not render.

Mr. WEBB. If he does not realize this situation, the people ought not to suffer because he does not, and that does not detract from the merits of this bill.

Mr. BRYAN. The same situation was presented in Pennsylvania and the same thing is presented in case after case, and I believe if the country knows of it there will be much less chance of such system being perpetuated. I believe each and every case where a judge is doing this kind of business, every case where the judge is sitting there and pretending to mete out justice when he is unfit and unable to do it, by reason of ill health or otherwise, ought to be called to the attention of the people; and if the laws are not adequate, they will see that they are changed; and if it takes a constitutional amendment, they will force Congress to submit one.

Mr. WEBB. I will say to my friend that during the last 12 years, as far as my recollection goes, there have been only two bills of this kind presented to Congress and successors to the presiding judges have not been appointed, though very soon after the new judges were created those in office died; and, really, looking back to those bills now, our action was in the interest of economy rather than extravagance and for the best interest of the people, as I believe this case is.

Mr. BRYAN. Well, Mr. Chairman, for the reasons I have already stated, I am opposed to this kind of a remedy, and I am opposed to this bill.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, before the question is put I believe I have some time remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. Did the gentleman reserve his time?

Mr. CULLOP. Yes, I did; I reserved the balance of my time. In reply to the gentleman from Georgia, I desire to say that the fact that Florida only has so much population, much less than the State of Georgia, does not sustain the proposition he advocates. If a mistake was made there in giving the State of Florida two district judges that does not excuse us for giving the State of Georgia this additional judge. It does not defend the situation at all here by stating that a wrong was committed in Florida. Now, the situation here is such that the people of Georgia want relief from Judge Speer's court, and have employed this method for that purpose. I undertake to say to the gentleman from Georgia that the Attorney General did not recommend this procedure when he recommended relief was needed by the people of Georgia. No Attorney General has recommended this kind of a procedure, a duplication of judgeships in a district in some particular States, but if they have had a congested condition in their litigation in the Federal courts the remedy was by the making of a new district and not by the duplication of the judges in any district.

Mr. EDWARDS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULLOP. In a moment—and that is clearly revealed as the purpose here, to get away from Judge Speer in the trial of the cases. I think it manifest from what has transpired that such is the purpose.

It is expected that if a judge is appointed here under this proposed bill all of the litigation of that district will go into his court and not into the court of Judge Speer.

Mr. BARTLETT. Will my friend permit me? It is the same court, and the circuit judge at Atlanta designates the places where this new judge shall hold court. Judge Speer, when he is able, will hold court, or, if he is not able, the new judge will hold the court. But he does not go except where directed by Judge Pardee.

Mr. WEBB. We have safeguarded against the very thing which you say the committee had in mind to make and which I deny in most emphatic terms. We had no intention of that. This denies what my friend has intimated here:

SEC. 3. That the senior circuit judge of the circuit in which the southern district of Georgia lies shall make all necessary orders for the division of business and the assignment of cases for trial in said district between the several district judges therein.

Mr. CULLOP. Notwithstanding the provision in the bill just read, litigants can escape Judge Speer's court and go into the court of this newly appointed judge.

Mr. BARTLETT. It is the same court.

Mr. CULLOP. Yes; it is the same court, but a different judge. And while the bill ostensibly provides one thing the real purpose of it is another.

Mr. EDWARDS. Will the gentleman yield, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. CULLOP. In just a moment I will. Now, then, for all that is attempted to be done now we already have a statute. We have a statute that provides that if the business is congested in any court or the judge is unable to hold court the presiding judge of that circuit can designate the judge from some other district to hold the same; and from your neighbor, Florida, you can have one of the judges appointed, who will come over and hold the court and relieve the congested condition of the docket in this district. Now I yield to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. EDWARDS].

Mr. EDWARDS. I want to suggest to the gentleman, first, that for the last two or three or four years, and I guess five years back, they have been getting judges from Florida and Alabama, and Judge Newman, from the northern district of Georgia, has been coming there; but with all the help they have not been able to catch up.

Two or three times the gentleman has made reference to the fact that litigants did not want to go into Judge Speer's court. I would like for him to enlighten the House along the line of what reason he has for that statement. He seems to know something that appears to be under cover there. I would like to have him explain to the committee if he has anything up his sleeve.

Mr. CULLOP. I have not, I will say to the gentleman; but I am simply basing what I have said in this regard upon the exhibits and statements that have been made against Judge Speer's court and the manner in which he has held it for some time.

Mr. EDWARDS. If the gentleman will yield further, does not the gentleman think if the judge's conduct is such that it compels people to the inclination not to go into his court—in other words, if he drives them away from his court—it is pretty good reason to give relief?

Mr. CULLOP. It is good reason to give relief, but not in this way. This is a bad precedent. It is an unwarranted policy. We are following, on this question, a bad precedent, one made in the Pennsylvania judgeship and in one or two others in the last few years here, and I think there were one or two prior to that time. That is not the way to get it. It is not fair to set this kind of a precedent. Now, if these judges were appointed for a specific period of time instead of an unlimited time, as they are now, we would not have this kind of cases coming up here for relief. This establishes very clearly the fact that the appointment of a judge for life is wrong, a matter which can not be successfully defended.

Mr. BARTLETT. Will the gentleman permit me?

Mr. CULLOP. I have now pending before the Judiciary Committee an amendment to the Constitution upon this identical question.

Mr. BARTLETT. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. CULLOP. Yes, sir. Always glad to yield to my learned friend.

Mr. BARTLETT. The gentleman knows well enough that if I had an opportunity, with the views that I entertain, I should limit the term of all judges, Federal as well as State. I do not believe in the life tenure of any judge, and I agree with the gentleman from Indiana thoroughly. If I have an opportunity, I will vote for his bill.

Mr. EDWARDS. So will I, I will add.

Mr. CULLOP. I would like to prevail on the Judiciary Committee to report my amendment to the Constitution out and let us vote on it. I have an amendment not only to take the life tenure away, but for the election of these men by the direct vote of the people. [Applause.] If the people of this country are capable of self-government and capable of electing their other officials, they are capable of electing their judges, and they can select them as intelligently as they can be appointed by any power in this country. And that is the way, in my judgment, they ought to be selected.

The Constitution ought to be amended in order to give the people the right to select their own judges, select them at the ballot box by the voters in their respective districts and circuits where they are to hold court. If we had this system, we would not have this kind of a bill pending here for the duplicating of districts and circuits, because the people then would be responsible for the election of judges and would be responsible for their conduct. They would be careful, in that event, in the way they conducted their courts. They could go back to the people for indorsement, and if the people were displeased with the manner of their holding court, the manner of their administration of justice, and the manner in which litigants were treated, they would have the right to change them. But here we are up against the system established by our Constitution, the fundamental law of the land, however grievous the case may be; and the people have no relief whatever from it, and must bear the burden, however troublesome and unsatisfactory it may be. The system is wrong and should be changed. Can anybody conceive a condition more unreasonable and unjust than the condition that we are met with here to-day in this matter, with a judge of a court unable to preside, unable to discharge the duties of his office? And yet, in a country with a hundred millions of people, we are unable to get relief from that condition of affairs, whereas if you elect these judges for a period of six or eight years, or if you appointed them for that period of time, you would have an opportunity for relief.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. CULLOP. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. COOPER. Suppose that in a State the people of a State elect a circuit judge of a circuit court for 10 years, and at the end of 6 years of that term that judge is stricken with a fatal disease, thereby rendering him incapable of holding court. What relief have the people of that State and circuit?

Mr. CULLOP. In answer to the gentleman from Wisconsin, I would say that I would not make the term of office for 10 years.

Mr. COOPER. Then suppose it was six years, and the judge was stricken with a fatal disease at the end of three years. What relief has the circuit?

Mr. CULLOP. You would not have relief unless you could take some proceeding to remove the judge or supply his place. We have a provision in many of the States to the effect that if an officer is elected for a specified term, and if he becomes disqualified by illness or anything else to discharge the duties for a specified period during his term of office, the office may be declared vacant. I would have that provision enacted. To meet the exigency such a case could be provided for in both a practical and satisfactory manner.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULLOP. Certainly.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will say, in answer to the question asked by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER], that in Tennessee under the conditions the gentleman has named the governor would have the right to appoint a judge during the illness of the incumbent.

Mr. COOPER. Appointed during the illness of the incumbent, but not to throw the other man out of office, perhaps in penury, without a dollar to keep himself. You would not throw that man out, would you?

Mr. CULLOP. Well, I want to say with reference to putting a man out in penury, without support, I do not think that argument meets the question. There are many good citizens of this country who work in private employment and are stricken with disease when in penury and in want, and yet the public is not required to support them upon a salary. Now, is there any good reason anywhere to be found why a different treatment should be given to a public officer who has been feeding at the public crib than that which is given to the private citizen? If there is, I have never heard it.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CULLOP. Certainly.

Mr. HOWARD. Is it not a matter of fact that we every year appropriate $7,500 to the widow or legal heirs of a dead Congressman? We do that. Does the gentleman think that is wrong?

Mr. CULLOP. Certainly we do that, and if that is wrong, it certainly does not justify another. One wrong can never be pleaded in justification of another. And yet all the way through this debate in support of this bill the plea is made that we have done this thing in some other case. Now, no question ought ever to be bottomed upon such a proposition as that. Higher considerations ought to underlie every proposition, and that should be whether it is right or not, not whether a wrong has been done in some other case and that set up as a justification for action in this case.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. CULLOP. In one moment. Let me get through with this first. There is no reason, no good, logical reason, in order to sustain a man by the payment of a public salary because he has sought an office, fought for it, fought to hold it, and then become unable to perform the duties of the office. He could have chosen another calling in life, but he selected his highway, and he ought to abide by what it furnishes and not rest upon the other proposition at all.

Now I will yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman says he would cure this condition by fixing a specific term of office for a definite number of years. In answer to the question propounded by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER], the gentleman from Indiana stated he would not make the term longer than six years.

Mr. CULLOP. Yes; I said I would not make it longer than six years.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. I would like to know what the gentleman's idea is as to the term that a Federal judge should be chosen for by the people.

Mr. CULLOP. Not to exceed six years

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman were writing a proposed statute, would he fix the term at six years?

Mr. CULLOP. I think I would, and I will tell you why. It is because I have practiced and lived under a system that fixes the judicial office at six years. It is more a question of what I have been used to than anything else, and we are all creatures of environment, more or less. It works well in Indiana. Let me get through with that. If a circuit judge becomes unable to discharge his duties for a reasonable period, not to exceed one or two terms of court, the law provides what officials shall meet and select a man to hold court for him and draw the salary. Now that practice works admirably. We elect our judges. We do not have any difficulty about it, and whenever a Federal judge is appointed, as a usual thing, out in that section of the country, he is taken from a State court. Usually he has been elected by the people for a judicial position. This shows they exercise good judgment, as a rule, in such matters.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. I have no controversy with the gentleman, but I want to ask him this further question: In view of the satisfaction which that local system has given in Indiana, would the gentleman say, or be willing to say, that a system that has been in vogue for 125 years in a nation which he says is now of 100,000,000 people, a system where, with probably only three exceptions, the remedy sought to be applied to-day has been invoked—would the gentleman say that system has been a failure? [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. CULLOP. No; I would not say it was a failure, but I do say it could be improved, and I believe it needs improvement. We have grown so much that the system needs modernizing, like many of our earlier methods of procedure.

There are hundreds of cases, doubtless, in nearly every court, or in many of them, that have fallen under our observation where, if the judge had not been appointed for life, had been answerable to the people for his tenure of office, where the people would have had some control over it, there would not have been the criticism of the administration of justice in the Federal courts that there is to-day, and there would be more litigation in them. As matters now stand in many places people hesitate about going to the Federal courts.

Instances are occurring in many States in the Union of complaints and criticisms that are bringing the Federal courts into disrepute, because, forsooth, the people have no say in the selection of the judges, and therefore avoid it, if possible, with their litigation. This is unfortunate, and the condition should be changed.

Doubtless many of us have witnessed instances where lawyers and litigants in Federal courts have been mistreated, without any excuse except that the Federal judges elect to do it and have the power to do so. They are responsible to no one.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. I do not recall that fact. My experience and knowledge from reading and observation has been to the contrary. My observation is that there is more uniform courtesy in the courts of the United States than in any other courts of this land; that there is as high, if not a higher, standard maintained in the judiciary of the United States under the present system of appointment than there is in that of any of the States in the Union.

Mr. CULLOP. What I said does not apply to all judges or all courts, but there are instances of that kind in which, if the people had the power, changes would immediately be made for the better. The Federal judge could be elected and provision could be made whereby under such circumstances as this, after a reasonable lapse of time, his place could be supplied, and there has already been some remedy supplied in the Judicial Code passed two or three years ago for the relief that is asked for in this bill.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. I appreciate the earnestness of the gentleman from Indiana, and my questions are for the purpose of information. I would like to have the gentleman from Indiana to state the notable exceptions that have justified him in asserting his belief that a general fundamental change in the method of selecting the judiciary in the United States should be put in force by the people of this country at this time. What judges, in what districts, in what States, have so demeaned themselves that the system in vogue for a century and a quarter should be changed and a new one established in its place?

Mr. CULLOP. I want to say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that a question of that kind ought not to be settled by taking a majority of all the cases or courts. But even if there was one, then relief should be had. The administration of justice is too sacred to the people of this country for anything to in any way bring it into disrepute or place it under suspicion; every available opportunity should be used to raise it above criticism.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman would not say that one case of violation of judicial ethics should require a change in the whole system of jurisprudence?

Mr. CULLOP. I would say that if there was one case and that matter could be remedied and the temptation taken away for the commission of the offense or a repetition of it in like cases, that it ought to be done in order to avoid criticism of the court and to keep the administration of justice above suspicion. I would not require a majority rule in such matters or even frequent instances.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Now, I want to ask the gentleman this specific question: What would he do in this case now before the committee?

Mr. CULLOP. I would defeat this bill until a certain condition would come around whereby there would be a vacancy there by the failure to administer justice or some other reason by which the vacancy should be filled.

Mr. BARTLETT. The gentleman would abolish the district?

Mr. CULLOP. No; I would not abolish the district.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. You would create a new district?

Mr. CULLOP. If they needed a new district for the speedy administration of justice, I would be in favor of it; but I would not be in favor of the creation of a new district for the sole purpose of getting away from the court of some particular judge.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. That is not my question. Would the gentleman vote for a new district in the face of the present condition? I am not putting a hypothetical case; but in the face of the present conditions, would the gentleman vote to create a new district?

Mr. CULLOP. I do not know what the conditions are; but from the showing made here I would not vote for a new district.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman would not vote to create a new district, then there is no other way for relief except by the method in this Webb bill.

Mr. CULLOP. I think there is.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. That is what I want to know; what is the other method?

Mr. CULLOP. I assume that if the judge found that he was unable to hold court or that a large number of people were opposed to the manner in which he held the court, his own self-respect would require him to step out of the way. I assume that would be done by any self-respecting man.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULLOP. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON. If I understood the gentleman from Indiana correctly, in his State when a judge becomes ill and can not perform the duties of his office he may appoint some one to take his place and the pay comes out of the treasury?

Mr. CULLOP. He may for a short period of time, if the judge becomes disqualified from illness or any other cause—we have a provision of law naming certain officers who may select a judge to take his place for the time he is disqualified and hold the court. He is paid out of the salary of the judge.

Mr. HARRISON. Is it not a fact that the gentleman is mistaken about that? Does it not come out of the treasury of the State?

Mr. CULLOP. The salary of the judge elected comes out of the treasury.

Mr. HARRISON. But the compensation of the special judge who performs the duties of the man who is sick?

Mr. CULLOP. Not in the instance I have named. If a special judge is appointed by a judge, where the venue is changed, he is paid out of the treasury.

Mr. PETERSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Mississippi yield for a moment?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. PETERSON. If a judge is disqualified by sickness for a reasonable length of time, the compensation of the other judge is paid out of the treasury of the State.

Mr. CULLOP. Certainly.

Mr. HARRISON. If in Indiana, when your State judges become ill, you have a mode of appointing some one to take up and perform those duties, does the gentleman not think that in the operation of the Federal Government, where a Federal judge is disqualified by illness, there ought to be some way whereby the people can have a judge perform their labors, and is it not a fact that this is the only way in which you can get one?

Mr. CULLOP. No.

Mr. HARRISON. Because there can not be one appointed now under the law.

Mr. CULLOP. We have already provided a way by statute.

Mr. HARRISON. What is that way?

Mr. CULLOP. The way is for the presiding circuit judge of the appellate court to appoint a judge to hold that court, and he is authorized to hold the court upon the certificate of the presiding judge. He takes a judge from some other jurisdiction. He can take him from California or New York, wherever he sees fit to get him from, and he can appoint him to hold that particular court, and they usually look over the country and find some judge who is not very busy. We have already provided for that in the bill revising the Judicial Code, so that the difficulty the gentleman mentioned is already provided for by statute. These are all practical matters which can be worked out in practical ways and produce satisfactory results.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that we read the bill under the five-minute rule for amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the last Democratic platform——

Mr. PAYNE. What is that?

Mr. PROUTY. Where does the gentleman find that?

Mr. MANN. The last Democratic platform contained this language—and at the beginning of a session of Congress I think that it is not amiss to remind our Democratic brethren before they commence business and while they are providing for the expenditure of money of one plank in their platform that they ought to respect:

> We denounce the profligate waste of the money wrung from the people by oppressive taxation through the lavish appropriations of recent Republican Congresses, which have kept taxes high and reduced the purchasing power of the people's toil. We demand a return to that simplicity and economy which befits a democratic government and a reduction in the number of useless offices, the salaries of which drain the substance of the people.

As I understand the present bill, the main reason that has been offered so far for its passage has been that the State of Georgia has a larger population than the State of Florida, and that the State of Florida has now an equal number of Federal judges. Instead, however, of reducing the number of offices, and probably one of the offices in Florida is a useless office, it is proposed now to increase the number in Georgia. That is the way it has been all of the time under the control of our Democratic friends. Whenever they find that there are too many places in one situation they try to even it up by creating a larger number in some other which is similar.

Two or three years ago I remember we had a great howl out in my city in reference to the number of Federal judges. They needed an additional district judge. Two and a half years ago one of the circuit judges in the northern district of Illinois resigned, and President Taft did not appoint his successor.

The matter ran along for the course of six or seven or eight or nine months, and President Taft did not appoint anyone to succeed Judge Grosscup. President Wilson has been holding office now for more than a year and a half and he has not appointed anyone to fill that vacancy, although we were told on the floor of the House by the Committee on the Judiciary in the last Congress, which brought in a bill and passed it through the House, that it was absolutely essential to the conduct of legal business in Chicago that they should have an additional judge there. Yet, having a vacancy now for two years and a half, neither the Republican President nor the Democratic President has seen fit to fill the vacancy. The Committee on the Judiciary, a Democratic committee—and I am not saying that it would have been any different if it had been a Republican committee—yielding to the pressure, reported in the last Congress in favor of creating an additional district judge in our town. Perhaps they need one. I do not know. Evidently the Presidents, two of them, did not feel the great need of this additional judge or they would not have allowed two and a half years to go by without appointing a circuit judge and assigning him to district business.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. COOPER. As I remember it, in the Sixty-first Congress the revision of the laws known as the Moon-Sherley revision, abolished the office of circuit judge of the United States and created the circuit court of appeals.

Mr. MANN. That is true, but that does not affect the circuit judges.

Mr. COOPER. In one way possibly it would; in appointing a man specifically to fill the vacancy created by the resignation of Judge Grosscup.

Mr. MANN. Not at all, because in the same revision of the laws we provided expressly for assigning the circuit judges to perform district judge work, and the only difference in Chicago whether a man is a circuit judge or a district judge is that the circuit judge gets $500 a year more salary than the district judge, and in Chicago he needs it.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Chairman, I want to state to my friend that since the abolition of the Commerce Court much pressure has been relieved from the work of the circuit judges, and these five Commerce Court judges——

Mr. MANN. Four.

Mr. WEBB. Yes, four—can be assigned to the various district courts.

Mr. MANN. Then why have they not assigned one to Georgia?

Mr. WEBB. I understand that Judge Mack has been assigned to the various vacancies to do the work.

Mr. MANN. They could assign Judge Mack to Georgia.

Mr. WEBB. Not at all. He does not try cases in the district court, but in the circuit court.

Mr. MANN. But Judge Mack ought to try cases in the district court, and he does.

Mr. WEBB. There is a circuit court of appeals. The judges of the circuit court have been abolished, and the circuit court judges do not try cases any more.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I will make a correct statement; neither the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] nor the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WEBB] seem to understand the situation. The circuit courts were abolished, but the circuit judges were not abolished. There are circuit judges who sit in the circuit court of appeals, but the law provides that any of those circuit judges may be assigned to perform district work; and where there is a superfluity of circuit judges, they do perform district court work, and it is nonsense to say in the city of Chicago, with four circuit judges and only three allowed to sit in the circuit court of appeals, that the extra circuit judge should not perform district work. That is being done and ought to be done. Now, wherever the demand comes up, it is always very strong at the beginning for the creation of an additional district judge. Nearly every portion of the country has demanded an additional judge. Well, sometimes they may be needed. We passed one for the southern district of California at the last session of Congress which seemed to me might be needed under the circumstances there, but here it is perfectly evident in this case that the purpose of creating an additional district judge is so they will not try cases before Judge Speer. A number of years ago the House of Representatives, on charges which were made against Judge Blodgett, district judge at Chicago, investigated proposed impeachment proceedings.

The House decided not to impeach Judge Blodgett, but there were protracted proceedings in the investigation which was made by the Judiciary Committee in the city of Chicago, and some young lawyers there, very bright ones, had made those charges against Judge Blodgett. There was a bitter feeling, and I can remember there was talk then that nobody would be prepared among the people to try their cases before Judge Blodgett, yet no additional judge was appointed. Judge Blodgett continued to perform the duties of district judge, and when he died he had the reputation of being the best district judge in the United States. He transacted more business without criticism than any other two judges in the United States, and the people had gotten to know that their original conceptions against him were without sufficient foundation.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I assume that my genial friend from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP] will at the proper time offer his celebrated amendment. It seems to me that it is time once again to secure a roll call in the House of Representatives on one plank, the same old plank, of the Democratic platform. Nearly every plank in that platform has been repudiated at different times by the majority side of this House. For a number of times in this Congress they voted in favor of sustaining the plank in that platform in reference to publicity of indorsements of presidential appointments, but in the end the temptation was too great, and enough of you over there followed those who believed in that principle or thing on this side to vote down the Cullop or Mann amendment, but I trust that my friend from Indiana will offer his amendment, giving us another chance at it. Let us know whether in creating an additional and unnecessary office in Georgia you are willing to make public the indorsements made to the President for the appointment which is made.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois, the minority leader, has reminded me of my duty, or, in other words, reminded me of an article of faith in the Democratic decalogue, and that is this: Economy in public expenditures, that labor might be lightly burdened. I believe that is almost the first article of faith in the Democratic doctrine. Again, the gentleman from Illinois has reminded me of the necessity of filling these positions that possibly have been left vacant or no services have been performed. We had in our State a judge of the lower court—the district court—who died, and the position was not filled for a year and a half. No one suffered—and the country saved the salary—except those who desired to fill the seat at the salary to be paid. They were the only ones who suffered. Mr. Chairman, let me see if I understand the chairman of the committee correctly. I understood him a few moments ago to state that it would not be possible to have Judge Speer resign or retire before he was 70 years old. Is that correct?

Mr. WEBB. Well, I think that is true. Of course, that is up to Judge Speer; but I do not believe he will resign until he is 70 years of age, and then he will retire under the present law and draw the salary that the law allows.

Mr. DONOVAN. The gentleman should have told you, Mr. Chairman, that the position is for life—or, in other words, that the Constitution reads "during good behavior," and good behavior consists in drawing the salary attached to the office. [Laughter.]

Mr. WEBB. I believe the gentleman knows that this——

Mr. DONOVAN. The chairman of the committee is a great lawyer; but I have the floor, and the gentleman should address the Chair and not set a bad example to his associates here.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Connecticut yield?

Mr. DONOVAN. It will give me much pleasure to yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Chairman, I beg the pardon of the gentleman. I did not mean to breach the rules when the gentleman was speaking, but of course we know that while these are life-tenure positions that the law provides that the judge who has served 10 years and arrives at the age of 70 years has a right to retire and draw the pay allowed by law, and it is assumed that at his arrival at the age of 70 years Judge Speer will retire on account of bad health on such pay as the law allows him. He is now 67 years of age, and it is assumed that at the end of the three-year period still remaining he will retire.

Mr. DONOVAN. I suggest, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman's knowledge of the law is a little faulty. There is no such provision of the law. The Constitution says, and says plainly, "during good behavior." Article III, section 1, says:

> The judges, both of the Supreme and inferior courts, shall hold their offices during good behavior, and shall at stated times receive for their services a compensation, which shall not be diminished during their continuance in office.

And under no circumstances is there any cause——

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Connecticut yield to the gentleman from North Carolina?

Mr. DONOVAN. I will be delighted to yield.

Mr. WEBB. We are familiar with the provisions of the Constitution which the gentleman has read, but surely the gentleman knows there is a statute enacted by Congress which gives these gentlemen the privilege, after having served to the age of 70 years, of retiring with full pay. And the average judge whose health is bad, and who has arrived at the age of 70, usually takes advantage of that law and retires and draws full pay, instead of remaining on the bench.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, I was recognized for one hour, was I not?

The CHAIRMAN. You were.

Mr. DONOVAN. I will say to the gentleman from North Carolina that there is no provision that will interfere with the constitutional provision. You may pass what you wish, but the Constitution stands notwithstanding. And any lawyer knows that. The gentleman, as chairman of the committee, ought to have told his associates this, Mr. Chairman, that in the report it is stated that for three years in this particular court there were only 46 civil cases. Now, think of that. Forty-six civil cases in three years. That shows to a certain extent that it is not a court of much business. About 15 civil cases a year. Oh, the gentleman will say, if he gets the floor again, that they had a great many criminal cases. Well, criminal cases in a district court do not amount to much. They are largely technical crimes—that is to say, violations of internal-revenue laws—and you can try 50 or a hundred of them in a day. I believe up our way we have held a whole term of court in less than one hour. There is no dispute. Once I believe in this court here they did have a case that took some time to try, but probably it has been the only one in the whole Southern States in the last 15 years. Now, in all these criminal cases where they are caught and have not paid a special tax they have nothing else to do except to "pay the fiddler," and the accused is lacking in good sense if he employs a lawyer. [Laughter.] Now, the chairman of the committee took advantage of that when he kept that knowledge from his associates.

Now, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] stated as to the position in Chicago, for two years and a half it has not been filled. Now, in Chicago there is more business done in the United States court, no doubt, in one year than there is in all the district courts of the Southern States in 10 years. There is no doubt about that. They have some counterfeiting cases that take time; they have some civil cases that take time; but in the Eastern States and in the Southern States, where there is much less business done, it is done almost wholly in the State courts, and the gentleman, the chairman of the committee, knows that.

As a Democrat, Mr. Chairman, I will have to vote against this measure in order to keep up with the policy of the Democratic Party of economy in public expense.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SIMS. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. DONOVAN. I will be pleased to yield.

Mr. SIMS. I have not heard all that has been said about the bill, either for or against it.

Mr. DONOVAN. The gentleman never will hear all that lawyers should say. They only state what is necessary to say to the case at hand.

Mr. SIMS. It is shown that this judge is unable to perform the duties of his office, and they want to appoint a new judge, and retire the old judge under the provisions of the bill?

Mr. DONOVAN. It is not so here.

Mr. SIMS. According to what the gentleman said about the very small amount of business done, and that this judge is not very well, the associate judges can come in, other judges that are not overworked, and are not ill.

Mr. DONOVAN. That is the practice of the court elsewhere. They do call in additional judges in other places.

Mr. SIMS. Why do they not do it and give this sick man a rest?

Mr. WEBB. They have called in four different judges in this court.

Mr. DONOVAN. We have in the New England States four district judges, and one died, and it was two years and a half before another was appointed in his place, and during that time no one suffered.

Mr. SIMS. Can not they put in another judge temporarily and clean up this docket?

Mr. WEBB. Was the gentleman addressing me?

Mr. SIMS. Anybody who can answer.

Mr. WEBB. I can tell the gentleman. Judge Grubb, Judge Shepherd, Judge Pardee, and Judge Newman have been in the district in the last two or three years in order to clean up this docket.

Mr. SIMS. On account of the ill health of the regular judge?

Mr. WEBB. On account of the ill health of Judge Speer.

Mr. SIMS. Is this judge unfit or unable to go ahead with his duties?

Mr. WEBB. He is absolutely; and it will take three years to clean up this docket.

Mr. SIMS. Why not appoint a new judge?

Mr. WEBB. I will say to the gentleman from Tennessee that there was quite a demand on the part of the people of Georgia for a new judicial district, with an additional judge, but the Committee on the Judiciary, knowing the sentiment and feeling of Members that it is best to be economical, and feeling that way ourselves, we did not agree to that, and said, "No; we will appoint a judge, but when Judge Speer resigns or dies no successor shall be appointed."

Mr. SIMS. That is only a temporary appointment?

Mr. WEBB. Yes.

Mr. SIMS. Then it would not give this new judge the right to retire after serving 10 years or more?

Mr. WEBB. Oh, certainly. This is a permanent judge.

Mr. SIMS. I understood the gentleman to say it was temporary.

Mr. WEBB. Judge Speer will be entitled to retire in 10 years. He is now in very feeble health, and the supposition is that he will retire in three years; that is, when he reaches the age of 70. Whether he does retire or not, he is not able now to do the work of his district. This will not cost any more to the country after three years to have that additional judge down there, for at the end of that time Judge Speer can retire.

Mr. SIMS. If he is not able to do the work, why not retire him permanently and appoint a permanent judge?

Mr. WEBB. You can not retire him until he has reached the age of 70, and then only if he chooses to retire.

Mr. SIMS. Not by an act of Congress?

Mr. WEBB. It is a life position. A special act could give him the right to retire earlier, but Congress could not force him to retire.

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. He could hold on until he is 90 if he wished.

Mr. SIMS. Why can you not in your act provide for that?

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, this is a kind of tea party. I thought I had the floor. [Laughter.]

Mr. SIMS. If he does not do the work and has already been impeached on account of what he has done, why not get rid of him?

Mr. WEBB. He has not been impeached. He has been investigated.

Mr. SIMS. I mean an effort has been made to impeach him.

Mr. WEBB. He can not do the work of two men.

Mr. SIMS. Considering the criticisms of what he has done, is it not manifest that the less work he does do down there the better it will be for the people down there?

Mr. WEBB. I would not exactly make that statement.

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, I may say that it is not in the power of Congress to compel any judge to retire against his will.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Who has the floor?

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. Retirement must be a voluntary act on the part of the judge.

Mr. SIMS. Is it not in the power of Congress to retire him with pay?

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. No. He must himself consent. He must himself accept the benefits of the law.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEBB. Certainly.

Mr. SLAYDEN. You are undertaking, as I understand it, to have appointed a judge in this district in Georgia to serve during the period of the inability of Judge Speer to discharge the duties of his office and to supplement the work so as to clear up a congested docket. Is that right?

Mr. WEBB. Not quite. This judge, when appointed, will be a permanent appointment, but Judge Speer's successor shall not be appointed; or, rather, Judge Speer will have no successor.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Has the gentleman in charge of this bill given any attention to the condition in the fifth circuit, where the judge is very much more than 80 years old and physically unable to discharge the duties of his office, and who declines to exercise his constitutional right to retire?

Mr. WEBB. I will say to my friend that I have given thought to that situation he mentions, and we discussed it here a while ago—the gentleman from Washington [Mr. BRYAN] and I. I not only understood that the judge in Texas would not resign, but that he was able to do some work but refused to do so.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I do not think he is physically able to do the work. For the last year or two he was helped onto the bench.

Mr. WEBB. I think under such circumstances a judge ought to have enough self-respect to retire and let a new judge be appointed.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I think so; but I think the committee ought to give us some relief, and have an additional judge appointed in that circuit under the precise circumstances suggested in this Georgia district which we are now considering.

Mr. BARTLETT. If my friend will introduce a bill——

Mr. SLAYDEN. Your friend has already introduced such a bill.

Mr. WEBB. There has been no such statement justifying the creation of a new judge down there as has been presented in this pending case. If the gentleman from Texas will make to the committee as strong a statement as he has made here, we will look into the facts and probably recommend such legislation.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Some of my colleagues are lawyers, and perhaps they can state the situation more clearly and forcibly than I can, and perhaps they may be able to take that task off my hands.

Mr. WEBB. I think there should be another circuit judge in your circuit, and, for my part, I would be willing to recommend it. It would not increase the expense, but it would supply an able-bodied judge. We shall give the matter consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will now read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States shall appoint an additional district judge for the southern district of the State of Georgia, by and with the consent of the Senate, who shall reside in the said district and shall possess the same qualifications and have the same power and jurisdiction and receive the same salary now prescribed by law in respect of the present district judge therein.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert in line 9, page 1, after the word "therein," the following: "Provided, however, That the President shall make public all indorsements made in behalf of the person appointed as such district judge."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, concerning this amendment, or the original Cullop amendment, which is only being changed to make it applicable to this case, the distinguished leader of the Democratic Party, the Secretary of State, Mr. Bryan, made this statement:

Is there anything in that amendment that an honest man can object to? Why should the President desire to conceal the recommendations upon which he appoints public servants? And why should he be permitted to conceal recommendations if he does desire to do so? The amendment does not interfere with his right to appoint; it simply asks him to step out into the daylight and let the people see to what indorsements he gives weight and what indorsements he ignores. Anything wrong about that?

The opponents of the amendment say that it is unconstitutional. The objection is ridiculous; but suppose it were a doubtful question? Why not let the court decide the question of constitutionality? If the amendment is desirable, let Congress pass the bill; the Federal courts can be relied upon not to allow the people to have any more light than the Constitution permits. The 13 Democrats opposing the law give the benefit of the doubt to the predatory interests. If the 13 had their way about it, the courts would have no chance to decide the question on the side of the people.

The 13 Democrats made a mistake—a grievous mistake. With some of them such mistakes are a matter of habit, but some of the 13 are new offenders. It remains to be seen whether they have been misled or have deliberately started on a downward course. Their constituents should write them, demanding an explanation. By the time they get through explaining they will know more.

[Laughter on the Republican side.]

So, in order that we may know more, I ask the opportunity that gentlemen may vote on this amendment once more.

Mr. BARTLETT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. In a moment. When the Cullop amendment was first offered 13 Democrats voted against it. I do not remember whether all of the 13 are still in the House or have been promoted, while many of them who voted on the other side have been retired to private life; but there were 13 who received this scolding from the distinguished Secretary of State, who tells your President what to do. Now, I will yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. BARTLETT. The gentleman said this was the Cullop amendment. The Cullop amendment embraced all oral and written recommendations. The amendment of the gentleman from Illinois does not go that far?

Mr. MANN. I think the Cullop amendment did not say that; but it did say "all indorsements." My amendment says "all indorsements of the man who is appointed." I put it that way in order that there might be no question about its being in order.

Mr. BARTLETT. My friend from Illinois did not vote for the Cullop amendment, did he?

Mr. MANN. No; and I shall not vote for this one. I hope no one requires me to make an announcement that I am not in favor of most of the provisions of the Democratic platform. That is one provision I do not favor; will gentlemen on the other side repudiate it? It is no dishonor to me to repudiate it.

Mr. BARTLETT. As for myself, I never voted for it.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman repudiated the Democratic platform, then.

Mr. BARTLETT. I am perfectly willing to repudiate that part of it. I do not think the Democratic Party or anybody else has a right to bind me to vote for an unconstitutional provision.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Cox) there were 51 ayes and 24 noes.

Mr. WEBB. I ask for tellers.

Mr. MANN. Oh, do not filibuster; let us have a vote in the House.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed as tellers Mr. MANN and Mr. WEBB.

The committee again divided, and the tellers reported that there were 47 ayes and 30 noes.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk completed the reading of the bill.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill with the amendment to the House, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and the bill as amended do pass.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from North Carolina.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WEBB and Mr. CRISP) there were 49 ayes and 28 noes.

So the motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 17869 and had directed him to report the same back to the House with an amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. CULLOP) there was 36 ayes and 37 noes.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana makes the point of no quorum, and evidently no quorum is present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 161, nays 103, answered "present" 1, not voting 164, as follows:

THURSDAY, December 10, 1914.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we come to Thee in the face of a great task, that we may be workmen that need not be ashamed. We are not satisfied that our Government shall be only the expression of our best philosophy of human life, but we would remember that back of all our endeavor and back of all our authority is God's will. Thy will can not be changed by human force, but it is ever responsive to human needs. We pray that Thou wilt supply us with all the graces of character and that wisdom which will fit us for the tasks of this day, and that that which we do may redound to the honor and glory of Thy name. For Christ's sake. Amen.

REPORT OF THE SERGEANT AT ARMS.

Mr. FLETCHER. Doc. No. 638]. It is the annual report of the Sergeant at Arms required by law, and it is printed each year.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. FLETCHER. I ask that the statement of the Sergeant at Arms of the Senate relative to the proceeds derived from the sale of certain property belonging to the United States be taken from the table and that it be printed as a document [S. REGULATION OF IMMIGRATION.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed, and the calender under Rule VIII is in order.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 6060, the unfinished business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Carolina moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 6060. The question is on agreeing to the motion.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6060) to regulate the immigration of aliens to and the residence of aliens in the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending amendment of the committee will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, lines 14, 15, and 16, strike out the following words:

On account of aliens who have, in accordance with law, declared their intention of becoming citizens of the United States or.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment. It will be agreed to, without objection.

The next amendment was, in section 2, page 4, line 15, after the word "alien," to strike out the additional proviso in the following words:

Provided further, That the provisions of this section shall not apply to aliens arriving in Guam or Hawaii; but if any such alien, not having become a citizen of the United States, shall later arrive at any port or place of the United States on the North American Continent, the provisions of this section shall apply.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, from the very hasty examination I have been able to give this bill, which appears to be rushing forward with an unprecedented speed, I am not sure that I fully comprehend the effect of this amendment. I desire to ask the chairman of the committee if it is the purpose of the amendment to permit the landing of all kinds of aliens without restriction in the Hawaiian Islands?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The object is just the opposite. It is proposed that the proviso be stricken out. Those in charge of the administration of the law recommended it to the committee, and it was agreed to. The Secretary of Labor said:

The exemption, of course, has never amounted to anything so far as Guam is concerned, and its value as an encouragement to European immigration to Hawaii—which is understood to have been the original purpose of its insertion in the law—may seriously be doubted. Its chief effect is to relieve a number of Asiatic aliens of the payment of $4 each time they enter or reenter the islands. Moreover, the Government is paying all the expense of the enforcement of the law in Hawaii, and there seems to be no sound reason why aliens entering that territory should not contribute to the "revenues" collected from immigrants.

Mr. REED. That explanation is satisfactory to me, and my only apology for asking the question is that it has been impossible for me to give the bill full consideration. I had hoped that the Senator in charge of it would be willing to let it lie over one day further, but he appears to be unwilling to do so. I examined the bill as well as I could last night, and I shall ask for no further time myself.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I wish to state to the Senator from Missouri that after having perfected the bill by these committee amendments I hope all the time necessary for a full understanding and discussion of the bill will be had in this body, because it is a bill of prime importance, and I do not propose to deny to any Member of the Senate an opportunity to understand it fully. As I said yesterday, the amendments are largely verbal and do not touch the vital issues in the bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Immigration was, in section 3, page 4, line 25, after the word "previously," to insert "persons of constitutional psychopathic inferiority; persons with chronic alcoholism," so as to read:

SEC. 3. That the following classes of aliens shall be excluded from admission into the United States: All idiots, imbeciles, feeble-minded persons, epileptics, insane persons; persons who have had one or more attacks of insanity at any time previously; persons of constitutional psychopathic inferiority; persons with chronic alcoholism——

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will venture to ask the chairman of the committee who is responsible for the phrase "constitutional psychopathic inferiority" and just what it means?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. All I can say is that that phrase came from that very learned, necessary, and dignified body of which the honorable Senator from New Hampshire is a member. It came, as I understand, from the American Society of Medicine.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, a psychopath is a morally irresponsible person; that is the definition that I have become acquainted with; but how we are going to determine whether an alien has a "constitutional psychopathic inferiority" that should exclude him I can not quite comprehend. What degree of inferiority will be required as sufficient to exclude him? If the phrase were "psychopathic constitutional tendency," or "constitutional psychopathic infirmity," I could understand that, but the word "inferiority" is certainly an obscure one.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I presume that phraseology was incorporated by the learned body of medical doctors of this country. They incorporated it, as they do a great many other things; they cover up some very innocent and some very harmful things sometimes under a phraseology. I suppose the phrase means one whose moral inheritance renders him by virtue of his hereditary taint inferior. I do not know of any other meaning of the phrase. We incorporated the phrase believing, as I think the Senator believes, in the wisdom of that learned profession.

Mr. GALLINGER. Of course a person is mentally inferior if he belongs to that class; but when you speak of "constitutional psychopathic inferiority," you must have something to compare it with, and I do not know what it is. If the comparison is to be made with an entirely sound mind, I think that the degree of inferiority should in some way be defined.

Mr. President, my distinguished colleague, the Senator from Oregon [Mr. LANE], is fresher in the matter of medicine than I am, and I should like to ask him if he can interpret the phrase "psychopathic constitutional inferiority"?

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, in reply to the Senator from New Hampshire, I will say that I was much puzzled by that phrase in the bill when I read it. I do not know how "constitutional psychopathic inferiority" can be ascertained or who is to sit in judgment upon another man in relation to that matter; but we might get a psychopathic judge.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, as we have provided for medical examinations, and as this recommendation came from an organized medical body of this country, the committee concluded that medical men would be the best interpreters of it, and were the very best people to conserve the interests of the United States in this regard.

Mr. GALLINGER. This bill will go to conference, and doubtless the suggestion I have made will lead to an inquiry concerning the matter. I will ask the Senator from South Carolina what medical association or what medical gentlemen suggested that phraseology?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I have not the letter pertaining to the matter before me at this moment, but I can produce it. The suggestion came from the leading physicians in the city of New York, I believe, and possibly from those of some other contiguous cities.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am myself so rusty in medicine that I do not pretend to understand a great many modern medical terms, but this struck me as being so peculiar that I thought I would call attention to it. However, if distinguished alienists suggested it I certainly will not contest it.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I suppose the phrase is intended to mean a broader condition of inferiority than mere tendencies.

Mr. GALLINGER. Likely so, but the degree of inferiority is an important matter. Some distinguished philosopher has suggested that we are all insane, it being only a matter of degree, and there is much force in that suggestion.

Mr. REED. Before the Senator from New Hampshire takes his seat—he is not only a learned physician, but he is also a scholar—I should like also to have his opinion on the phrase "persons with chronic alcoholism." The language is not "persons afflicted with chronic alcoholism," but simply "persons with chronic alcoholism." Is there some medical refinement that might make that term plain?

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say to the Senator from Missouri that I think the language would be greatly improved if the words "afflicted with" were inserted.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, in view of the fact that the chairman of the committee does not understand the phrase, that the learned Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] does not understand it, and that the learned physician, the Senator from Oregon [Mr. LANE], does not know what it means, it seems to me it would be quite in order for the Senate to accept it for the same reason that the committee has accepted it, and to pass it along, turning these people over to the tender mercies of the immigration agent who is presumptively much more intelligent than any of the gentlemen I have just named.

Speaking seriously, however, it occurs to me that the phrase ought to go back to the committee to be revamped and clarified. So I suggest that the amendment be passed over, in order that the committee may again go over it.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, it is useless to take up the time of the Senate on a matter of this kind. As I said before, this language was recommended by the physicians who have in charge the examination of these immigrants; certain of their terminology is not familiar to us; but it was incorporated in the bill, and as they are the ones charged with the duty of examining these immigrants to ascertain their physical defects and ailments the language was incorporated as recommended.

I myself think that the suggestion made that the phrase "persons with chronic alcoholism" might be improved by inserting the words "afflicted with" or "possessed of." I think that, however, can be very easily worked out in conference.

Mr. REED. I can hardly agree to the phrase suggested by the Senator from South Carolina—"persons possessed of chronic alcoholism." I think the amendment ought to go back to the committee, and I ask the chairman of the committee to consent to the amendment being passed over. Otherwise, I shall make a motion that it be recommitted to the committee.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Very well; let the amendment be passed over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment will be passed over.

The next amendment of the Committee on Immigration was, in section 3, page 5, line 8, after the word "such," to strike out the words "mental or," so as to read:

Persons not comprehended within any of the foregoing excluded classes who are found to be and are certified by the examining surgeon as being mentally or physically defective, such physical defect being of a nature which may affect the ability of such alien to earn a living.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 10, after the word "or," to strike out the words "admit having committed" and to insert "who at the time of seeking admission to the United States are legally charged with," so as to read:

Persons who have been convicted of or who at the time of seeking admission to the United States are legally charged with a felony or other crime or misdemeanor involving moral turpitude.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, it seems to me that this raises a very interesting and important question. The language of the House bill was:

Persons who have been convicted of or admit having committed a felony or other crime or misdemeanor involving moral turpitude.

That is changed by the committee of the Senate to read:

Persons who have been convicted of or who at the time of seeking admission to the United States are legally charged with a felony.

If that phrase is so drawn that it will relate only to those acts which we ordinarily denominate crimes, which are recognized as crimes in this country, then I think I would offer no objection to it, but at several places in the bill a somewhat similar change appears, and it seems to me that it might result in this, that persons charged with political crimes and seeking refuge in this country might be denied admission and turned back to the country from which they had escaped.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, if the Senator from Missouri will allow me, if he will look on page 9, line 21, at the bottom of the page, he will find that the text of the bill reads as follows:

Provided, That nothing in this act shall exclude, if otherwise admissible, persons convicted of or legally charged with an offense purely political, not involving moral turpitude.

Mr. REED. Well, Mr. President, I still am fearful of the effect of the phraseology as to a crime purely political.

This occurs to me—and I think it is a serious matter—it has been our policy always to permit one who seeks refuge in this country, who flees from the tyranny of other lands, to enter here; and it is my understanding, although I have not had the opportunity to examine it, that such a person has hitherto been accorded the right of a trial in our courts to determine whether or not he was merely a political fugitive. Of course, such fugitives are always charged with high treason, or they are charged with some other crime which, so far as the charge is concerned, involves a great degree of moral turpitude; but, as a matter of fact, while that may be the charge, yet these people may be fleeing from oppression. The mere charge ought not to bar them from entry.

Let me illustrate that to the Senate; and I use this illustration merely to elucidate the argument. Germany has overrun and for the time being has conquered and taken possession of Belgium. Suppose, now, that a Belgian were to assail the authorities who have been established there through the force of arms; that this Belgian, believing that his loyalty and duty were still to the King of his country, who has been expelled, were to do some act which offended against the present military power; suppose that he should be legally charged with some act, the charge involving moral turpitude, whereas as a matter of fact all he had done was to contend on behalf of his stricken land, and under those circumstances he were to come to this country, seeking harbor and refuge, would it be the part of wisdom or would it be consistent with our national policies as they have heretofore existed, upon the mere presentation of a charge or indictment, to compel an immigration agent to turn him back? I do not think we should do that, and yet I believe that would be the consequence of this language.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. LODGE. I was merely going to say to the Senator that this clause, except for the words in italics, is the existing law.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Under the act of 1907.

Mr. LODGE. The only difference is the insertion by the Senate committee of the words "legally charged."

Mr. REED. That is exactly the point I am making.

Mr. LODGE. One moment. The Senator is speaking about the Belgians. Of course Belgium is now under military control. We recognize the Belgian Government's existence; the Belgian minister is here received. We take no recognition of that military control. There could be no indictment, because that territory is under military power, and I can not conceive how this provision could be so twisted as to keep out a Belgian because he fought for his country.

Mr. REED. Now, if the Senator will pardon me——

Mr. LODGE. Of course we do not want to do anything of that sort. I agree with the Senator as to that.

Mr. REED. I do not believe the Senator does want to do that.

Mr. LODGE. But I do not see how the provision can possibly be twisted in such a way as to do that.

Mr. REED. The Senator is arguing the details of an illustration, which is never the right way to arrive at a conclusion, which the illustration was simply offered to elucidate. While it is true that Belgium is to-day under military control, it does not follow that next week or next month the Imperial Government of Germany may not set up a civil government in Belgium, establish courts and forms of procedure there; neither does it follow that if a poor Belgian under those circumstances should refuse to obey some order he might not be indicted under some law or rule established by the autocratic authority which might be set up; and to say to him that, because the charge has been made, he can not come into this country, it seems to me, is going too far. He can not even be permitted to show that the charge is untrue; he can not be permitted to go back of a mere indictment or charge by some officer; but he must be bound absolutely by it, being denied the right to show the fact to be that his act was purely that of a patriot seeking to defend his country.

Mr. LODGE. Of course, we should have to recognize the German Government there first. No weight would be given to their proceedings unless we had recognized that they were the Government there.

Mr. REED. Possibly that is the case, and yet I do not think it necessarily follows. I do not believe that a mere charge ought to be sufficient to keep a man out. I believe we ought to reserve to ourselves the right to ascertain the facts for ourselves. I should not object at all to a clause imposing upon the applicant for admission the burden of showing that the charge was unfounded; but to deny him absolutely the right to enter this country would, in my opinion, if the same policy had existed in the past, have excluded the great majority of those patriotic people who fled here for sanctuary.

The chairman of the committee states to me in a remark on the side that the question would be still left to be decided. Not so. The language of the bill is language of exclusion; and incorporated in the class of people who are to be excluded are persons who have been convicted of or who at the time of seeking admission to the United States are legally charged with a felony or other crime or misdemeanor involving moral turpitude.

Mr. BORAH, Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. BORAH. Under the clause which the Senator is discussing, who is to pass upon the question whether or not the charge involves moral turpitude?

Mr. REED. Manifestly, the immigration inspector.

Mr. BORAH. I think that is as serious an objection as the other. The Supreme Court of the United States some time ago sustained the decision of an immigration inspector and the department, which had for its effect the exclusion from the United States of a native-born citizen, and he was denied the privilege of presenting to the courts of the country the question as to whether or not he was a native-born citizen. In other words, the court sustained the decision of the department as being conclusive as against a man who was prepared to prove that he was a native-born citizen of the United States, and he was excluded. I think it is a very dangerous power to lodge in a mere department officer. In the dissenting opinion, Justice Brewer said: "Such a decision is to my mind appalling." I agree with the learned justice—such a vicious principle of bureaucracy engrafted on our free institutions is appalling.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. If the Senator from Missouri will allow me, I think it will be conceded by every Member of this body that the administrative features of the bill—and this is one of them—must be lodged in some competent body. I presume our immigration officers charged with this duty are selected with due regard for their fitness to enter into the merits of any particular case. While there may be from time to time some hardship or perhaps some injustice by virtue of the administration of the law, nevertheless it seems to me to be practically impossible so to define the law as to make it perfect in its letter without leaving something to the judgment of those charged with its administration.

The reason why we wrote in this clause was that it seemed absurd to think that anybody seeking to come to the United States would admit that he had been guilty of that which under the terms of our law would unfit him to enter; and we put in this clause, "legally charged," so that in case he came duly to trial and was cleared of the charge he could then enter, and if convicted, by the very text of the law of 1907, he could not enter.

Therefore it seemed to me that this was the very language we should use, because if he were legally charged he would be then under indictment, and if convicted under the terms of the old law he could not come in. If we are going to make the United States an asylum to which felons and those who may escape the processes of the courts may come and enter, why, then, let us leave out this language.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Carolina permit a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I want to ask if it is not a fact that under the treaties existing between the United States and European countries any person coming here who was under an indictment would be secured and returned?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. That is my understanding.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Then, in view of that case, is there any necessity of incorporating this amendment in the bill? I am not certain that it should not be done. I am merely asking for information.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I should think this language would often help expedite matters, and would largely tend to obviate the necessity of going through the process of extradition papers, and so forth, because if there is lodged against the individual a legal charge which would unfit him for entry if he should be convicted of it, it seems to me it would be only paying proper respect to other nations which have processes of courts such as ours. A culprit fleeing from this country and going abroad would be excluded there if in their immigration law they were to incorporate a provision that if he was legally charged he could not enter. It seems to me the language here is the proper language to use in the premises.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, among my early recollections is laid up this fact: Having attended a public school, the president of the school board being an old Bohemian who had fled to this country and whose estates had been confiscated because of a rebellion against the authority of Austria, I have not the slightest doubt that he was charged with high treason and charged in a legal form; nearly all of his compatriots were executed, and I have not the slightest doubt but that if this law had been in existence an immigration agent would have stopped him at the shores of our country and sent him back to his death. Yet, of all the men I have ever known upon this earth, I have regarded him as one of the most intelligent, most patriotic, most moral.

This matter ought to be approached in a grave frame of mind at this particular moment. All Europe is aflame with war. Armies are marching and countermarching across devastated countries. The King of Belgium and the remnant of the Belgium Army are fighting on soil that is foreign to them. We are told by the press—whether truthfully or not I can not say—that the spirit of revolt against what these peoples regard as oppression is aflame in many of the Provinces of Austria, or in many of the smaller subdivisions that make up Austria. Before this war is over, or when it is over, it is entirely probable that thousands and perhaps hundreds of thousands of people will seek refuge in this country, undertaking to escape from the courts and military tribunals of a conquering power; and all that will be necessary in order to compel this Government to return them, if this bill be passed in this form, will be for the monarch who has achieved victory to file with our immigration agents a list of the men against whom some charge has been lodged and the poor victim must be returned. He will have no power to go into one of our courts and assert that his offense was purely a political one, and that instead of being a crime it was an act of the highest patriotism. He will be entitled to be represented by no counsel, for, at least in some parts of this bill, it is provided that the hearing before the commissioners shall be a secret hearing. The merits of his case will not be passed upon by a judge or by a jury, but he will be taken before an immigration agent. We deny to that immigration agent any discretion whatever in the premises. Being an administrative officer, all he can do is to follow the letter of the law. The letter of the law as we write it is that if a legal charge has been filed involving a felony the immigrant must be returned to the country from which he came. That may result in sending back to their death or to long terms of imprisonment thousands of the best people of Europe.

As the phrase stood in the House bill, and as I understand it stands in the present law, the man must have been convicted, or he must admit his guilt. To be convicted of a crime or to admit guilt of a crime is a very different thing from being merely charged with a crime. To be denied access to this country because you have been convicted of a crime or admit a crime is a very different thing from being denied access to it because some officer has put a charge against you.

I am not familiar with the methods of procedure in those countries, but I think it is safe to assume that they do not more carefully guard the interests of their subject people than we guard the interests of our citizens. In many of the States of this country a mere prosecuting officer may file a charge. It may not be sustained by a single scintilla of substantial evidence. It may be false in every particular. If such an officer existed in Europe—and probably they have officers with similar and even more arbitrary powers—the mere signing of the name of that officer to a charge deprives the victim of refuge in this land, and the enactment of this law deprives our courts and our Government of any right to investigate as to the truth of the matter.

The effort to exclude foreigners—that is the purpose of this bill—those who are its authors, in my opinion, would gladly close the doors of this country forever to every man born upon foreign soil.

I beg of the committee and of the Senate, particularly at this period of the world's strife, not to enact a law that may turn back patriots, lovers of liberty, soldiers who have fought in defense of their country and their homes, thereby sending them to the prison, the scaffold, or the block.

I have no sympathy with a proposition of that kind. It ought not to be enacted at this time of all others. If the committee will recast this proposition, leaving the refugee the right to appear before some tribunal presided over by a judge, and there demonstrate the fact that he is a good citizen and a good man, and that the charge against him is a false charge, I shall make no complaint. I hope the committee will consider this matter, however; and I ask the chairman of the committee if he is not willing to have this particular amendment passed over for further consideration by the committee?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I hardly think there is any additional comment needed on this particular paragraph. I have listened to what the Senator from Missouri has had to say. I do not think that the United States should be charged with or should assume the burden of passing upon the legal processes of other countries. I think all our treaties and laws in our relationship with them should recognize their due processes of law as we would insist that they should recognize ours. If one who is legally charged with crime desires to come here, as a matter of course the moment the case is decided, if he is convicted, the automatic operation of the law already in force debars him. If he is acquitted the doors are wide open to him. We have recognized the processes of law of other countries, and we expect them to recognize ours. I see no possible objection to this amendment.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Mr. President, though a member of the committee, I have no recollection of having been present at any hearing when this particular paragraph was under discussion. I very strongly disapprove of it. The only excuse for its insertion is to enable the immigration officers to learn something regarding the character of the alien, and from this language his character is presumed to be bad, because he has been accused of the commission of a crime. It does violence to the law on the subject of character as applied, I believe, in every State court of the United States and in the Federal courts of the Nation, because no witness will be required to answer a question regarding accusations that may have been made against him, and all the courts hold that the mere accusation, the mere finding of an indictment, no matter how serious the crime, can not be regarded as impeaching the character of the individual. If he has been arrested, if he has been imprisoned, that may be regarded as bearing upon his character, but the bill as amended by the committee contemplates that the mere accusation against an alien charging him with some act of moral turpitude shall in itself be sufficient to stamp him as a man of unworthy character and unfit to be admitted into the United States.

I think that the provision placed in the bill by the House is a good provision and that it ought to be retained. In substance, it declares that any person convicted of a crime or who admits his guilt shall be excluded. The suggestion has just been made by the chairman of the committee that if he has been accused by a foreign government of the commission of an offense that ought to be sufficient to exclude him. If he has been indicted under foreign law and the foreign government is anxious to secure his presence to proceed with the prosecution, that can be accomplished by an entirely different law—by our treaty regulations—by which we recognize the right of extraditing a citizen of this country who has been accused and perhaps indicted under the laws of some foreign government for the commission of an offense.

If the chairman does not think it proper to defer the further consideration of this provision at this time, I shall ask to have the House provision stand and the committee amendment rejected.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, as I construe this amendment it in effect provides that where a subject of some other nation has been charged with a crime under the laws of his own country he shall not be admitted. I think that is a perfectly just provision. Why should this Government under those circumstances take upon itself the burden of trying a man and determining whether he is guilty or innocent? It is entirely proper that he should be returned to his own country where the charge is made against him and there have him tried. Looking at it in that way I see no objection to the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. REED. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. WALSH. The question is on the adoption of the committee amendment?

So the amendment was rejected.

The next amendment of the Committee on Immigration was, in section 3, page 5, line 13, after the word "turpitude," to strike out "polygamist" and insert "polygamists."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, page 6, line 6, after the word "who," to insert "directly or indirectly"; in line 6, after the word "to," to strike out "bring in" and insert "procure or import"; in line 7, after the word "or," to strike out "women or girls" and insert "persons"; and in line 8, after the word "any," to strike out "others" and insert "other"; so as to read:

Prostitutes, or persons coming into the United States for the purpose of prostitution or for any other immoral purpose; persons who directly or indirectly procure or attempt to procure or import prostitutes or persons for the purpose of prostitution or for any other immoral purpose; persons who are supported by or receive in whole or in part the proceeds of prostitution.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, page 6, line 17, after the word "unskilled," to insert "mental or manual," so as to read:

Persons hereinafter called contract laborers, who have been induced, assisted, encouraged, or solicited to migrate to this country by offers or promises of employment, whether such offers or promises are true or false, or in consequence of agreements, oral, written, or printed, express or implied, to perform labor in this country of any kind, skilled or unskilled, mental or manual.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, page 7, line 15, after the word "existing," to strike out "treaties or," so as to read:

Unless otherwise provided for by existing agreements as to passports, or by treaties, conventions, or agreements that may hereafter be entered into.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, page 9, line 4, after the word "dialect," to strike out:

No two aliens coming in the same vessel or other vehicle of carriage or transportation shall be tested with the same slip.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, the amendment just adopted, by which the words "mental or manual" were inserted in the bill, did not, as it seems to me, in giving the subject hurried consideration, receive the consideration of the Senate that its importance required. I find it exceedingly difficult to understand upon what consideration we ought to exclude a teacher from this country because he comes here under an agreement to teach. Ought not the universities of this country be permitted to engage teachers in foreign countries?

Mr. LODGE. That is in the existing law. The admission of persons of the character the Senator describes is all provided for.

Mr. WALSH. What was the suggestion of the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. LODGE. I say, the admission of such persons as the Senator describes is provided for in the exceptions which are now in the present law and which have been there for years.

Mr. WALSH. I should like to be advised of the qualifications.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator from Montana will turn to the top of page 11, he will find this language:

Provided further, That the provisions of this law applicable to contract labor shall not be held to exclude professional actors, artists, lecturers, singers, ministers of any religious denomination, professors for colleges or seminaries.

Mr. WALSH. Then, I desire to inquire of the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts, with these exceptions, what is the significance of the language "mental or manual"?

Mr. LODGE. From what page is the Senator from Montana reading?

Mr. WALSH. I am reading from page 6.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, that is the old contract-labor law, to which those I have named are exceptions. Those three words were added on the suggestion of the department simply to make the law clear. All the rest of the language is the existing law, and has been the law for many years. They are found in what is known as the contract-labor law, which antedates any immigration legislation. The language was intended to prevent the importation of contract labor of any sort.

Mr. WALSH. If the Senator from Massachusetts will attend to the question I addressed to him, I desire to say that I observe all of the qualifications referred to on page 11. It does not extend to professional actors, artists, lecturers, or singers. I should like to know, when all those classes are excluded, what classes are included within the term "mental," as found in line 17, on page 6?

Mr. LODGE. All persons who come in under contract who are not included in the exceptions.

Mr. WALSH. But will the Senator from Massachusetts kindly indicate some who would fall within that class?

Mr. LODGE. In the first place, all manual laborers——

Mr. WALSH. Oh, yes; but I am speaking about those who would be excluded by the language added—"mental or manual."

Mr. LODGE. Well, there is a large body of manual employments that are not included in the exceptions.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I have here a communication from the Attorney General asking that this language be clarified, which I find included in the notes on the amendment, saying that very often it was hard for the courts to determine where skilled labor was employed and no actual manual labor done, whether such a laborer came under the terms of the contract-labor law. He asked that the law be clarified, and therefore the committee has recommended the insertion of the words "mental or manual."

Mr. WALSH. But we do not get any answer to the question. What I want is some concrete case.

Mr. LODGE. A clerk in a bank, for instance.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think I can give another case; at least, it looks to me like one. It looks to me as if it would exclude an engineer with whom contracts were made for the purpose of doing engineering work in the United States. Engineers might have the highest mental qualifications and their services might be of the very utmost necessity and public advantage at a certain time. So, if you are going to put the word "mental" in where it has been inserted on the page to which the Senator from Montana calls attention, the list of those who are to be exempted ought to be extended. You ought not, for example, to exclude from this country an expert accountant, nor ought you to exclude a civil or a mining or an electrical engineer. If the law is to be in spirit and in sympathy with the old contract-labor law, either the words "mental or manual" ought to be left out, leaving the language subject to the construction which it has already received, or else the list of those who are made exceptions to it on page 11 ought to be somewhat extended.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the purpose of the law is to exclude labor contracted for in a foreign country at a very low rate, a lower rate than is paid in this country. As I have said, this law, with the exceptions, has been on the statute books for many years. The words "mental or manual" were inserted because there has been a great deal of trouble under the existing law in efforts to confine it to manual laborers. The purpose of the law, I repeat, is to exclude contract labor, except in certain cases, and to prevent the making of contracts abroad at lower rates than are paid in the United States. Of course it is for the Senate to say whether they will enlarge the exceptions. I think the contract-labor law is an extremely valuable law.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, there is no one more heartily in sympathy with the whole spirit and purpose of the contract-labor law than myself, and I do not desire to subject myself in any degree to the imputation, which seems to be suggested, of hostility to the spirit of that act by calling attention to this particular amendment proposed by the committee. I do not think we have had very much enlightenment concerning this matter. It means something; it was undoubtedly aimed at some particular class of immigrants. What was the defect in the old law? What particular class of immigrants was allowed to come into this country that ought to have been excluded?

We all know, as a matter of course, the construction that was given to the old act by the Supreme Court of the United States. A man employed to come into this country as a preacher of the gospel was held not to fall within the condemnation of the act. Let us understand clearly if it is intended now to extend the operation of the act beyond the construction given to it by the Supreme Court of the United States, so that it shall no longer be possible to introduce teachers of that character.

I observe that the exceptions are very wide, but I still am eager to be told by some Senator of the particular class of immigrants at which this provision is aimed—what particular class will be left?

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] very pertinently suggests that a great engineer, who had distinguished himself in the conduct of great public works in one of the countries of Europe, might not come here. I recall now that the builder of the Assuan Dam upon the Nile did us the honor to pay a visit to this country only a year ago, and the hope was expressed in many quarters here that we might induce him to stay in this country, and that this Government of ours or some private individual might enter into a contract with him by which he should be assured employment in this country in the development of our great resources in one way or another. Is it intended to exclude such a man? Yet I undertake to say that some one would be heard to urge that the engineering profession is not one of the learned professions described in the exceptions? Let us assume, however, that it is; let us assume that the engineering profession would fall within the exceptions. Now, go on further, go on down the line, and tell us which is the class of immigrants that you desire to exclude by these rather cryptic words that have thus been introduced here into the bill.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, there is nothing very cryptic in the words "mental or manual." They are words of common knowledge. This language is not aimed at any particular class. It was, at all events, brought to the attention of some members of the committee by the representatives of the labor organizations of this country, that without the words "mental or manual" being in the present law there were being brought into this country persons with whom contracts had been made abroad, which was defeating the purpose of the contract-labor law. That was the object. It was to make the law more explicit.

Mr. WILLIAMS. What character of people would be affected?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Can the Senator state who those persons are? I am curious to know.

Mr. LODGE. I can not do that without looking back at the hearings. I think the chairman has a copy of them.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, here is the recommendation that came from the department charged with the administration of the law.

Mr. LODGE. From the present Secretary?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. From the present Commissioner of Immigration. He says:

Here is repeated the definition of "contract laborer" that is contained in section 2 of the existing immigration law. Attention is called to the opinion of the Attorney General in the McNair case (27 Opinions, 383), holding that the present law excludes only manual laborers, skilled or unskilled. I am advised that always under the act of March 3, 1903, and also under the act of February 20, 1907, until the opinion mentioned was handed down, it was the practice of the administrative officers to exclude aliens as "contract laborers" without regard to whether the work to be performed by them was of a manual or a mental nature, their idea being that "labor of any kind" included mental as well as manual occupations, and that the only exceptions permissible under the law were those specifically given in the last proviso to section 2 of the existing law (repeated in this proposed measure, lines 12–18, p. 10). That construction of section 2 of the existing law seems to be approved (obiter dicta, at least) in the decision of the Supreme Court January 5, 1914, in Lapina v. Williams. Since the date of the opinion of the Attorney General above mentioned an effort has been made to apply the law to "manual" laborers only; but it is often practically impossible to determine whether the mental or manual elements predominate in particular occupations, especially those that are skilled; and there can be no doubt that the law was intended to protect skilled as well as unskilled laborers; in fact, it was enacted and from time to time amended largely to meet demands of the skilled laborers. The law should be made perfectly plain by inserting after the words "labor * * * of any kind," (p. 6, lines 2–3), the words "mental or manual."

That was the point made by the Commissioner of Immigration—that it would be well to clarify the law and make it perfectly plain so that the courts would not be called upon to differentiate which element, manual or mental, predominated in skilled labor. If the predominance was mental, under existing law the laborer was not included in the prohibition against "contract labor." The amendment was designed to clarify that by including in the contract-labor law those who performed mental as well as those who performed manual labor; that is all. That is the recommendation of the department, and that is the reason for the insertion of the words "mental or manual."

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I think it would be a very serious mistake to amend the law as proposed. There has been a recognized evil in this country, which grew out of the wholesale importation of labor from abroad, that became a menace to the labor at home. There is every reason for the public sentiment in this country against the importation of contract labor, either skilled or unskilled, of a manual character; but there is no sentiment in this country against acquiring citizens from abroad who will add to the productive capacity of this country by reason of the mental ability which they bring to us.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the only limitation put on their coming in is that they should not make a contract before they come in.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Well, there is no reason for that, Mr. President.

Mr. LODGE. I think there is a pretty good reason for it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. There is no reason why, if a great engineer develops in Europe——

Mr. LODGE. That is covered by the exception of the learned professions.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I doubt it. There can be no objection to bringing into this country a man who has attained great ability as a manager of a certain line of manufacturing. That man becomes an asset to this country when he comes here to promote and develop a manufacturing industry which will give employment to labor and open a new line of industry in this country. There can be no possible objection, in my mind, to bringing into this country that superior class of people who would be a distinct advantage and help to the country.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, if the Senator from Nebraska will allow me to interrupt him, he will admit, I presume, that those are rare and exceptional cases and are not so very vital to the interests of this country. An American, working up steadily to attain the mental fitness for the discharge of high functions in his employment, stands face to face with the possibility of being confronted by one of equal ability from abroad who is willing to accept the position at less wages. Such cases may and do probably occur every day. An American who wants to improve his process of manufacture can go abroad and get the benefit of any new device or new idea, while the laborer who by his own industry and his own effort has worked himself up to where he is in a position to earn a higher wage is met at the threshold of his promotion by some one from abroad who is willing to take the place under contract at a less figure. I do not think that is fair.

We have made the exceptions in the bill as broad as we could make them, and propose to leave them to the good sense and judgment of those charged with the administration of the law; but it has been deemed wise, by the insertion of the proposed amendment, to meet the requirements of that aspiring class who desire to rise from the ranks of manual labor to the grade of skilled mental and manual labor and to protect them from the competition of the overcrowded population of the old world, where by some accident a man may have the same opportunity and may come here and take advantage of what has been done by the American and get his job.

That, I think, was the idea of the committee; that, in order to protect and encourage that class, the words "mental and manual" should be put into the law.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I think the Senator has answered himself when he has stated that this amendment will only affect rare cases. If it only affects rare cases, it is not necessary.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Oh, no; the Senator misunderstood me. I said the cases he cited would be rare. I say that a case where some exceptional intellect discovers a new process and wants to enter into contract to come over here and give us the benefit of something we know nothing about would be rare.

In that case, if the foreigner has something that we do desire, he can come to this country and make a contract after he comes, because American ingenuity is such, and it has such a way of looking to the main chance, that when such a man does come, if he makes good, he can enter into contract after he comes; but if the manufacturers of this country, in order not to pay just compensation, or, I will say, compensation that should be the reward of one working from the manual ranks up into the mental as well as the manual, contract for similar labor at a lower price, and bring it to this country, what incentive have you held out to the American wageworker? What incentive do we hold out to a boy working as a floor sweeper and desiring to advance higher, if you leave the door wide open for the foreigner, who has already attained that skill, to come to this country under contract and compete with him? That is the point.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The possible evil which the Senator states has, in my opinion, no existence in fact. Any man in this country who is possessed of energy and ambition, and has the real development of an idea, has no difficulty in finding a market for the services he can render. The people of this country who are unable to find a market for their services are those who have common labor and those whose labor is so unskilled as not to possess a high productive value.

This country opens an unquestioned field to the man who really has something of great value to contribute to the industrial world. I can very well imagine a case where a German chemist, for instance, possessed of the secrets of German chemistry, which are known to excel those of any other country, might be brought to this country, and that man alone introduced into an industry might result in giving employment to thousands of other people and building up in this country a great industry now monopolized by Germany.

I will follow this illustration a little further. The Senator well knows the preeminence of Germany in the matter of chemistry. It is admitted that this country is comparatively dependent upon Germany, and has been for many years, for certain dyestuffs used in our manufactures. If we transplant to this country the learning and the knowledge of those German chemists there is no reason why we can not build up those industries in this country.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The Senator knows that ample provision is made on page 11 for the exemption of that class of people.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. No; I think not. I think just such a man might be excluded from this country by some inspector in New York who would hold that he was to engage in mental labor in this country.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Yes; but he would have to be under contract; and any man who has a new process that he wants to promulgate in this country would have no difficulty in finding a ready market for it after getting here if it was worth the market. It is the class who are contracted for to engage in already established work who are excluded.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator is again mistaken. I will stick to my illustration. Take the German chemist employed in a German chemical works who realizes that he is assured a profitable maintenance for life. He will not come to this country upon a peradventure and give up the assurance which he has at home. He may be induced to come only when he is assured in advance of a permanent and a lasting employment in this country at a good salary. On the other hand, the common German laborer, crushed down by conditions in his country, will come here because he can not be any worse off here than he is there. So we have found that common labor comes to this country in excessive quantities.

One of the things from which this country is suffering at the present time, and one from which it has suffered at different periods, and always at recurring periods, is the excess of common labor, while one of the reasons why Germany has been developed to such a great degree of prosperity is that during the 44 years of the Empire Germany has utterly changed her labor conditions. When the Empire was established two-thirds of all German labor was common labor, and only one-third was skilled labor. To-day two-thirds of all the labor in Germany is skilled labor, and only one-third is common labor. The productiveness of the Empire has been enormously increased; and that has been possible in part by reason of the fact that Germany has developed intellectual men who are skilled, and who may come under this title of skilled labor of a mental sort.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. May I ask the Senator a question? Is he advised as to whether Germany imported these skilled laborers, these chemists and professors, or did she develop them herself?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do not know. I am not prepared to answer that question, because I can not, but I do not think it has anything to do with the case. My opinion is this: Undoubtedly, if Germany finds that America excels in a certain line of development she will import those skilled Americans. Undoubtedly, if Germany finds that England has developed a certain art or a certain line of manufacture or a certain industry to a high point she will import the Englishman skilled in that line, or permit him to come, and come by contract. Germany has grasped all the good she found anywhere in the world for the purpose of her own development, and I think America should follow that policy. We should not shut our gates and bar our entrances to people who can come here and build up the industries of this country by the intellectual development which they have already attained.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Will the Senator allow me to read him the provision that follows this very proposed amendment?—

The provision next foregoing, however—

Referring to this one—shall not apply to persons of the following status or occupations: Government officers, ministers or religious teachers, missionaries, lawyers, physicians, chemists, civil engineers, teachers, students, authors, merchants, and travelers for curiosity or pleasure.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That is for the very reason that this country is not suffering from an evil growing out of an excessive supply of those persons. The thing we are suffering from is an excessive supply of common labor, and sometimes of skilled labor of certain kinds. We never suffer from an excessive supply of what may be called intellectual or mental labor.

I think the amendment of the bill in this particular, whatever its purpose may be, is aimed at something which is not an evil and is likely to introduce into the bill a new provision which may be used to our detriment. Certainly there has been no showing of any existing evil which will justify a change in the present law in that respect.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will venture to ask my friend the Senator from Nebraska if the fact that skilled labor has so largely increased in Germany, is not probably due to the wonderful system of technical schools in that Empire?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I have no doubt of it. It has been the steady purpose of the German Government to develop its labor and raise it to a higher standard. The skilled laborer had an immense productiveness more than the unskilled laborer.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, when the committee come to consider this matter further, I think they will be inclined to yield somewhat. By the insertion of the word "mental" they have greatly broadened the scope of the present contract-labor law. That law was intended, as has been said, to reach manual labor. It was so broadly drawn in the first instance that a minister employed by a church in New York—Trinity Church—was under its provisions sought to be excluded. The Supreme Court of the United States held that he could be admitted, but the court, in order to reach that conclusion, went back to the purpose of the law and really worked some ravishment upon the language of the section itself. I wish, however, to call the attention of the chairman of the committee and the committee itself to one immediate effect of this proposed amendment.

We have just passed a banking and currency bill which authorizes the banks of this country to establish branch banks in foreign countries. Also we have otherwise vastly enlarged the ability of our banks to engage in international financial transactions. Already branch banks are being established in South American countries. If this amendment becomes a law, our banks maintaining branches in South America can not go to South America and employ men who are skilled in its finances and bring them here to enable them properly to carry on their South American business.

With all due respect to the committee, I do not think it wise to pass such a law. It is no answer whatever to say that somebody might drift up here from South America in search of employment, and might find his way into one of these banks and it might secure his services. What it is undoubtedly necessary for these banks to do is at once to acquire in their working forces in this country men who are familiar with the banking and financial operations of the countries in which it is proposed to establish branches. The broad language of the amendment would stop that, and the broad prohibition is made even more certain by the specific exceptions that later are written into the bill; because, under the rule that the statement of one particular exception excludes all others, it is made perfectly plain that the class of men I am referring to would be excluded.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. May I ask the Senator from Missouri a question? Does he think, under the illustration he uses, that the courts or the administrators of this law would construe those imported from a country in which we propose to establish a bank as coming under this provision? They are imported, not for the purpose of performing contract labor here, but for the purpose of teaching the methods by which the banks are carried on at that place. The exceptions I note here are broad enough:

Teachers, * * * chemists, civil engineers.

The word "teachers" is very flexible; and under the illustration the Senator uses it seems to me that the employment of those versed in the customs and procedures of their countries would necessarily come under that head, because it would be only temporary. They would be brought here for the purpose of teaching that which does not exist here, and not under the form of a contract to perform labor that is already well established and understood here.

I will agree with the Senator from Missouri that——

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, before the Senator proceeds will he have the kindness to tell us where teachers are excluded?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. It says "teachers."

Mr. WALSH. I do not find it.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. If the Senator will look on page 7, he will find it.

Mr. WALSH. Oh, well, the language on page 7 is very restricted in its operation. The Senator is entirely mistaken concerning the purpose of that provision.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. It says "teachers, missionaries, lawyers, physicians"——

Mr. WALSH. Yes; but it says that restricts only the next preceding clause.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. No; the next foregoing clause.

Mr. WALSH. The next foregoing clause, which simply refers to people who can not be naturalized here; that is, Chinese and Japanese.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, answering the Senator, he does not at all meet my illustration. The man to be employed in these banks is not employed as a teacher; but, even if he were, teachers are excluded by this bill. Professors in colleges and in seminaries of learning are excepted, but not teachers——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

Mr. REED. I will ask the Senator just to wait until I can conclude the sentence, and then I will yield to him.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It was right on that point that I wished to interrupt the Senator.

Mr. REED. This employment that I have spoken of, in a bank, is not that of calling in a man to teach others. Even if the word "teachers" were employed it would not cover the case. The National City Bank of New York, for instance, which has already established several branches, and other banks which have or may establish foreign branches, will in my opinion find it necessary to keep in their employ men who are familiar with the language, the customs, and the financial processes of each of the countries in which they have established a branch bank. Such an expert will not be brought into the bank to hold a school of instruction, a night school, or a day school. He is brought in to work at a desk and transact business. I do not know that they have employed such people, but I know in the course of events they must be employed. I will now vary the illustration, and let us see how unwise it might be to adopt this phraseology.

We expect, under existing conditions, to extend very vastly our foreign commerce. The President has recommended in that behalf that we shall buy ships, that the Government shall go into the transportation business, and we all believe that while the industrial activities of Germany and France and England are paralyzed we may now hope to extend our trade into South American countries and there obtain a permanent foothold. Now, who will say that the first step toward the obtaining of that permanent foothold is not to acquire an intimate knowledge of the wants, habits, and customs of those people, their trade methods, their manner of doing business, and all that multitude of facts which have been hitherto gathered by the merchants of foreign countries and to which trade experts largely ascribe the success and dominance of foreign merchants in these South American countries? Which one of us is willing to say to an American manufacturer, a cotton manufacturer in the State of Georgia, "If you desire to do business in Chile you can not employ a man from that country who understands the language, habits, and customs of that people and place him in charge of the branch of your foreign trade department which deals with the people of Chile"? Who shall say to a merchant who desires to enter some other South American country, "You can not employ a man who speaks the language of the country and who is acquainted with its trade conditions"? Why should we so cripple our American merchants?

Before I take my seat I want to make one other observation.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President——

Mr. REED. Then I will yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not want the Senator to take his seat. I only want to make a suggestion.

Mr. REED. I have always been an earnest advocate of the law that prohibits the bringing in of laborers under contract. I have always so believed and so voted. I have always denounced those who have gone to foreign lands and imported men under contract to take the places of American workingmen; but if you insert this word "mental" here, without any restriction upon its meaning otherwise than now appears in the bill, you will absolutely cut off both of the classes I have just referred to in my illustrations.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I was not able to be present at a part of the discussion with reference to this language. I wish to ask the Senator from Missouri his view as to the effect of the language upon a class of men that we may have an opportunity to bring here in the near future, and whose presence would be of vast benefit to the great working masses of the country. Take those classes of German scientists who have done so much in the line of developing dyestuffs and other materials, for lack of which our manufacturing enterprises have been seriously troubled during the past 90 days. Would this language prevent the employment of an expert chemist from Germany who might be needed in this country to aid in inaugurating some line of chemical process necessary to our industries for which we now depend upon Germany; and if it would, is it not probable that all the members of the committee would prefer that it should not go that far?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the Senator is a great lawyer, and in answering his question I need only to read the language of the bill. I call his attention to the opening sentence of section 3:

That the following classes of aliens shall be excluded from admission into the United States: All idiots, imbeciles—

And so forth.

Then follows a long list, including procurers, prostitutes, and people of that class. Then follows this language:

Persons hereinafter called contract laborers, who have been induced assisted, encouraged, or solicited to migrate to this country by offers or promises of employment, whether such offers or promises are true or false, or in consequence of agreements, oral, written or printed, express or implied, to perform labor in this country of any kind, skilled or unskilled, mental or manual.

Now, if that language stands, it will exclude every person of every kind and every character who comes here under any kind of contract, solicitation, or inducement. Turning then to the exceptions which are found on page 11:

Provided, That the provisions of this law applicable to contract labor shall not be held to exclude—

What? Chemists, engineers, teachers, people of that kind? Not at all. It shall not be held to exclude—professional actors, artists, lecturers, singers, ministers of any religious denomination, professors for colleges or seminaries, persons belonging to any recognized learned profession—

Which, I take it, means preachers, doctors, and lawyers—or persons employed strictly as personal or domestic servants accompanying their employer.

That means, first, we exclude everybody, and then we except from the rule of exclusion certain particular classes, and in the exception there is nothing that will include the skilled chemist of Germany; there is nothing that will include the skilled engineer; there is nothing that will include the man who is skilled in banking or in merchandising or is familiar with the trade conditions of another country and is brought here because of his expert knowledge. Manifestly, if we pass this bill as recommended by the committee, we deny to this country access to these highly intelligent, scientific classes of people, who undoubtedly we ought to bring here for the purpose of gaining the benefit of their skill.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, if the Senator will look on page 10, he will find this proviso:

Provided further, That skilled labor, if otherwise admissible, may be imported if labor of like kind unemployed can not be found in this country, and the question of the necessity of importing such skilled labor in any particular instance may be determined by the Secretary of Labor upon the application of any person interested, such application to be made before such importation, and such determination by the Secretary of Labor to be reached after a full hearing and an investigation into the facts of the case.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, does that language answer the question "If labor of like kind unemployed can not be found in this country"? Who will say that among the 90,000,000 people some chemist may not be found who could make the dyestuffs? Yet who would confine the industries of the country to the employment of that one man? Besides, who will assert that a skilled chemist comes under the term "skilled laborer"?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Would the term "skilled laborer" be applied to a student of science?

Mr. REED. I think not. I think the term "skilled labor" has its meaning. "Skilled laborer" here is intended to be applied to mechanics.

I hold that this is true. We ought to rigidly exclude those who come here under contract to perform manual labor, skilled or unskilled, because they are brought in here to compete with thousands and tens of thousands of our citizens duly qualified to perform that task. That is the evil we are striking at, and we are striking at no other evil. But if a foreign chemist could be brought to this country to assist in the establishment of manufactures of dyestuffs so that our country would no longer be dependent upon a foreign manufacturer for its supply, would injury result to our labor? The man would take no one's place here, because if we had chemists who could do the work effectually there would be already in this country manufactures of the kind I am referring to. If such an industry were established by a skilled foreigner, it would make employment for a great many of the skilled and unskilled laborers of our land. It would generally increase employment for our labor and multiply our wealth.

Moreover, suppose we were about to erect a great building or monument and some foreign architect whose dream of utility and beauty far surpassed that of any of our own people should present his plans and offer his services; why should we deny to our country that splendid monument of genius and accept an inferior article? This very Capitol Building sprang from the brain of a man born upon foreign soil. Many, indeed the vast majority of all the works of art that have added glory and beauty to the halls and temples of our land come from the magic brush or chisel of some foreign artist.

It is unwise to put in this sweeping inhibition. Certainly if it is to be used the list of excepted employments ought to be greatly enlarged.

Suppose there is some great engineer, let us say a Belgian engineer or a German engineer or a French engineer, a man capable of conceiving the Suez or the Panama Canal, and because of the present untoward conditions in Europe he should desire to have employment here, but would not want to come simply searching from house to house for work, what objection is there to adding to the knowledge of this country the wealth of his intellectual achievement? Why not bring him?

Those men who have made countries great have not done it by the policy of exclusion. If you ask me who laid the foundations of Germany's greatness and power, who made it possible that that nation should become so great that it is feared by other nations, I would answer, Frederick the Great. No sooner had that wonderful man established peace by arms than he invited to his court the intellect of the earth, the scholar, the statesman, the philosopher, the artist, the musician; thus he transformed his people and laid the foundation for a civilization that has advanced from that day to this and has created a country that were it not for the shadow of militarism which hangs over it would be an almost ideal land.

Mr. President, let us not adopt so narrow a policy.

My attention has just been called by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MARTINE] to the fact that many of those men who are now rendering great assistance to Thomas A. Edison in his wonderful inventions are Germans who came here and secured employment with him. We are so infinitely narrow in all this, we talk about people who happen to be born on the other side of the red line of a map as though they were not God Almighty's children, as though the same red blood does not flow in their veins, the same impulses thrill their hearts, the same ambitions inspire their souls, and the same tender sentiments animate their lives as thrill and sanctify our own.

Sitting now in the chair of the Senate [Mr. NELSON in the chair] is a man born under the flag of another country, who told me—and I think a repetition not indelicate—that when he arrived here he had but two or three dollars in his possession. He could not speak our language. He had no rich protectors. Yet he has been the governor of a great State and for many years its Senator. In this body he ranks in patriotism, in intelligence, and in learning with the best of its Members. When the call came for soldiers to defend the land of his adoption he took his place on the red line of battle, and it is not recorded that he did not fight as good a fight as any of the proud Americans who happened to be of the second or third generation of foreigners who located here.

This bill is framed upon the idea that if a white man happens to be born under any other flag than ours he is therefore not fit to live under this flag. I confess the doctrine nauseates me. It is narrow. It is the philosophy of cowardice. It is a cry from the lips of the man who is afraid of competition.

I see sitting across the Chamber from me another man born under the flag of a foreign country. He also has been selected by the people of his State to come here and represent them in this Senate, which we boastfully denominate the greatest deliberative body on earth. As I look at the faces of these two men I ask, What is the difference between them and some one whose ancestors emigrated here a few years earlier? Are not their countenances as clear cut, their foreheads as high, their eyes as fearless, their hearts as stout, their brains as keen, their courage as high, their patriotism as lofty as those of us whose ancestors came here a generation or two earlier? Yet when they came, at the very hour they were landing, there were proscriptionists warning the country against the pauper hordes who were invading our blessed land and about to destroy it.

When the Irish came from that stricken land where proscriptive laws denied the right to worship God according to the dictates of conscience, closed their factories, shut the doors of learning in the face of ambition; when the Irish came here, driven by want and famine and proscription and tyranny; when they came in rags and tatters; when they came holding out hands, not for bread, but for work, there were a great many of the aristocrats of America who denounced them as a pauper horde, ignorant, besotted, unfit for citizenship. Yet but a few years had passed until Irish orators were thrilling the hearts of American audiences with the music and power and force of their eloquence. Irish songsters were turning the air to melody. Irish statesmen were crowding into the Halls of Congress and into the Senate, and Irish merchants were making themselves princes in the marts of trade.

When the German tide of immigration swept into this country and when Holland poured a flood of her citizenry into our ports, the proscriptionist again stood with sour visage and denounced these people. They came and established themselves in colonies, and then it was discovered that they filled our farms with a citizenship that was superb and unsurpassed; that they crowded into our colleges and seminaries of learning; that they brought with them music and art and letters and, with all, the sturdy citizenship that maintained the law and upheld the flag. They are in my State by the thousand. There is no protest from my State.

The protest comes from States which have no foreign population to speak of. You do not hear it from the State of Minnesota. Yet if you had traveled through that State a few years ago you would have found vast and unsettled prairies, scarcely regarded as fit for the habitation of men. A few years later you would have found Swedes and Norwegians and Danes by the tens of thousands—men who could not speak our tongue, yet who were sending their children to the public schools, who were cultivating the soil, who were building homes, who were establishing industries, who were creating banks, who were becoming merchants. Travel over that State to-day and you will meet a people you can not distinguish from what we are pleased to term the American citizen. They speak our tongue; they wear the same habiliments; they think the same thoughts; they follow the same system of education; they worship at the same throne of grace; and if this country were involved in war, they would stand on the red line side by side with the American aristocrat whose ancestors happened to come here a little sooner than they did.

And now it is proposed to exclude the "mental," the intellectual, if, forsooth, some one in this country, having discovered the necessity for that particular variety of mentality, has said to its possesser, "If you will come to America, a place awaits you." That, sir, is a narrow policy. It is an un-American policy.

Mr. President, where did this American race come from? I am glad it was my privilege to be born under the Old Flag. Sometimes I feel a little pride in the fact that at least a portion of my ancestors were here before the Revolutionary War. Yet I am no prouder of that than I am of that other branch which came here at a later period and, having come, demeaned themselves as honest folk.

But when I see men with curled lip denouncing these children of misfortune who were born under other skies and who from love of liberty turn the eyes of hope toward our shores, I ask the proud aristocrat whence he came, how long it has been since his ancestors escaped from the same lands of oppression. What, pray, is his pedigree? I am reminded as I stand here of a few lines from, I think, that classical poem by John G. Saxe, entitled "The Proud Miss MacBride"—a legend of Gotham—and they run like this:

Of all the notable things on earth,
The queerest one is pride of birth
  Among our "fierce Democracie"!
A bridge across a hundred years,
Without a prop to save it from sneers—
Not even a couple of rotten peers—
A thing of laughter, fleers, and jeers,
  Is American aristocracy!

English and Irish, French and Spanish,
German, Italian, Dutch, and Danish,
Crossing their veins until they vanish
  In one conglomeration!
So subtle a tangle of blood, indeed,
No modern Harvey will ever succeed
  In finding the circulation!

Depend upon it, my snobbish friend,
Your family thread you can't ascend,
Without good reason to apprehend
You may find it waxed at the farther end
  By some plebeian vocation;
Or, worse than that, your boasted line
May end in a loop of stronger twine
  That plagued some worthy relation!

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, the evil that we are attempting to legislate against in this section of the bill is the contracting in advance with foreign laborers to be brought to this country to compete with native or American laborers. It is not intended to prevent any citizen of any other country from coming here a free man to labor in this country at such wages as he may be able to procure. The intent of it is to prevent the bringing into this country of laborers at wages less than those prevailing in our own country. What difference does it make, sir, whether a man happens to be a skilled laborer or a common, ordinary laborer? There is no reason why a banker should be allowed to employ some skilled laborer to come into this country at a wage based upon the standard of wages of another country, less than that fixed by our own standard of wages, any more than there is why a man or a corporation should be permitted to employ a common laborer to come here for the same purpose.

The distinguished Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], whom we all love and respect, and who has been so eloquently referred to by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], did not come to this country as a contract laborer; he came here a perfectly free man, at liberty to procure the wages that could be obtained in the country to which he had immigrated. He would not be excluded by the provisions of this bill; neither would anyone coming here, whether a skilled or a common laborer, who was not bound in advance to labor for wages that had been contracted for, and, we may assume, contracted for upon the basis of the standard of wages existing, not in this country, but in his own country.

In my judgment, Mr. President, the exemptions from the effects of this clause in the bill are too broad. So long as anyone comes here to enter upon a business where there is no competition, where there is no fixed standard of wages, the reason for this sort of legislation ceases; but if there is a fixed standard of wages, for instance, in the case of engineers, there is no reason why anybody should be allowed to go to a foreign country, contract there for an engineer, and bring him into this country at a less wage than he could obtain upon fair competition in this country when he reaches it. It is that very evil, Mr. President, that we are attempting to avoid in this kind of legislation.

The illustrations presented by the Senator from Missouri, and the hardships that might result from a provision of this kind, are purely imaginary. Does anybody suppose, for example, that we can not procure the necessary ability in the way of engineering in this country without going to any foreign country to obtain it, or that we can not find competent chemists or men in any of the other lines of endeavor mentioned by the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. NELSON in the chair). Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. WORKS. I do.

Mr. WALSH. I should like to inquire of the Senator from California whether he would desire to have the bill prevent the introduction into this country under employment of skilled foreign engineers?

Mr. WORKS. I should object to any kind of labor being brought into this country under a contract fixing the wage to be paid.

Mr. WALSH. Exactly. I agree with the Senator about that; but that is not the question. I thought that I had got the Senator's attitude to be—and I wanted to be assured about it—that he was specifically opposed to the introduction of foreign engineers or of foreign chemists under contract.

Mr. WORKS. It is fair to presume, Mr. President, that if a contract is made in a foreign country it will be based upon the wage to be paid in that country. The engineer, or whoever it may be, is not likely to exact a higher wage than that existing in his own country; and it is an injustice to the laborers of this country to bring anyone here, whether he be a skilled or an unskilled laborer, at a wage less than he could obtain in fair competition in our own country. I am opposed to that, whether it be in the case of a common laborer or of the man who labors mentally or a skilled laborer of any kind.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, the explanation originally given of the significance of this amendment was that it was exceedingly difficult to draw the line in the case of many vocations between mental and manual labor, and that it was difficult to determine which particular variety of labor predominated in the work the laborer was called upon to do. Of course, everybody must recognize that that difficulty does exist. A mining engineer, for instance, is called upon oftentimes to perform exceedingly arduous manual labor; the constructing engineer, an engineer laying out a great railroad, is often called upon to do the most severe character of manual labor, and yet it might easily be determined that in the case of both of those vocations the mental labor is the particular part for which the employment is made. It is easy to recognize that in many cases it is difficult to determine; but, Mr. President, it does seem to me that that is just exactly where we ought to draw the line; that we ought resolutely to exclude all those who come here under contract who are to engage in vocations the predominant feature of which is manual labor—that is the purpose of the contract-labor act—and that all of those who are to engage in the learned professions or in any profession or vocation where their value depends upon the intellect who can be brought into this country ought to be permitted to come under contract if it is necessary to get them in that way.

Mr. President, a number of illustrations have been given of the most desirable classes of people who would be excluded by this bill if it should become a law. I want to instance another to show the scope of this provision. In this country you have recognized for a long time how dependent the great beet-sugar industry is upon Germany for its supply of sugar-beet seed. Attention was called upon this floor some time ago to experiments—costly experiments, as I have abundant reason to know—that have been carried on in this country with a view to determine whether we could not raise in this country all our own sugar-beet seed necessary for the support of that industry. Time and again it has been disclosed upon this floor how dependent we would be if for any cause whatever the German supply should be shut off, as it was feared only a short time ago it would be.

Mr. President, extensive experiments have been carried on in my State in the last half dozen years in an effort to produce there a sugar-beet seed equal to that produced in Germany. Why should anybody who desires to go into the sugar-beet seed business in this country be denied the opportunity to contract with a skilled man who has mastered the subject over in Germany and to bring him over here to operate a sugar-beet seed farm in this country? I should like to inquire of the Senator from California if he would like to exclude that kind of a man?

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. WALSH. I do.

Mr. WORKS. I should like, first, to ask the Senator from Montana if any effort has been made to procure services of that kind by special contract?

Mr. WALSH. I am able to answer the Senator. These operations are being carried on in my State now at the Billings sugar factory; they are being conducted under the direction of a graduate of one of the German universities. He has, however, other duties to perform; this is a side line upon his part. I undertake to say that if they were told to find the proper man they would be only too glad to enter into a contract with him to get him to come over here and operate that branch of their business. Why should they be denied that opportunity?

Mr. WORKS. Then I assume that kind of a contract has been made or attempted?

Mr. WALSH. I do not know.

Mr. WORKS. The Senator from Montana has asked me whether I would object to that sort of labor being brought into this country under those circumstances. I answer very frankly I should object. There is no reason why a laborer of that kind—a mental laborer, if you please to call him so—should be allowed to contract for wages in advance to come to this country any more than the smaller man or the common laborer. The principle is precisely the same, and the reason for preventing it is precisely the same. I should not be willing to make a distinction of that kind.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, of course there is a very clear antagonism between the views of the Senator from California and my own upon that subject. I do not desire to exclude those men; that is not my idea at all of the purpose and scope of a contract-labor law. If the Senator from California takes that position with respect to the matter, I should like to know why the exception found on page 11 is in the bill at all, which excludes——

Mr. WORKS. I have already stated that, in my judgment, the exceptions are broader than they should be.

Mr. WALSH. Exactly.

Mr. WORKS. That is one of the exceptions that I should not desire to go into the bill.

Mr. WALSH. The position of the Senator from California is entirely consistent. The exceptions on page 11 are:

> Professional actors, artists, lecturers, singers, ministers of any religious denomination, professors for colleges or seminaries, persons belonging to any recognized learned profession, or persons employed strictly as personal or domestic servants accompanying their employers.

Of course the Senator from California can not take the position consistently that these classes of immigrants ought to be permitted to come in under contract while the beet-sugar man should be excluded.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. WALSH. I do.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. May I inquire of the Senator from Montana whether the case that he mentions would not be met by the following provision of the bill:

> Provided further, That skilled labor, if otherwise admissible, may be imported if labor of like kind unemployed can not be found in this country.

Mr. WALSH. I will answer the Senator from Vermont very frankly about that matter. Such labor can be employed. Prof. Mendelsohn is now engaged at that labor, and he can be kept at that labor; but his duties are in an entirely different field, where he can find very profitable employment for himself and very useful employment for those who engage him. He is obliged to leave his other work in order to undertake this. He would be very glad, I undertake to say—although I do not know anything at all about that—to get some other man to handle that part of the business while he devoted himself to the general business aspects of the enterprise; in other words, Mr. President, merely because you can find a man here to take the place is no reason why the foreigner should be excluded. That is just exactly where the point comes in in the case of all manual labor. Whether it is skilled or unskilled, you find a vast body of men who do not vary much in their equipment and in their capacity; but whenever you pass that point and go into the domain of mental labor, there is no such thing as a general dead level. Everybody recognizes that fact. Take the lawyers' profession, for instance. Would you exclude lawyers? Mr. President, I want to refer to that.

The exceptions on page 11, it will be observed, do not include any of these classes, or at least it is doubtful whether such laborers as have been spoken of by a number of those who discussed this subject would be included. The skilled chemist, the skilled agriculturist, the skilled engineer, the skilled architect—it is doubtful whether any of these would be included, because the word "profession" as used in the exception is qualified by two words. First, he must belong to one of the "learned professions," and, second, it must be not only one of the "learned professions," but it must be one of the "recognized learned professions" in order that he shall fall within the enumeration there given.

Reference was made by the chairman of the committee to an exception to be found on page 7, by which all teachers were likewise excluded from the operation of the act; but that, I think, the distinguished chairman, by a little attention to the language of the bill, will recognize is inaccurate. The bill enumerates a large number of classes of individuals who will be excluded. The class last mentioned is described in the bill on page 7, in lines 13, 14, 15, 16, and 17, as follows:

Persons who can not become eligible, under existing law, to become citizens of the United States by naturalization, unless otherwise provided for by existing treaties or agreements as to passports, or by treaties, conventions, or agreements that may hereafter be entered into.

Then follows:

The provision next foregoing, however, shall not apply to persons of the following status or occupations—

Referring, of course, to the class of persons to which I have just adverted—

Government officers, ministers or religious teachers, missionaries, lawyers, physicians, chemists, civil engineers, teachers, students, authors, merchants, and travelers for curiosity or pleasure—

And so on.

That is to say that, notwithstanding such immigrants can not be admitted to citizenship in this country, they may still come in; but that exception does not extend at all to the immigrants from countries who would under our laws eventually be entitled to naturalization, and the only exception is that contained in the language found on page 11.

I think a further word should be said in answer to the suggestion made by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] with reference to the provision on page 10, which reads as follows:

Provided further, That skilled labor, if otherwise admissible, may be imported if labor of like kind unemployed can not be found in this country, and the question of the necessity of importing such skilled labor in any particular instance may be determined by the Secretary of Labor—

And so forth.

It will be observed, Mr. President, that that contemplates a vast body of men seeking employment in that particular vocation. It can not possibly refer to such cases as would otherwise fall within the language of the amendment proposing to insert the words "manual or mental," which contemplates the exclusion of men of exceptional equipment such as have been referred to in the debate.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, I made that suggestion in view of what the Senator was saying in regard to the beet-sugar industry and the necessity of having skilled men to place beet-sugar factories in operation. Similar conditions have existed in New England. I have in my mind now the establishment in Connecticut of a lace factory, the machinery for which was purchased in Europe, and there was nobody in this country who was capable of putting that machinery in operation and instructing those who were to have charge of it. There was no way of determining in advance whether a person imported for that purpose would be rejected under our laws until after the person came here and the question was raised upon his arrival. For that reason when the immigration bill was drafted two or three years ago a provision was incorporated under which that question might be raised in advance and be presented to the Secretary of Commerce with the proof, so that his action might be determined before the person was imported. In that way it would save the embarrassment, and the expense as well, of bringing a person to this country and having the matter determined after he came here. Of course if the question were determined against him he would be deported, and he would not only suffer disappointment but incur expense.

It occurred to me while the Senator was speaking that that little clause was met with in this provision, and that in the case he mentioned there would be no difficulty in applying to the Secretary for permission, making a showing, and bringing in the skilled overseer or superintendent to whom the Senator has referred.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I feel quite certain that the provision on page 10 was intended to cover just exactly such a case as the Senator from Vermont has indicated, but I do not think that the case that has been referred to falls within that class at all. I indicated a while ago, and, following the same line of thought, I desire to observe again, that there are all kinds of gradations. As a matter of course, when it comes to vocations and those engaged in them in which the labor is chiefly mental, the differences between separate individuals ordinarily vary very much more than in the case of vocations where the work is largely manual. In the case to which I referred we have a number of gentlemen in the Agricultural Department here in Washington who have for quite a good many years been giving some considerable attention and study to the question of sugar-beet seed, and experiments have been made by companies in other States besides my own, so that it can not be said that it is impossible to get any one in this country who would be able to do the work; certain persons can be secured; but why should we deny ourselves, and why should any particular company be denied, the opportunity to get a man of preeminent qualifications, who has established his ability by reason of the success which has attended his efforts in a foreign country, and why should we be compelled to accept some man here who has not had the opportunity, as the foreign student may have had, to follow out the business to its ultimate facts? I believe that it would be a grave error to deny to our country the services of men who have climbed to the top of their profession if they desire to come here and give us and our country the benefit of their study and their thought.

Mr. President, I move that the vote by which the last amendment was adopted be reconsidered.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, before that vote is taken I desire to say that the committee went fully into this matter. If I may repeat what I said in the beginning of the discussion of this proposed amendment of the committee, the Commissioner of Immigration and the courts have found difficulty in drawing the line between the mental and the purely manual. I understand from the argument of the Senator who has just taken his seat that his contention is that, because of the degree of excellence that may be obtained abroad, a corporation should not be denied the opportunity of contracting for and importing skilled labor, even though labor of like kind can be found in this country. He used as an illustration, I believe, the propagation of sugar-beet seed and its culture.

The committee took the view that the incentive in this country for reaching perfection was to exclude from its borders those who, already having attained a certain skill, might preempt the ground at less wages and leave no opening for those who step by step were attaining that very skill which we want to foster in this country.

There is no member of the committee who wants to deny—and there is nothing in this bill intended to deny—this country the benefit that might come to it by reason of being able to utilize some new discovery or some process of chemistry employed, for example, in the manufacture of dyestuffs. That is not the design of this bill, nor is it intended to exclude the men who might bring such benefit, for the reason that they are professional men along skilled professional lines.

I listened with a great deal of interest to the very eloquent plea that the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] made for a wide-open door for the importation of those who desire to come here.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Certainly.

Mr. POMERENE. Referring to the illustration which was used by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] on the subject of sugar-beet seed, does the Senator contend that one who is skilled in the raising of beets or is skilled in the manufacture of dyes, and so forth, would be a professional man?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I do not suppose that he would; but under the bill it is provided that if skilled labor can not be found in this country to perform a certain work and we stand in need of it, it can be imported on proper application.

Mr. POMERENE. Then let me ask a further question: Would the Senator regard one who is skilled in the production of sugar beets as a skilled laborer?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I would. If he is skilled in their production, the very expression implies that he is a skilled laborer.

Mr. POMERENE. But it may be that the man who has special knowledge on that subject would take no part in the manual labor, the producing of the beets, or the growing of the stock from which the beet seed was produced. Would you still regard him as a skilled laborer?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I would not regard him as an unskilled one; I would say that his knowledge comes through his labor with that plant.

Mr. President, the whole subject under discussion resolves itself into this: We have got to make laws to conform to a rule and not to the exceptions, and here we are trying to protect the great mass of the laborers of this country, skilled and unskilled. You have no right to jeopardize the wage-earning capacity of a man who, through years of industry and application to his business, has risen to a point where he can command higher wages, by permitting the importation, in competition with him, for the benefit of some temporary need of a skilled foreign artisan to take his place, for you would then have placed a penalty on skilled labor and opened it to competition; you would be saying to the man at the bottom, "We will protect you, but when you get to where your wages reach the highest point you shall come in competition with the foreigner."

As I have said, the general purpose of this bill is to protect labor from the lowest to the highest in the enjoyment of the American standard of wages. The exceptions we try to provide for by leaving the old law stand, with the exception that if there is a certain kind of work to be done and there are men in this country to do it, but they are employed, then you can import men from other countries to do the work. If it is found that there is a certain class of work that is not being carried on in this country and it is desired to import some one under contract to teach us how to do it and to install the machinery for the purpose of carrying on that work, the right is given under this provision to do that. The amendment was suggested for the purpose of protecting an entire class and not to interfere with the larger scope of the purely professional classes. The argument this morning has been along the line of exceptions that do not enter into the question as affecting the vital interests of the great body of the laborers of this country. We were trying to make a rule and then conform the law to it. We were trying to get the rule, the general aspect, and then make the law conform to that, and not trying to make the law conform to the exception.

An illustration has been suggested to me by the Senator from Oklahoma. We have a law that one must reach the age of 21 before he can vote. There is not a man on this floor but that knows thousands of cases where young men of 19 or 20 are more capable and better qualified for the exercise of the franchise than some men of 70; and yet you do not balk at the rule, because to attempt to frame a law going into all of these minute exceptions would open the door to emasculating the general application of the rule and process by which the Senate should operate.

Mr. HITCHCOCK obtained the floor.

Mr. REED. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bankhead	Hughes	Page	Sterling
Brandegee	James	Perkins	Stone
Burton	Jones	Pomerene	Sutherland
Chamberlain	Kenyon	Reed	Thomas
Cummins	Kern	Robinson	Thompson
Dillingham	La Follette	Shafroth	Thornton
Fletcher	Lane	Sheppard	Walsh
Gallinger	McCumber	Sherman	Warren
Gore	Martine, N. J.	Smith, Ariz.	Weeks
Gronna	Nelson	Smith, Ga.	White
Hardwick	Norris	Smith, Md.	Williams
Hitchcock	O'Gorman	Smith, S. C.	Works
Hollis	Overman	Smoot

Mr. KERN. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence, on account of sickness, of the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON]. I should have made this announcement two or three days ago, but neglected to do so. He will be detained for the balance of the week. This announcement may stand for that time.

Mr. OVERMAN. I desire to announce that the junior Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN] is absent on business of the Senate.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I make the same announcement with reference to the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA]. He is absent on official business. I am also requested to state that a pair exists between the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON] and the senior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL]. As to how they will vote on this question I have no knowledge.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-one Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present.

The motion pending before the Senate is to reconsider the vote by which the amendment on page 6, line 17, was adopted. The amendment inserted the words "mental or manual," in line 17, and the motion is to reconsider the vote by which that amendment was adopted.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I ask that in place of the vote by which the amendment was accepted that particular amendment may be passed over. I suppose I will have to have unanimous consent for that.

Mr. REED. Then it would be necessary to reconsider the vote, letting the bill stand without the amendment being acted upon, and then you would have it re-referred to the committee.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. REED. If the chairman makes that request, I think it should be taken by viva voce.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina asks that the vote by which the words "mental or manual" were inserted may be reconsidered. Is there any objection to that? The Chair hears none, so that vote is reconsidered. What is the further request of the Senator?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. That that amendment may be passed over for the time being, temporarily.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina also asks that the amendment may be passed over for the time being. The Chair hears no objection.

The next amendment before the Senate is on page 9, the amendment being to strike out the following words, in lines 4, 5, and 6:

No two aliens coming in the same vessel or other vehicle of carriage or transportation shall be tested with the same slip.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Immigration was, on page 9, line 23, after the word "of," to insert "or legally charged with," so as to read:

Provided, That nothing in this act shall exclude, if otherwise admissible, persons convicted of or legally charged with an offense purely political, not involving moral turpitude.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, in view of the action of the Senate in striking out the words "legally charged with" in the preceding section, these words ought to go out now.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Yes; that would naturally follow. They would be meaningless.

Mr. REED. Then, as I understand, they are withdrawn by the committee?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment. If the Senate votes "no," the amendment will go out.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment was, on page 10, line 15, after the word "case," to strike out:

But such determination shall not become final until a period of 30 days has elapsed. Within 3 days after such determination the Secretary of Labor shall cause to be published a brief statement reciting the substance of the application, the facts presented at the hearing and his determination thereon, in 3 daily newspapers of general circulation in three of the principal cities of the United States. At any time during said period of 30 days any person dissatisfied with the ruling may appeal to the district court of the United States of the district into which the labor is sought to be brought, which court or the judge thereof in vacation shall have jurisdiction to try de novo such question of necessity, and the decision in such court shall be final. Such appeal shall operate as a supersedeas.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the chairman of the committee what is the purpose in striking out that provision?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The department complains of the delay and the expense incident to carrying into court these questions that are largely administrative. The committee thought the department had ample facilities for determining such matters, and they simply struck out that long and cumbersome part that has embarrassed them very greatly in the past.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment just read.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, line 9, after the word "servants," to insert "accompanying their employer," so as to read:

Provided further, That the provisions of this law applicable to contract labor shall not be held to exclude professional actors, artists, lecturers, singers, ministers of any religious denomination, professors for colleges or seminaries, persons belonging to any recognized learned profession, or persons employed strictly as personal or domestic servants accompanying their employer.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, line 21, after the word "Zone," to insert:

Provided further, That aliens who have declared their intention to become citizens and aliens returning after temporary absence to an unrelinquished United States domicile may be admitted in the discretion of the Secretary of Labor, and under such conditions as he may prescribe.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, line 18, after the word "guests," to strike out:

Provided further, That nothing in this act shall exclude the wife or minor children of a citizen of the United States.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from South Carolina if the matter referred to in lines 18, 19, and 20, on page 12, is covered by any other provision of the bill?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I think it is covered. This provision relates to cases where aliens have come into this country and have declared their intention to become citizens and then have gone out of the country and subsequently have returned to it. Under the general provisions of the bill, without this provision, they would have to go through the same process as any other immigrants.

Mr. O'GORMAN. The House bill on the lines indicated provided:

That nothing in this act—

It did not refer to this particular section—shall exclude the wife or minor children of a citizen of the United States.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Oh, the Senator is referring to that amendment?

Mr. O'GORMAN. Yes; that is the one we are now considering. The committee, of course, has advised that this provision should be eliminated. I believe it contains a very good policy, and I desire to know whether the same principle is covered by any other section of the bill. If it is not covered by something elsewhere in the bill, I think the House provision should be retained, because it is unthinkable that an alien citizen or a native citizen could have his wife or his minor children excluded from coming to this country because they did not meet the educational or some other test prescribed in this bill. In a word, can the Senator state why this provision was stricken out?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. If the Senator will turn to section 22, on page 47, he will find it says:

That whenever an alien shall have been naturalized or shall have taken up his permanent residence in this country and shall have filed his declaration of intention to become a citizen, and thereafter shall send for his wife or minor children to join him, and said wife or any of said minor children shall be found to be affected with any contagious disorder, such wife or minor children shall be held, under such regulations as the Secretary of Labor shall prescribe, until it shall be determined whether the disorder will be easily curable or whether they can be permitted to land without danger to other persons; and they shall not be either admitted or deported until such facts have been ascertained; and if it shall be determined—

And so forth. That is a provision whereby these persons with contagious diseases which would ordinarily cause their exclusion are to be detained until it is found whether they can be admitted without jeopardizing the lives and health of the citizens of this country.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Assuming that there are other provisions in the bill covering the part stricken out, I withdraw my opposition for the present.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. That was the reason for it.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I am very much afraid there is no provision covering this proposition. Let us go back for a moment to page 7. Among those excluded are—

All children under 16 years of age, unaccompanied by or not coming to one or both of their parents.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. If the Senator will turn to page 48 he will see that that is amply covered.

Mr. REED. I am coming to that very matter.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Look at the provision on page 48.

Mr. REED. The language stricken out is:

Provided, That nothing in this act shall exclude the wife or minor children of a citizen of the United States.

Now, we have an exclusion of all children under 16 years of age unless they are coming to their parents. Nothing is said there about the wife. Then we go to page 48.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Read the proviso there in italics.

Mr. REED (reading):

That whenever an alien shall have been naturalized or shall have taken up his permanent residence in this country and shall have filed his declaration of intention to become a citizen and thereafter shall send for his wife or minor children to join him and said wife or any of said minor children shall be found to be affected with any contagious disorder—

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Now read the proviso on that same page.

Mr. REED. Page 48?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Yes. [Reading:]

Provided, That if the person sending for wife or minor children is naturalized a wife to whom married or a minor child born subsequent to such husband's or father's naturalization shall be admitted without detention.

Mr. REED. That applies only to the naturalized citizen. It does not apply, and I call the Senator's attention to that fact, to the man who has applied for naturalization. That clause does not apply to the man who is permanently a resident here and who possibly is ineligible for naturalization. Certain classes of people are ineligible. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that it is a question worthy of consideration whether there may not be now a class of people not naturalized, who either have applied for naturalization or who for some reason are ineligible, who could not bring their wives and children here.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The Senator from Missouri would not want one who could not become a citizen of this country to send for his wife and children and have them come into this country without the provisions in this section, which simply mean that they must be detained. Even here in the first section——

Mr. REED. The Senator means on account of health, or something of that kind?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Yes. The bill says now, in section 22, that whenever an alien shall have been naturalized or shall have taken up his residence in this country and shall have filed his declaration of intention to become a citizen, then, if his wife and children come here, they must be detained to see whether or not they will spread disease. In this proviso, when the man has become naturalized, his wife and children are admitted.

Mr. REED. I do not desire to detain the Senate, but I am very fearful that an injustice might be worked there. As the section will come up again in some other form, however, for the present I shall make no further objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, line 4, after the word "solicit," to insert "or attempt to induce, assist, encourage, or solicit," so as to read:

That it shall be unlawful for any person, company, partnership, or corporation, in any manner whatsoever, to prepay the transportation or in any way to induce, assist, encourage, or solicit, or attempt to induce, assist, encourage, or solicit the importation or migration of any contract laborer or contract laborers into the United States, unless such contract laborer or contract laborers are exempted under the provisions of section 3 of this act.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill why that amendment is necessary. It seems to me the language preceding it is sufficient.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. To what language does the Senator refer?

Mr. WARREN. The language which the Secretary has just read, and which I believe is in lines 4 and 5, page 14.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. "Or attempt to induce, assist, encourage, or solicit?"

Mr. WARREN. It reads here:

That it shall be unlawful for any person, company, partnership, or corporation, in any manner whatsoever, to prepay the transportation or in any way to induce, assist, encourage, or solicit—or attempt to induce, assist, encourage, or solicit.

Then follows—

I see no necessity for that last clause. Perhaps the Senator has some reason for it. The Senator will notice that the language preceding that is:

Or in any way to induce, assist, encourage, or solicit.

I speak of it now because the same amendment occurs in several places on the following pages.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I think the idea of the committee in incorporating that amendment, as well as I recall now, was that very often attempts were made, and without this language it would be necessary to prove that the person actually did induce and bring in an alien when there might be evidence that there was an attempt made, even if there was no result found. It was inserted to shut off the possibility of their coming in even where at the time there was a failure of inducements which might ultimately bear fruit, as well as I recall.

Mr. WARREN. If there have been such cases as that, that may explain it.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The commissioner called our attention to that fact.

Mr. WARREN. I may not give enough credit to the English language, but it seems to me, when it reads as it does here as it came from the House, that it is unlawful to in any way induce, assist, encourage, or solicit the immigration of contract laborers, that covers the matter fully. I have examined the dictionary, and I do not see how anything further would be necessary to make that effective. It seems to me that this language, "or attempt to induce, assist, encourage, or solicit," is surplusage, unless it is sought to make this legislation so drastic that if an American walking along the street in a foreign country should say in response to a question that his country was a good one he might be indicted for an attempt to encourage emigration to this country.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. As well as I recall, cases have arisen where there has been an attempt and nothing has come of it, but later on that very attempt has borne fruit and lawsuits have grown out of it, even though there was an immediate failure. If you look at the next section you will find this language:

> That any person, including the master, agent, owner, or consignee of any vessel, who shall bring into or land in the United States, by vessel or otherwise, or shall attempt, by himself or through another, to bring into or land in the United States, by vessel or otherwise.

The advertisement of a steamship company is an attempt to induce by promise or reward, and, as well as I remember, that was put in to discourage that particular kind of advertisment by certain corporations, that labor here was desirable and could be employed at certain wages. They did not bring them in right then, but they were making the attempt to induce them to come.

Mr. WARREN. There may be places where the amendment would seem necessary, but in the place I speak of and on page 15, line 5——

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I think that was made to conform to the section following, so as to make it conform in both instances where it applied to the same thing.

Mr. WARREN. I am sure the Senator thinks it is necessary, but I do not see the necessity of it.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I wish to call the attention of the chairman to the fact that this matter was discussed before the committee, and that I called attention to it as being a very dangerous provision. The Commissioner of Immigration was present at the time. While I am not at liberty to quote him here, nor shall I quote him, I make the statement that there is no need of this provision in the bill.

The chairman will also remember that I called attention to the fact that a certain farmer in my State had written a letter to certain men across the border in the Dominion of Canada, when he had evidently received an inquiry or a letter asking him if work was to be had in the harvest field, having answered the letter and said that they could get labor at $3.50 a day. All this particular farmer did was to answer that letter. Later on, in the fall, an immigration agent took the case up, and that particular farmer was fined $5,000. The case has been in court. I can not recall the case just now, but it is a matter of record that for the simple offense of this farmer writing a letter and answering an inquiry as to whether labor could be had he was subjected to a fine. Whether he was imprisoned or not I do not know; but he was subject to imprisonment, and I do know that a fine was imposed.

I am opposed to this amendment. It is unnecessary, and I do not believe that the commissioner will insist upon this amendment.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator from North Dakota has well stated what I feared. In these days of neutrality under our restrictions, which we are striving to obey, we are giving particular attention to what might be the construction of our language, and it seems to me if I should be asked a question upon the streets of a foreign country or if I should answer a letter truthfully that I thought this a good country, or a good country for a laboring man, under this language I might be apprehended.

I do not feel that it is necessary, because while we want to have all due restrictions, it does not seem to me that we ought to make a law that looks as if we had an attack of hysteria at the time we enacted it and were afraid that anybody should feel that we have a country worthy of receiving respectable immigrants or a country desirable to live in.

The language is strong enough without it, and the presumption is that if it is added it must be for a restriction which I do not believe we should be submitted to. I do not believe the Senator or I should be placed where if we received a respectful letter of inquiry we could not properly answer it or that we could not answer a respectable inquiry upon a street of any city of our country or any other. I know I often receive letters from abroad from people I have met asking questions about our country, its progress, its prosperity, its plans, and so forth, and I am in the habit of answering them freely, with no thought of encouraging a man to come here in the light of bringing him against our labor-contract laws or anything of that kind.

I want to see the law restrictive. I want to see the law a reasonable one; but that kind of language interpolated into it, where it is totally unnecessary, ought to be stricken out.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The Senator from Wyoming can see that in the case indicated by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] this language would save the farmer from that humiliation and embarrassment if he had just written a letter. Though he did break the contract law by saying that labor could be obtained at three dollars and a half a day, this says, "to induce, assist, encourage or solicit, or attempt to induce labor to come."

Mr. WARREN. Right there will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. Then we take the ground that we want to pass a law whereby we deny ourselves the right to say to any inquiring party what we think of the country, its prosperity, or its opportunities. Is that in the Senator's mind?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. No; the Senator will recognize that he would have the right not only to state as an individual in a foreign country or elsewhere that this is a fine field for labor but the wages paid in different occupations. However, that is quite different from me, a farmer, writing to laborers in another ountry—contract labor—that they could get three dollars and a half a day here. That is a different proposition from saying that the wages are high.

Mr. WARREN. That is a long way from contracting with a man to come here and work at lower wages than are paid in this country. The Senator knows what the law attempts to effect and what we all sustain it in, to prevent the making of contracts abroad with laborers and to bring them in to compete with our own at lower prices. On the other hand, this country has been built up very largely by a class of immigrants who have done credit to themselves and to the country, and foreigners should be able to obtain some direct information of this kind. They get some through the press and in other ways. It may so happen that the Senator or I or other Senators have met and will continue to meet persons abroad who make inquiries regarding this country. Shall we stultify ourselves and belittle the country by not answering frankly what the prospects are in this country?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Oh, this proposed law does not even intimate anything of the kind. It expressly says who shall "attempt to induce." What the Senator refers to is no attempt on his part to induce labor to come at a specified price. You do not call on them to come under contract. The object is to avoid the very difficulty that the farmer in the State of North Dakota allowed himself to get into.

Mr. WARREN. Then, as I understand the Senator, the object is to avoid that by putting a ban upon and muzzling everyone in this country so that our people will not be able to answer a letter of inquiry as to the wages of the country.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Surely not. No such construction can be placed on it. If the man makes an attempt, or if he invites specifically, as anyone would construe the law, a contract laborer to come here at a specified price, he is breaking the law.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President——

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator from California will allow me just a word further, that is amply provided for in the language which precedes this proposed amendment. The whole meaning is to induce, to assist, to encourage, or to solicit. It is to favor or to help in some way, not to "attempt to encourage," carrying it to a degree that I do not understand. It may be that the English language is further away from me to-day than usual.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I only want to suggest to the Senator from Wyoming that I think he is giving this clause in the bill altogether too broad a construction. It does not forbid soliciting or attempting to induce laborers to come to this country, but contract laborers. I do not very well see how a conviction could have been had against the farmer mentioned by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA]. Certainly there was no attempt in that case to bring in contract labor as I understand from what the Senator said about it, and I do not see very well how he was convicted under those circumstances.

Mr. WARREN. It is easier to convict him under the language of this bill than it would be probably without it.

Mr. WORKS. No; I think not.

Mr. GRONNA. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from California to the fact that all that the farmer did was to write the letter, but he did employ the five men in the harvest field. They were employed by him later on. He entered into no contract with them except writing a letter, telling them that work was to be had.

Mr. WORKS. That would be no violation of the statute unless there was a contract in advance and he brought them in under the contract, for that is what contract labor means.

Mr. GRONNA. Then I ask the Senator if the law is rigid now, why make it still more rigid?

Mr. WORKS. I do not very well see how anyone could be convicted under those circumstances. I think there must have been some mistake about it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I am thoroughly in sympathy with the general purposes of this act, but, like most laws, it goes a little bit too far, because when men undertake to do anything—get to the point of doing it—they go further than they ought. Some time ago one of the sweetest and best informed women in the State of Mississippi came to me and said that she had received an invitation to deliver certain lectures somewhere in Great Britain—principally Scotland, I believe—and she wanted to select as the subject of her lectures Dixieland—her own country. She came to me to learn to what extent she could go in telling what a real good land Dixie is, how much hog and hominy might be had in it, how pleasant the fields are, how happy the climate, how fertile the soil, and all the balance of it. She had, much to her own astonishment and mine, stumbled over certain provisions of the immigration law which prevented her at that time—I did not know what were the particular provisions, but I expect it was this language:

That it shall be unlawful for any person, company, partnership, or corporation, in any manner whatsoever, to prepay the transportation or in any way to induce, assist, encourage, or solicit.

The balance of it might stand very well without the word "encourage," and I do not see how it could have been with that alone very wrong. Then this committee has put in "or attempt to induce, assist, encourage, or solicit."

I have no objection to making a law against those who induce or assist or solicit or attempt to induce, assist, or solicit, but when you come to saying that a man has committed a crime who has encouraged immigration to the United States, that is going too far. It seems to me if you happened to meet a man under a shelter in the rain in the city of London and fell into conversation with him and told him what a good country you had, and what a good State, and what was the prevailing rate of wages, and if that man might form an acquaintance with you and afterwards come to the United States and hire himself to you, you would be guilty under this act of "encouraging" immigration. Then if you go further and say he shall be guilty of crime if he "attempts to encourage," I do not know how they would proceed against you, because the fault would have taken place on English soil in that particular case, and, of course, they could not lay the venue. But suppose the encouragement had taken place by letter in the manner indicated by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]. Some man over there writes to me, saying "What sort of a country have you got down in Mississippi now? What sort of encouragement is there for a farm laborer? What sort of encouragement is there for labor in the mines, or anything of that sort?" Suppose I would write back to him a general letter; tell him what a glorious country it is, what a sweet place it is to live in, how you call yourself blessed every morning whether you looked over the front porch of a mansion or the back porch of a cabin, blessed simply because you are in such a happy land under such happy skies, and then suppose you told him what sheep sold for and how much was paid for labor, and all that. Then suppose this man would come over afterwards. In that case I would not have been guilty of "inducing" or "assisting" or "soliciting," but I would have been guilty under this act of "encouraging" that man's moving into the United States, and, as far as I can see, encouraging him regardless of the fact whether he came to me afterwards and got employment from me or whether he came to that particular section and county and got it from somebody else. If after writing him that sort of a letter he came to me, when I had written to him that he could get so much per month or so much per day, a cabin, and so much garden room, and free wood, and free pasturage for work stock and milch cows, and a half holiday, and whatever the other things were that I might in truth have said to him about the country, and he said, "I got your letter and I have come over here, and I want you to make good"; I would feel pretty much like a whipped dog if I could not do it. I would feel like I was acting in bad faith.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I should like to recall to the Senator from Mississippi that most of this language is placed here on account of the fact that the steamship companies encourage immigrants in order to fill up their steerage and cabin space.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It is all very well to hit them, because they are "inducing" and are in that way "assisting." They are "soliciting" people to come here, and they are doing it for selfish pocketbook purposes. But while you are doing that, it does not seem to me that you ought to adopt language which is so broad as to include other people, and to include people who have no idea of doing any unlawful act at all, and who are merely speaking well of themselves and their neighbors and their country.

I shall move, Mr. President, to strike out the word "encourage" in line 4 and the word "encourage" in line 5, so that it shall read "induce, assist, or solicit, or attempt to induce, assist, or solicit."

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I suppose the Senator from Mississippi knows that the word "encourage" in the roman text is already in the law of 1907. It is a part of the old law, and that has not been changed.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand that; and all you have done is to add the words "or attempt to induce, assist, encourage, or solicit."

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. You have gone further, and I am opposed to the old law in that particular, to going further back, and I am opposed to both of them for the very reason I was stating. Here is this woman who made a good record, a very intelligent woman, a lecturer, who wanted to prepare a lecture upon Dixie, the land she lived in and the land she loved, and meant thereby to tell the English and Scottish people about Dixie; and she found out that she was about to stumble into a violation of the immigration laws of the United States for doing what? By going to Scotland and telling what a great country of undeveloped and sublime resources Dixie is. I do not think we ought to have any such law capable of such construction as that upon the statute books. The language now upon the statute books makes it a crime to "encourage," and the language proposed adds to it "to attempt to encourage." I move to strike out the word "encourage" in both places.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. If the Senator from Mississippi will withhold his motion, I will ask that the amendment be passed over because we are now considering the committee amendments. All that we could do now would be to strike out the word "encourage" in the committee amendment, because we can not strike out the word "encourage" in the law.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am perfectly willing to do that. At the proper time I will make that motion.

Mr. REED. Of course, if the language the Senator from Mississippi objected to is given serious consideration, then this particular amendment ought now to be made to conform.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The chairman of the committee has asked that the matter should go over until we reach the parliamentary stage where individual amendments will be in order. He has asked that the entire matter might go over. I ask that my amendment may go over with it, and another in line 5, on page 15.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be passed over.

Mr. WARREN. I understand the proposition is to pass over the committee amendment.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. To pass over all.

Mr. WARREN. To pass it over and to leave the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi in abeyance?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Yes; in abeyance.

Mr. WARREN. I am assuming that we also have passed over the amendment on line 5 on page 15.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair so understands.

Mr. WALSH. What was done with the amendment proposed in lines 8, 9, and 10 on page 14?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Nothing. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "act," in section 5, page 14, line 8, insert:

And have been imported with the permission of the Secretary of Labor in accordance with said section.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there is no objection, the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. I desire before it is disposed of to inquire of the chairman of the committee whether the word "and" should not be "or." It is very proper to make it criminal to induce, assist, or solicit any of those not within the exceptions in section 3.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I ask that the amendment be temporarily passed over and I will make a note of the Senator's suggestion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to section 5 beginning in line 8 on page 14 and the amendment to section 6 on page 15 are passed over.

The next amendment of the Committee on Immigration was, in section 7, page 15, line 20, after the word "printing," to strike out "or"; in line 21, after the word "representation," to strike out "or by the"; in line 21, after the word "commissions," to strike out the words "or the"; in line 22, after the word "alien," to insert "or otherwise"; and in the same line, after the word "otherwise," to strike out "or by any transportation company to another transportation company participating in the transportation of any alien out of the fare of such alien."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 7, page 16, line 1, after the word "encourage," to insert "or attempt to solicit, invite, or encourage."

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I ask that this amendment be passed over for the reason I gave a while ago.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I beg the Senator's pardon; it applies only to persons engaged in the business of transporting. I am perfectly willing to punish them for encouraging it.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Very well; let the amendment be agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment will be agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 7, page 16, line 14, after the word "vessel," to insert "thus proceeded against," so as to read:

And no vessel thus proceeded against shall be granted clearance pending the determination of the question of the liability to the payment of such fine, or while the fine imposed remains unpaid, nor shall such fine be remitted or refunded.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 9, page 18, after the words "United States," to insert "either from a foreign country or any insular possession of the United States"; in line 7, after the word "imbecility," to insert "feeble-mindedness"; and in the same line, after the word "epilepsy," to insert "constitutional psychopathic inferiority, chronic alcoholism," so as to read:

SEC. 9. That it shall be unlawful for any person, including any transportation company other than railway lines entering the United States from foreign contiguous territory, or the owner, master, agent, or consignee of any vessel, to bring to the United States, either from a foreign country or any insular possession of the United States, any alien afflicted with idiocy, insanity, imbecility, feeble-mindedness, epilepsy, constitutional psychopathic inferiority, chronic alcoholism, tuberculosis in any form, or a loathsome or dangerous contagious disease, etc.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I raised the question a little while ago as to that term "constitutional psychopathic inferiority." I still think it is a very awkward phrase, but I have been told that some very distinguished alienists have recommended it as a proper term to be used in this bill, and that being the fact I have no disposition to contest it at all. I think the amendment might well be agreed to. I feel sure that some other phrase would have been better had those distinguished gentlemen taken time to consider the matter carefully, but this term doubtless will accomplish their purpose. The idea is that if they find a man mentally deficient, not stating to what extent he shall be deficient, he will be excluded. The term "inferiority" is very elastic and will enable them, I think, to exclude a good many men who are merely erratic rather than mentally unsound. However, as some distinguished philosopher said, we are all crazy; it is a mere matter of degree, perhaps it is well to submit the matter to these distinguished alienists for determination.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, it is about 4 o'clock and, if agreeable to the chairman of the committee in charge of the bill, I wish to move an executive session.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I ask that the bill be temporarily laid aside before going into executive session.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Then, if there is no objection, the pending amendment will first be agreed to, and then the bill will be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. GALLINGER. That having been agreed to, I ask the chairman if it would not be well to recur to the same phraseology that previously occurs in the bill and agree to that amendment also.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. All right.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think that ought to be done.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment on page 4, line 25, will be agreed to. It is agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. STONE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 57 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, December 11, 1914, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, December 10, 1914.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Come, Thou almighty God, with all Thy quickening power and possess our hearts that we may think wisely, act nobly our part in the great drama of life, for we realize that if we do faithfully the things of to-day we shall be the better prepared to do with greater ease and efficiency the things of to-morrow, and when the crucial test shall come, and come it will, we shall have builded a character which shall enable us to acquit ourselves like men and leave behind us a record worthy of emulation and be prepared for whatever awaits us in the great beyond. And Thine shall be the praise forever. In His name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. WALLIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a report made by the American Chemical Society relative to the feasibility of extending the chemical and dyestuff industry in the United States.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing a report made by the American Chemical Society as to the feasibility of extending the manufacture of dyestuffs, and so forth. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. What is the request?

Mr. FOSTER. I did not understand it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will restate what it is so that the gentleman from Illinois will understand.

Mr. WALLIN. It is the report made by the American Chemical Society relative to the feasibility of extending the industry of chemicals and dyestuffs in the United States. There is no politics in it at all.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting therein an editorial from the Louisville Courier-Journal of December 8.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing an editorial from the Louisville Courier-Journal, which appeared on December 8, written by "Marse Henry" Watterson.

Mr. MANN. In relation to what?

Mr. HOWARD. In relation to the military situation in the United States.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Speaker, I object.

HABIT-FORMING DRUGS.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I call up for consideration conference report on the bill (H. R. 6282) to provide for the registration of, with collectors of internal revenue, and to impose a special tax upon all persons who produce, import, manufacture, compound, deal in, dispense, sell, distribute, or give away opium or coca leaves, their salts, derivatives, or preparations, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina calls up the conference report on the bill H. R. 6282, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report. It fully explains the matter.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The statement was read.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 1196).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6282) to provide for the registration of, with collectors of internal revenue, and to impose a special tax upon all persons who produce, import, manufacture, compound, deal in, dispense, sell, distribute, or give away opium or coca leaves, their salts, derivatives, or preparations, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 10.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 4, 5, 6, 7, 9, 11, 12, 13, 16, 18, 19, 20, 21, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, and 35, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 1: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the word "October," inserted by said amendment, and insert in lieu thereof the word "March"; and on page 1 of the bill, line 4, strike out the word "fourteen" and insert in lieu thereof the word "fifteen"; and the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6282) to provide for the registration of, with collectors of internal revenue, and to impose a special tax upon all persons who produce, import, manufacture, compound, deal in, dispense, sell, distribute, or give away opium or coca leaves, their salts, derivatives, or preparations, and for other purposes, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying report:

Amendment No. 1: This amendment provides for the date of effectiveness of this act, and the House recedes with an amendment fixing March 1, 1915, as the date the act shall go into effect in lieu of October 1, 1914. This change in date is necessary, for before the act can take effect provision must be made for registering and issuing official order blanks to at least 250,000 manufacturers, dealers, physicians, dentists, and veterinarians.

Amendment No. 2: This amendment permits officers of the United States, the States, the Territories, the insular possessions, and the District of Columbia lawfully engaged in making purchases of the specified habit-forming drugs to do so without registering and without paying the special tax, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 3: The act requires the registration of every person producing, manufacturing, selling, giving away, or dispensing any of these specified habit-forming drugs, and then excepts certain officers of the Federal and State Governments. This amendment therefore becomes necessary in order to obviate any question of the right of these officers to dispense or give away the drugs which they purchase without registering, and the House recedes with an amendment, changing the word "obliged" to "required."

Amendments Nos. 4, 5, 6, 7, 9, 11, 12, 13, 14, 16, 18, 19, 20, 21, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 30, 31, 33, 34, and 35 are either changes in language making the phraseology of the act more clear and certain or correcting clerical errors, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 8: This amendment as redrafted does not require the personal attention of a physician, dentist, or veterinary surgeon to dispense or distribute any of the aforesaid narcotics, but, in case there is not personal attention on the part of the physician, dentist, or veterinarian, a record showing the amount of the drug dispensed or distributed, the date, the name, and the address of the patient to whom such drugs are dispensed or distributed must be kept for a period of two years, subject to inspection by the officers, agents, and employees of the Treasury Department and to the State, Territorial, District, municipal, and insular officials named in this act. Physicians, dentists, and veterinary surgeons will not have to keep a record of the quantity of the drug administered, etc., when in personal attendance upon their patients.

Amendment No. 10: Section 8 of this bill makes it unlawful for any person not registered under the provisions of this act to have in his possession or under his control any of the habit-forming drugs specified in this act, but exempts employees of registered persons acting in the scope of their employment and nurses acting under the supervision of a physician, dentist, or veterinary surgeon. As nurses are often employed by the patient, in order to prevent a nurse employed by a patient having possession of the aforementioned drugs from becoming liable to the penalty for violation of this act it therefore is necessary for the physician, dentist, or veterinary surgeon to register under this act, and the Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 15: This amendment is to make it clear that it will be lawful for manufacturers and dealers to sell to the specified public officers without the official order blank. This amendment becomes necessary because previous amendments have exempted these officers from the necessity of registering and obtaining official order blanks. The House recedes with an amendment specifying among the exempted class of officers those of the Public Health Service.

Amendment No. 17: This amendment becomes necessary because in the Philippine Islands, Porto Rico, and the Canal Zone the United States internal-revenue laws do not apply and there are no Federal internal-revenue districts or collectors. Neither are there any United States district courts in the Philippines. This amendment merely bestows jurisdiction in the Philippine Islands on the local courts and gives the President authority to issue such Executive orders as are deemed necessary to carry into effect the intent and purpose of this act, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 22: This amendment merely extends the exemption from liability under this act to persons delivering any of the aforementioned drugs prescribed or dispensed by a physician, dentist, or veterinarian, and to United States, county, municipal, District, Territorial, or insular officers or officials acting within the scope of their official duties, and the House recedes with an amendment requiring the physician, dentist, or veterinarian to register under the terms of this act.

Amendment No. 29: The House bill limited the amount of heroin that could be sold, distributed, given away, or dispensed without coming within the terms of this act to one-twelfth of a grain. The Senate increased the amount to one-fourth of a grain, and the House recedes with an amendment limiting the amount to one-eighth of a grain.

Amendment No. 32: This amendment exempts nurses working under the supervision of physicians, dentists, or veterinary surgeons registered under the act from the provisions of the act. This provision becomes necessary because the nurse is generally employed by the patient, and is therefore not an employee of a person registered under the act, and the House recedes.

CLAUDE KITCHIN,
CORDELL HULL,
J. HAMPTON MOORE,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANN. I notice the conference report places the date for putting this act into effect as March 15. While doubtless that was a proper date at the time the report was agreed to in conference, it seems rather short now. I realize that it can not be very well changed now before it is agreed to, but I suggest to the gentleman to take into consideration the question of having a joint resolution passed fixing the date a little further in the future. This act affects so many people that I doubt very much whether it can be properly known and understood throughout the country by March 15.

Mr. KITCHIN. I think what the gentleman says is true, and we will do that.

Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. KITCHIN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 19422, the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 19422, with Mr. GARNER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 19422, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 19422) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and for other purposes.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] use some time now?

Mr. DAVIS. I will. Mr. Chairman, I yield one hour to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER]. [Applause.]

OUR INADEQUATE NATIONAL DEFENSES.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, on the 15th day of November, about four weeks ago, Maj. Gen. William W. Wotherspoon, Chief of Staff and virtual head of the United States Army, made his report to Congress. Yesterday the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, Mr. HAY, of Virginia, said, in pleasantry, I hope, that Gen. Wotherspoon's report must have been written when he was "nervous and excited." The expression sounds strangely familiar. That report of Gen. Wotherspoon showed that the United States is totally and absolutely unprepared for war. Chairman HAY, of Virginia, I ask you why, instead of declaring your hearings closed, you do not summon the man who wrote that report? I challenge you to summon before your committee Maj. Gen. Wotherspoon, head of the United States Army, and his predecessor, Gen. Leonard Wood. Will you do it?

Mr. HAY rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts yield?

Mr. GARDNER. Yes.

Mr. HAY. I will say to the gentleman that Maj. Gen. Wotherspoon is now on the retired list of the Army.

Mr. GARDNER. Maj. Gen. Wotherspoon has been for a few days on the retired list. You summoned his successor. Why do you not summon the man who wrote the report?

Mr. HAY. Because it has never been the habit or custom to summon a man who is no longer holding the office.

Mr. GARDNER. I challenge you to summon the man who wrote that report, and I challenge you to summon Maj. Gen. Wood, his predecessor. Will you do it?

Mr. HAY. I will do it if I think it is necessary, and I will not if I do not.

Mr. GARDNER. I sat at the feet of Gamaliel the day before yesterday while he discoursed on our present capacity to defend ourselves against a foreign enemy. I listened with delight to the President's dissertation on the glories of friendship, "service," and concord. How admirably he expresses those glorious truths which, so far as I know, nobody disputes! However, it is not the manner of the President's discourse, but rather its matter, which should awaken our interest. It is not to the generalities which he so brilliantly expresses, but rather to his bill of particulars that I invite your attention. It is the meat inside of the coconut which is of importance, not the shell on the outside, no matter how beautifully it may be adorned.

THE PRESIDENT'S MAN OF STRAW.

Let us see how the President states the position of those of us who differ from his views. Let me restate the wonderful dreams in which the President thinks that we indulge. Let me reconstruct the fantastic man of straw which the President erected and then proceeded to demolish with the shrapnel of his scholarly eloquence.

We will not—

Says the President—

ask our young men to spend the best years of their lives making soldiers of themselves.

Who, pray, says the contrary? Surely not I. Far from dreaming of such a thing, I am proposing a thorough investigation by an independent commission which shall recommend to the people of the United States exactly what course we ought to pursue to insure our national security. Surely it is not such "nervous and excited" persons as ex-Secretary Meyer, ex-Secretary Dickinson, ex-Secretary Bonaparte, ex-Secretary Wright, and ex-Secretary Stimson who are advocating compulsory military service. All five of those gentlemen have signified their intention to address the Committee on Rules in favor of an immediate and thorough investigation of this whole question. Four of those former Secretaries have made the strongest possible public utterances, and in not one of those utterances is there breathed one single word about compulsory military service.

My friends, I can recall only one recent public speech which deals either directly or by suggestion or by inference with compulsory military service. That address was delivered by the present Assistant Secretary of the Navy, Franklin D. Roosevelt, at a meeting of the National Civic Federation in New York. Mr. Roosevelt advised the American people to look carefully into the system of compulsory military training which the labor party in Australia has ordained for all Australians. So far as I know that is the only public word on the subject which has been reported.

The President, of course, has the power to discipline Assistant Secretary Roosevelt for his temerity, if he will, but he ought not to rely on his own subordinate's words for material with which to stuff his man of straw. Ah, Mr. President, it did not need the battery of your exquisite English to destroy your own fantastic bogie man of straw. He was but the figment, the pleasant figment, of your resourceful brain. One whiff of the healthy fresh air of reality would have dissolved him as a mist is dissolved before the sun. But the public would have been a loser, for your bogie man, sir, is the very acme of the fancy of the cloistered scholar, and woe betide the common mortal who seeks to impair his gossamer fabric with wanton touch.

THE PLUCK OF GARRISON AND FRANKLIN ROOSEVELT.

Right here let me digress a moment to take off my hat to the superb courage of the Assistant Secretary of the Navy, Franklin D. Roosevelt. He has taken this occasion, despite the administration, to tell the country that our modest Navy is already 18,000 men short, and that there are more deficiencies to follow when the vessels which are now under construction are completed. Roosevelt's pluck is equaled, but not surpassed, by that of Secretary Garrison, who this very day, in the teeth of the President's message, has recommended an increase of 25,000 men and 1,000 officers for the United States Army. In his report he tells us how a bill should be drawn to provide this increase. So I take occasion at this moment to introduce the bill which you see in my hand, in order to put his recommendation into effect.

Mr. GORDON. Would you desire to have that bill referred to a special committee also?

Mr. GARDNER. Yes; everything to a special commission, but it looks as if we could not have one.

TRAINED CITIZENRY.

"We must depend in every time of national peril"—listen, gentlemen, because I am reading your President's words—"we must depend in every time of national peril on citizenry trained and accustomed to arms," says the President. No one would venture to contradict that admirably stated truism, but how are we to get enough citizenry, as he calls us ordinary people? How are we to find all the men necessary for that arduous training in times of peace? How great an army of Regulars do we need to defend this country during the long months while that citizenry is being mobilized? All of this requires investigation, and especially impartial investigation.

In the very near future we shall have only 25,000 regular soldiers available for the far-flung battle line of our field army. That is what your Secretary of War says in his report published to-day, and he points out that the police force of New York City is about half as numerous as the Nation's Army.

Does the President realize that there are only 120,000 militiamen in this whole Nation, in spite of all the efforts which the States and the United States have made to encourage our citizen soldiery? Does he realize that of that unpretentious number 23,000 did not show up for inspection last year? Does he know that 31,000 did not appear at the annual encampment? Is he aware of the fact that 44,000, or 40 per cent of all the militiamen who are armed with a rifle, did not even appear on the rifle range? Yet all these facts are contained in the report of the Chief of Staff, and similar amazing statements appeared in the reports of his predecessor. Is not the remedy worthy of the study of men whose minds are not already made up?

There is just one way to get men to buckle down to the hard work necessary to become trained militiamen, and that is by paying them.

Mr. BLACKMON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARDNER. Providing the gentleman does not get "nervous and excited."

Mr. BLACKMON. I never do that. How long has the gentleman from Massachusetts been in Congress?

Mr. GARDNER. Twelve years.

Mr. BLACKMON. And the gentleman has just now discovered the inadequate preparation that the Congress of the United States has been making for the Army and Navy?

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Alabama had done me the honor to read the speeches I have been making, he would know that I have confessed that I have sat like a coward for 12 years in silence because I was afraid to tell the 700 men in the National Guard in my district that I did not think they were an adequate protection.

Mr. BLACKMON. That was while the gentleman's party was in power?

Mr. GARDNER. Oh, both parties are at fault. Mr. Chairman, as I was saying, you have got to pay men if you want them to work. Does that plan appeal to the President? It certainly appeals to me, and I voted that way when the militia pay bill was up. I believe in paying the militia, but I am by no means sure that the payment of money will be sufficient of itself to attract the necessary numbers.

Just remember that all over this country amusements are at the elbow of every young man to-day as they never were before. Remember also that the income of the Carnegie Peace Endowment is some $480,000 a year—a very little less than half a million dollars spread broadcast to pay for the activity of the organizer, for the pen of the ready writer, and for the tongue of the lyceum circuiter. Why, with half of that sum expended in printer's ink you could get up a revolution in many of the nations of this hemisphere.

But where is this trained citizenry to get the weapons of war? According to the last report of the Chief of Staff we are short 316 field guns and 1,322,384 rounds of ammunition necessary to equip our militia in time of war.

Last year Gen. Wood asked for enough guns and ammunition to bring the United States up to the standard of Bulgaria. That immodest demand was gently but firmly rejected. Even the President, with his transcendental ideas, can not expect his trained citizenry to fight with their fists. It may be true that throughout our history we have depended on our trained or untrained civilians, but surely the President would expect our troops to go into battle equipped with some weapon more deadly than an historic parallel. I will not say that we have not enough field artillery ammunition to last during one single day's battle if all our guns were engaged, but I will say that an officer very high up in the United States Army has told me so.

I do not, however, hesitate to assert that if war were to break out to-day, it would be found that our coast defenses have not sufficient ammunition for an hour's fight. The report of the Chief of Staff—Gen. Wotherspoon—confirmed, I am told, by his successor, shows that for coast-defense mortars we have ammunition enough to last for one-half hour, and for coast-defense guns we have ammunition enough to last three quarters of an hour.

THE NAVY.

After all, as the President says, we must depend on our Navy. But have we an adequate Navy? I should rather give heed to the opinion of the General Naval Board on that subject, expressed year after year, than to listen to the gossip which trickles out from behind the fast-closed doors of the Naval Committee. As you know, gentlemen, except yesterday, all hearings of the Naval Committee have been private, with no reporters present. How do you expect that the public is going to get any reports of the proceedings except those colored by the views of the committeemen who give the information to the reporters?

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARDNER. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. Before the gentleman leaves the Army part of it, I take it the gentleman is in favor of building up a larger standing army.

Mr. GARDNER. Yes, indeed; I am in favor of 25,000 additional men for the mobile army, as recommended by your Secretary of War. Furthermore, I am in favor of enlisting as soon as may be 11,000 men for our coast defense, inasmuch as the report of Gen. Weaver, Chief of Coast Artillery, shows that we lack that number of men to man the coast fortresses.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GARDNER. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. Before we can get into a war with a first-class nation the present European war will certainly have to close——

Mr. GARDNER. Why?

Mr. McKELLAR. Just one moment. Why should we build up a great standing army at a time when every other first-class nation is already at war, when every first-class nation is depleting its national and private resources, when it is destroying its trade and commerce, and when it is exerting every effort in the war that it is already engaged in? It will be 20 years before any first-class nation can get ready for another war with a first-class Nation like ours. It takes money and resources to carry on a first-class war. Why, then, should we get hysterical now, and prepare for a war with a bogie man, when we know no other nation can possibly go into war with us in the next 20 or 25 years?

Mr. GARDNER. That is one of the longest questions I ever heard, but if I apprehend it rightly I can answer it in this way: We want to build up our Army and Navy, which can no longer be improvised in a few months as formerly, so as to be ready to defend this Nation. So far as we can see, it is highly unlikely that we shall be involved in this present war, but we must be ready just the same, or we may be attacked or the Monroe doctrine violated at some future time after this war is over. The gentleman is making the same argument that the French Nation made in our Civil War—in fact, that all Europe made, but which France alone had the temerity to put to the test. Like the gentleman from Tennessee, France argued that the North and the South were engaged in a death struggle, that when it was over it would be easy for any foreign nation to have the better of the winner, and so the French established the Emperor Maximillian in Mexico in defiance of our Monroe doctrine. But France found that instead of being weaker at the end of the war the North was stronger; and, my friend, you will probably find that the winner in this European war is a pretty husky citizen when he gets through. What did the North do? What did we do? We just sent down an army, and we lined our men up on the Rio Grande. We stationed our men looking over that river at the Emperor Maximilian and the French army, and every enlisted man had a copy of the Monroe doctrine in his hand, and out went the French army and down went the Emperor Maximilian. As to a lack of funds for war chests, no nation ever yet was stopped by lack of funds from going to war. We heard that same talk from the pacificists in July last summer. We heard how the bankers would never lend the money for a war, yet the international peace conference at the Lac de Constance a few days later was caught in the vortex of the German mobilization.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. GARDNER. Certainly, although I am coming to the gentleman later.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I hope the gentleman will reach me. The gentleman just a few moments ago stated——

Mr. GARDNER. One moment. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I consumed?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has consumed 30 minutes.

Mr. GARDNER. I can only yield for a brief statement.

Mr. FITZGERALD. This will be brief. The gentleman stated that there was not on hand sufficient ammunition for our coast defenses to fire our guns for half an hour.

Mr. GARDNER. That was not exactly my statement, although approximately so. I did not say "for our coast defenses"; I said, "for our coast-defense mortars," and I said that there was ammunition for three-quarters of an hour for our coast-defense guns.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I hold in my hand the report of the Chief of Coast Artillery for 1914, just published.

Mr. GARDNER. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. On page 16 of the report there is this statement:

Ammunition: The ammunition now on hand and under manufacture is 73 per cent of the allowance fixed by the National Coast Defense Board.

Mr. GARDNER. That is right, but the National Coast Defense Board was entirely wrong. The board fixed the ammunition supply at an amount sufficient for one hour's battle. Seventy-three per cent of an hour is three-quarters of an hour, which conforms with what I have just told you.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If this National Defense Board, which consisted of the best-equipped men in the Army and Navy, are not competent to determine how much ammunition we shall have, who will pay any attention to the conclusions——

Mr. GARDNER. Any independent commission will be competent.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Who will pay any attention to the conclusions of the gentleman from Massachusetts as against our experts?

Mr. GARDNER. Now, do not get nervous and excited. [Laughter.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; I will not; but the gentleman from Massachusetts is setting himself up as superior in intelligence and judgment to the men who have devoted their lives to the defense of the country.

Mr. GARDNER. And do not make a stump speech in the time allowed me for my address.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARDNER. No. I have been pretty patient and have only half an hour left. I shall be pleased to yield to the gentleman from Indiana after I get through. I ask the gentleman to wait until the termination of my remarks.

Mr. BARNHART. But I have a resolution here from a butchers' association which I would like to inquire about.

Mr. GARDNER. Very well.

Mr. BARNHART. I hold in my hand a petition which I received this morning——

Mr. GARDNER. Oh, Mr. Chairman, I ask the gentleman from Indiana to print that in the RECORD. I decline to yield further.

Mr. BARNHART. But I do not want to print it in the RECORD.

Mr. MURDOCK. Where is this petition from?

Mr. BARNHART. It is from the Butchers' Association of South Bend.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, we are aware of the fact that we are 10 battleships short of safety, because the General Board of the Navy tells us so. We know that we are 49 submarines under the standard. Admiral Badger testified to that fact in the Committee on Naval Affairs, and the newspapers managed to find it out. We know that we have no navy in the air at all—only 12 aeroplanes or so, and of those 12 only about 7 can get out of their own way. I think the Army has about the same number. Not one of them is armored, I am told. As to our Navy under the sea, it is extremely scanty for a nation with our far-reaching coast lines, and I believe that a great part of it is antiquated.

As to the condition of our fleet, in default of an investigation I hope the President will give heed to this solemn sentence recorded in the report of the General Board of the Navy.

Mr. MURDOCK. For this year?

Mr. GARDNER. No; the report for this year is not yet out. It will be out next Saturday. This is the last report published. Now listen, gentlemen:

The absence of any definite naval policy on our part, except in the General Board, and the failure of the people, the Congress, and the executive government to recognize the necessity for such a policy has already placed us in a position of inferiority which may lead to war; and this inferiority is progressive and will continue to increase until the necessity for a definite policy is recognized and that policy put into operation.

That report was signed by George Dewey. Now, of course, I suppose that the admiral himself did not pen those words. I do not know who did so, but I say to you, Chairman PADGETT, of the Committee on Naval Affairs, that I challenge you to summon before your committee the man who penned those words. I challenge you to summon before your committee Franklin D. Roosevelt, Assistant Secretary of the Navy. I challenge you to summon before your committee Admiral Willard H. Brownson. I challenge you to summon before your committee Admiral Richard Wainwright. I have sent for the gentleman from Tennessee, the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs. I have notified him twice that I was going to mention his name, and I particularly asked that he should be here. He is not here to answer my question, as was the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs [Mr. HAY], but I hope he will be here later. If Chairman PADGETT seeks a fair, impartial investigation; if he wishes both sides to be heard; if he desires to open the forum to which the chairman of the Committee on Rules says we must resort, he and you, Mr. Chairman HAY, of Virginia, must summon the witnesses whom I challenge you to summon.

WHEN WILL ALL MEN AGREE?

The President says that naval authorities never agree as to the proper lines on which to develop our Navy. If the expression of that view is designed for an argument, then we should have no Navy whatever until the bright day dawns when all men think alike. Battleships may be out of date, but at all events British battleships have swept the commerce of Germany from the seas while British merchantmen continue to plow the waves in such security that we Americans do not hesitate to intrust them with our precious freight and our still more precious lives. Submarines and mines may have taken the place of battleships, but they have not restored German commerce to the seas and they have not impeded the freedom of British commerce in the Atlantic. In short, then, our officers and officials tell us that we lack men for our Navy, men for our coast defense, and men for our Army; that we lack artillery and that we lack the ammunition with which to charge that artillery; that we lack great battleships to sail the seas and little scouts to act as their messengers and their eyes; that we have a sadly deficient undersea Navy and practically no overhead fleet at all.

PITILESS PUBLICITY BEHIND CLOSED DOORS.

I have proposed that an independent commission be appointed to investigate all those things, to report to the Congress how the Army and the Navy and the coast defense may be brought up to date and may be made to cooperate with each other; to estimate the men and equipment necessary for our defense, and to report to Congress a definite policy for our future guidance. Instead of approving this commission of inquiry the President of the United States relegates us to the pitiless publicity of hearings behind closed doors. For it is behind closed doors that Chairman PADGETT, of the Committee on Naval Affairs, conducts his hearings; that Chairman SHERLEY, of the committee on fortifications, conducts his hearings; and that Chairman FITZGERALD, who has charge of the defenses of the Panama Canal, conducts his hearings. For the first time since I have been a Member of this House——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARDNER. I do.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman state what he means by "behind closed doors"?

Mr. GARDNER. I mean with no reporters present.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the gentleman will permit, I will say that there is a stenographer present.

Mr. GARDNER. Yes; but he is the committee's stenographer, and there is no news value to the evidence when it is ultimately printed. The gentleman knows that he holds up the record of the evidence until his bills are reported to the House.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But if the gentleman will permit me, I will state that it is all printed and available.

Mr. GARDNER. Oh, yes; long after——

Mr. FITZGERALD. And the gentleman has obtained copies of testimony, and if there is anything that ought to be disclosed why does not he present it?

Mr. HAY. The gentleman from Massachusetts understands that the hearings before the Committee on Military Affairs are open not only to the committee stenographers but to newspaper men.

Mr. GARDNER. And I congratulate the gentleman. I did not mention the gentleman's committee when I spoke of committee hearings "behind closed doors." I mentioned the names of the other three chairmen to whom the President has referred this matter for an impartial investigation.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. The gentleman is mistaken in reference to the Committee on Naval Affairs. We had hearings for three days, and all the newspaper people in the country were there.

Mr. GARDNER. I started to tell the House about that a few moments ago, when the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] interrupted. I think the gentleman from Maryland is a little mistaken—yesterday for the first time your committee had an open hearing.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. We have them whenever they are demanded.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I started to make this statement——

Mr. GARDNER. I will have to——

Mr. SISSON. That I was in the committee yesterday and to-day and the reporters were in the committee.

Mr. GARDNER. Very likely; but I have told the gentleman and I have already said twice that it happened yesterday for the first time.

For the first time in the history of this country, so far as I know, a committee of this House has refused a hearing to one of the Members of the House.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARDNER. No; I can not yield again. Five of our great ex-Secretaries of War and the Navy have prepared themselves to address the Committee on Rules in favor of a thorough investigation. One of the ex-Secretaries of whom I speak has prepared a special study of the question of the cooperation between the Army and the Navy; but the chairman of the Committee on Rules has declined to give us a hearing.

Now, what am I going to do with that former Secretary? Shall I invite him first to the secret sessions of Mr. PADGETT'S Committee on Naval Affairs and ask him to wait there while the members complete their discussion of the proper locality for marine barracks? And shall I then ask that a day be assigned for a hearing before Mr. SHERLEY'S committee on fortifications in the middle of a discussion about the cost of powder? And, next, shall I express my regret that he can not avail himself of an opportunity to present his ideas openly with reporters present in Chairman HAY'S Committee on Military Affairs, because Chairman HAY, of the Committee on Military Affairs, yesterday notified his committee that all hearings for the season are over?

Mr. HAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARDNER. Yes. After this I can yield only to gentlemen whose names I mention in debate. The time I am allowed to speak is limited.

Mr. HAY. If the gentleman is serious or was serious about having anybody heard before the Committee on Military Affairs, why did not the gentleman give me a list of the gentlemen he wanted to be heard, when every one of them would have been summoned? The gentleman himself would have been——

Mr. GARDNER. I have got the gentleman's question, and he need not complete it with a speech. The answer is that it was only yesterday that I received a notification from the chairman of the Committee on Rules that I must look for my forum to your committee, and no sooner had I received that notification than I was told that your hearings had closed. To go on with what I was saying: Imagine the delight of that ex-Secretary when he has completed his round in suddenly discovering that he has to go through it all over again with the committees of the Senate, and then imagine his further ecstasy when he finds that he has the committees of conference still to persuade.

Oh, Mr. Chairman, do you really think that four committees of the House and three committees of the Senate, all acting independently, can recommend a policy for our defense which will command the confidence and support of the country? If not, then the Speaker must enforce the rules of the House and require the chairman of the Committee on Rules [Mr. HENRY] to call his full committee together before he can refuse my request for a hearing.

Now, the President——

Mr. HENRY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARDNER. I will.

Mr. HENRY. I think there will be no difficulty about that. The Committee on Rules will be called together next Saturday, and I think the full committee will turn your request down in about half a minute.

Mr. GARDNER. Very good; but you can not do it without a yea-and-nay vote, and you will be put on record.

Mr. HENRY. I am ready to vote "yea" now.

Mr. GARDNER. I understand.

Mr. PADGETT. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GARDNER. Yes; if the gentleman will answer the question I asked him in his absence.

Mr. PADGETT. I do not know what question you asked in my absence. [Laughter.]

Mr. GARDNER. I shall present it to the gentleman now, and we shall see whether we can make a trade.

Mr. HENRY. You were giving the gentleman the absent treatment.

Mr. GARDNER. I notified him twice.

Mr. PADGETT. I want to say to the gentleman that it is but a short time since I came into the House, and I want to say also that I received word from the gentleman that he was going to make a speech this morning, and that he desired me to be present. I sent him word that I was engaged in a very important committee meeting and it was impossible for me to leave.

Mr. GARDNER. A message which I did not get.

Mr. PADGETT. I sent it, and I sent it in writing to Mr. MANN, the leader of the minority.

Mr. MANN. I will say that I received the word after I notified the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GARDNER. That was the second message I sent. There is no harm done, because I am going to ask you the question now.

Mr. PADGETT. I understand. I understood the gentleman stated I was holding a secret meeting of the committee.

Mr. GARDNER. I said nothing of the sort. I said that until yesterday you held secret meetings of the Committee on Naval Affairs. Do you deny it?

Mr. PADGETT. I will say it is incorrect. I have never denied anybody admission that wanted to come in.

Mr. GARDNER. Do you admit newspaper men?

Mr. PADGETT. I never have denied any newspaper man.

Mr. GARDNER. Do you admit newspaper men as a matter of practice?

Mr. PADGETT. I will when they want to come.

Mr. GARDNER. If you admit them, they do not know it.

Mr. PADGETT. They never asked until yesterday or day before yesterday, and I granted their request, and I believe there was one there day before yesterday.

Mr. GARDNER. I never started to stir the matter up until the day before yesterday.

Mr. PADGETT. And there were a dozen there yesterday and to-day.

Mr. GARDNER. And there will be plenty more.

Mr. PADGETT. They will be welcome at any time.

Mr. GARDNER. They never have been welcome until yesterday.

Mr. PADGETT. They never asked until then.

Mr. GARDNER. Everybody knew you would not have them.

Mr. PADGETT. I never have refused them and never intended to refuse them. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MANN. Is it not a fact that the messenger which the gentleman from Massachusetts sent to the Naval Committee to deliver a message to the Naval Committee was refused admission to the rooms of the Naval Committee?

Mr. PADGETT. I did not know it.

Mr. MANN. It is a fact.

Mr. PADGETT. When?

Mr. MANN. This morning.

Mr. PADGETT. I did not know it.

Mr. MANN. They refused to admit him to the room.

Mr. PADGETT. If he had brought his message to me——

Mr. MANN. I wrote out a message afterwards and sent it by the messenger.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, I refuse to yield further to a discussion in which I have no part.

Mr. PADGETT. My clerk delivered the message to me. The room was full of newspaper men and the members of the committee, and the fact that the messenger was not admitted while his message was admitted is immaterial.

Mr. MANN. He had a personal message, and you refused admission to the messenger.

Mr. PADGETT. My clerk received his message, and he delivered it to me, and I returned a message. Then I received your written communication, and I answered it, and you have it. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MANN. It is true that the messenger was not permitted admission to the room.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that war is not in order until we are prepared. [Laughter.]

Mr. PADGETT. I may say that the reporters were in the committee room yesterday and, I believe, the day before.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit, I shall now come to the question which I put to him in his absence. I read from the report of the General Naval Board—from the last one, because the current one has not been released yet—a statement to the effect that the inferiority of our Navy is progressive, and will continue to increase until a definite policy is adopted; I do not know who the officer was who penned that statement, but I challenge you to summon him before your committee. I challenge you to summon Franklin D. Roosevelt, Assistant Secretary of the Navy, before your committee. I challenge you to summon Admiral Willard H. Brown-son before your committee. I challenge you to summon Admiral Richard Wainwright before your committee. Will you do it?

Mr. PADGETT. I want to say to the gentleman that I had Admiral Vreeland before the committee last year as the representative of the General Board, and his hearings are printed, in which, as a member of the General Board, he stated fully, completely, wholly, and absolutely his ideas and recommendations. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. GARDNER. If the gentleman will let me give him questions to ask of Admiral Wainwright, he will gain a lot of information that he did not get last year.

Mr. PADGETT. I do not propose to make the gentleman from Massachusetts a member of my committee. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. GARDNER. Oh, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] just asked me why I did not give him a list of witnesses to summon, and he says that he would have summoned them. Now, when I give the list he begs the question. Do not you want to hear both sides?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir. And I want to state that yesterday or day before yesterday we had before the committee Admiral Badger, a member of the general board of this year, who stated fully, completely, and absolutely the recommendations, and represented and spoke for the General Board. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. GARDNER. Now, Mr. Chairman, there is a very obvious answer which I could make in reply.

Mr. PADGETT. One moment. I want to say further that the recommendations of the general board this year and last year, if adopted, would require an expenditure of not less than $125,000,000 for new construction.

Mr. GARDNER. And the American people would say "Amen" to it.

Mr. PADGETT. They would not.

Mr. GARDNER. Now, Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. EAGLE). Ten minutes.

Mr. GARDNER. Is there any possibility of my having a few minutes more? I only ask enough time to answer some of these gentlemen.

Mr. DAVIS. I will yield the gentleman 10 minutes that I had reserved for the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK].

Mr. GARDNER. Thank you. Perhaps I shall not use it all.

The President, by his refusal to permit the pitiless searchlight of publicity to be turned on the question of our military security, inspires the same confidence in our Army and Navy as a bank president would inspire in his institution were he to lock the door against the bank examiner.

ARBITRATION.

One thought of the President, and only one, almost beguiled me. I confess that my bosom swelled with patriotic pride when I thought of the President or his representative sitting at the head of the council table of the peace conference after the war is over. To be sure, the picture was a little dimmed by the thought that the conditions, as the President regards them, require him to lay aside his weapons and retain the gorgeous but impotent uniform of the referee when he approaches the representatives of the warring nations. Arbitration. What a grand word. Yet the two Hague peace conventions and the declarations of London have all been torn to shreds. That is all that Carnegie so far has got to show as a result of his $10,000,000, except an unprepared England and an unprepared Belgium.

One thing more I had almost forgotten. I must concede as a scalp to Mr. Carnegie's hatchet one more trophy, even if the scalp is made of false hair. The pacificists tell us that their efforts have at least made every nation disclaim the responsibility for this war. To be sure, either the pacificists or else common sense have brought about that result. I expect that it was just common sense, because the advisability of making it appear that the other fellow started the war was taught many years ago in Bismarck's "Reminiscences," and Bismarck was surely an eminently common-sense gentleman.

Had Belgium, like Switzerland and Holland, put more confidence in her troops and less confidence in arbitration and "scraps of paper," she might to-day be free from the agonies of invasion.

Yet every "scrap of paper" to which America puts her sign manual must be redeemed from the first word to the last, cost what it may, and whether or not every other nation on earth repudiates its obligations.

But suppose that America, while adhering to its agreements, finds its path beset by nations with smaller consciences and bigger howitzers. How is it going to be then? Shall we be able to meet the situation with mammoth rolls of Sunday-school signatures or with resolutions passed at peace meetings?

LULLABIES.

Those of us who think that if we keep as still as mice we may be invited to referee the end of this European prize fight prate cheerfully of the "United States of the World" and of the organization of an international police. Well, perhaps we may be a little nearer something of the sort when there is an international language, or when we have educated our people up to arbitrating the Monroe doctrine, or when we have been successful in persuading the labor unions of California to arbitrate the question of Chinese exclusion, and not long before. Pending that day, I should like to have a few more dogs of war, and I promise not to set any of them onto innocent passers-by.

Oh, I can sit in my easy chair and dream just like any pacificist. I can dream of the day when the organization of society will be such that burglars will no longer exist. Meanwhile I live in the country 3 miles from the station and half a mile from the nearest neighbor, and I propose to continue to keep a watch dog. Furthermore, in my absence my wife has a loaded revolver in her room, and, by the way, I have never noticed that her preparedness for war has manifested itself by a murderous desire to practice her military efficiency on the chickens. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Chairman, how much time did the gentleman from Massachusetts occupy?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman occupied one minute less than his hour.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, some time before the session ends I expect to have something to say on the preparedness of this country for war. During the remarks of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] I called his attention to the fact that he had said that there was ammunition sufficient only for three-quarters of an hour for the coast-defense guns. In face of that fact, in the report of the Chief of Artillery, Gen. Weaver, for the current year, at page 16, is found this statement:

> The ammunition now on hand and under manufacture is 73 per cent of the allowance fixed by the National Coast Defense Board.

Mr. GARDNER said that is right, but I think they are entirely wrong.

The National Coast Defense Board is what is known as the Taft Board. It was appointed by President Roosevelt, and its report was transmitted to Congress in a message by President Roosevelt on March 5, 1906.

Mr. GARDNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. GARDNER. I have been summoned out of the Chamber. Does the gentleman wish me to remain here?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not know whether the gentleman from Massachusetts desires to hear what I have to say, but what I have to say I desire to go into the RECORD with his speech, because of his statement that the board on whose report we have been expending money and preparing the defenses of the country are so ignorant that in their recommendations they are entirely wrong. I desire to put the personnel of the board in the RECORD, as well as the instructions given to them when appointed.

This is from the memorandum prepared by President Roosevelt when he appointed the board:

> THE WHITE HOUSE, January 31, 1905.
> A board, to consist of the Secretary of War and the officers hereinafter named, is appointed to revise the report of the Endicott Board, which was appointed under the provisions of an act of Congress approved March 3, 1885, to "examine and report at what ports fortifications or other defenses are most urgently required, character and kind of defenses best adapted for each, with reference to armament," and "the utilization of torpedoes, mines, or other defensive appliances," with further instructions to extend its examinations so as to include estimates and recommendations relative to defenses of the insular possessions.
> The report of the Endicott Board, submitted 19 years ago, was very carefully considered by its distinguished members. It enunciated sound military principles and recommended the best application of these principles with the conditions then existing. It fully deserved the generous support it has received from Congress.
> Nearly two-thirds of the land armament recommended by the board has been installed or provided for, but since the date of the report so many conditions then existing have been materially modified and the engines or implements of war have been so greatly improved and others untried or unknown, of undoubted value developed, giving a greater advantage to the defense that it is confidently believed our harbor defense can be completed effectively and satisfactorily with a much less expenditure of money than has been heretofore estimated. With this object in view, the board will recommend the armament, fixed and floating, mobile torpedoes, submarine mines, and all other defensive appliances that may be necessary to complete the harbor defense with the most economical and advantageous expenditure of money.

The board will also recommend the order in which the proposed defense shall be completed, so that all the elements of harbor defense may be properly and effectively coordinated.

Those were the instructions under which the board acted. In their report, speaking of the amount or the supply of ammunition that was to be provided for our coast-defense guns, they state:

The estimate for the ammunition covers the amount necessary to complete the supply that, in the opinion of the committee, should be provided in order to meet any attack that may be made and is in addition to the money already appropriated.

Who signed the report?

William H. Taft, Secretary of War, president of the board; Adna R. Chaffee, lieutenant general, United States Army; J. C. Bates, major general, United States Army, Chief of Staff; Charles M. Thomas, rear admiral, United States Navy; J. P. Story, major general, United States Army; A. W. Greely, brigadier general, Chief Signal Officer; William Crozier, brigadier general, Chief of Ordnance; A. Mackenzie, brigadier general, Chief of Engineers, Samuel M. Mills, brigadier general, Chief of Artillery, C. S. Sperry, captain, United States Navy; George W. Goethals, major, General Staff, secretary of the board.

It is upon the study and report and recommendation of these men that our coast defenses have been modernized, and in accordance with their opinions and reports Congress has been appropriating the money required. They have determined the number of guns, they have determined their position, they have determined the auxiliaries necessary, they have fixed the amount of ammunition which Congress should provide, in order to have our coasts adequately protected. And yet, in the opinion of the gentleman from Massachusetts, they are entirely wrong. These distinguished gentlemen should be eliminated and relegated to private life and the guns and their position, the searchlights and the fire control, the amount and character of the ammunition to be provided, the money to be appropriated by Congress, should be determined not by men of their caliber, training, and experience, but out of the phantoms of the imagination of the gentleman from Massachusetts, who earned well-deserved reward and encomiums by a brilliant service in the Spanish War. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. GARDNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. GARDNER. What is the date of the report from which the gentleman has been reading?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It was transmitted to Congress by President Roosevelt, who appointed the board under the date of March 5, 1906.

Mr. GARDNER. One other question.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Permit me to add one more thing.

Mr. GARDNER. May I ask one more question of the gentleman?

Mr. FITZGERALD. When I have finished this statement. In the report of the Chief of Coast Artillery, Gen. Weaver, for the present year, to which I have just referred, he states on page 16 of the report—and I have heretofore stated that all of the necessary or desirable information about our defenses is available and at hand and at the command of gentlemen, depending entirely upon whether they are seeking information or notoriety [applause on the Democratic side]—on page 16 of that report Gen. Weaver says:

All of the defensive projects for the coasts of the United States and its over-sea possessions which have heretofore been approved have been carried to completion with but few exceptions.

He points out specifically what they are, and points out specifically what is still to be provided additional. I undertake to say that anyone who will examine the report from a single page of it can tell just how much there is in this agitation about the unprotected condition of our country. Now I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman himself agree with that recommendation in 1906 that there should be only one hour's supply of ammunition in reserve for our seacoast defenses?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Did I agree with it?

Mr. GARDNER. Yes; do you?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Not having the requisite military and technical training to determine how much ammunition it is necessary to have at hand at any seacoast defense in order that that coast might be properly protected. I have acquiesced in the recommendations and determinations of the men whom we have educated to inform us on these questions, and the Congress has appropriated accordingly. So far as the coast defenses or the defenses of the canal are concerned, the gentleman made reference to me in that connection by stating that I conducted the hearings for the canal defenses.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has again expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, may I have some more time?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman one minute more.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And that an investigation would be an investigation of myself by myself. Let me refer the gentleman to page 1971 of the hearings, volume 1, Sixty-second Congress, second session, of the Committee on Appropriations, wherein the question of the fortifications of the canal was investigated. At that time I called attention to the fact that we had then before us an estimate for $220,200 for submarine mines as a part of the defenses of the canal that had not appeared in the report of the board originally appointed to determine what defenses were required. Upon the original board to make that report was the expert whom the gentleman wishes now to have called before the Committee on Military Affairs, Gen. Wotherspoon. And not only has the $220,000 that appeared in Congress for the first time in the estimate for 1913 for submarine defenses for the Panama Canal, as a part of the defenses of the canal, been appropriated, but $55,000 additional, which in the meantime it was said was required for additional submarine defenses. I undertake to say that the Committee on Appropriations, with the acquiescence and approval of the House and of the gentleman from Massachusetts, has recommended and has appropriated every dollar that was essential during the nine years that I have been connected with that committee for the defenses of our country. [Applause.]

Before the session of Congress ends I shall make a statement about these matters, and I shall so completely demonstrate the truth of that fact that all of the ex-Secretaries or others seeking notoriety in trying to revamp things published in their annual reports perhaps will not be so anxious to appear before the public in respect to these matters.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER].

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, I am sorry that the gentleman from New York should say that the five ex-secretaries are seeking notoriety. I am sorry that he should imply that I am seeking notoriety. However, it is quite possible that I may be seeking notoriety. At all events, here is the fact about that ammunition. The National Coast Defense Board in 1906 recommended that we should have only one hour's ammunition in reserve for our seacoast mortars and an hour's ammunition for our seacoast guns. The gentleman is right about that—in 1906. He says that he puts trust in the recommendations of the board. Then for heaven's sake why have we not given our coast defenses that one hour's ammunition. The report which the gentleman read showed that we had only 73 per cent, or three-quarters of an hour's ammunition for our guns on the seacoast and 50 per cent, or one-half hour's ammunition for our mortars on the seacoast.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But we have not suffered anything because they have not had the ammunition.

Mr. GARDNER. Oh, no; we have not had any war.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And let me call the gentleman's attention to the fact that during the three years I have been chairman of the Committee on Appropriations we have appropriated for this reserve ammunition at about three times the rate that was appropriated in Republican Congresses. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. GARDNER. I do not deny that. I have not looked into the matter. I yield back the remainder of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts yields back one minute.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES].

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, if I understand the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] his voice is for war. He says we are not prepared for war. I have heard that story before when an effort was being made for a larger Navy. I remember when a gentleman here said that within a twelvemonth this Republic would be flat on its back and helpless with the hands of the yellow race upon our throats. Pray, Mr. Chairman, from what quarter does the gentleman from Massachusetts behold this war cloud that frets the sky? Is he expecting the Republic of Santo Domingo to unloose its mighty Senegambian hosts upon our country? I believe they have a standing army of about 46. Does he expect our neighbor, the Anglo-Saxon people at the north, Canada, to march an army down here and menace our liberties? Canada has no standing army. She has a population about one-fifteenth that of the United States. Is my bellicose friend from Massachusetts looking for Villa or Carranza to turn their ragged, motley hosts in this direction? Where, my colleague, is this war cloud that has disturbed your rest and darkened your vision? Mr. Chairman, this great Republic in which we live, this great Empire of brave men and faithful women does not want a large standing army. Those who found this fertile soil separated from the conflicts of Europe, and builded here a resting place for those who love peace, did not believe that a great standing army was necessary to its perpetuation. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

When they were but struggling colonies scattered over this vast expanse they managed to establish the independence of the United States without a great standing army, and while our population was but 1,000,000, 2,000,000, or 3,000,000, and while our resources were as nothing compared with what they are now, this free people, without a standing army, maintained its principles against every foe. Have we come now, a free Nation of the earth, with 100,000,000 people, the richest nation upon the earth, to reverse the policy of Washington and Jefferson and set at naught the policy of the founders of the Republic and set about to imitate the crown-worn nations of Europe? I wish I knew from what quarter my friend expects trouble. It must be from far across the sea. Why, Mr. Chairman, Napoleon could not cross the English Channel in the zenith of his power to assail England. Does my friend believe that some country in Europe is going to load its soldiers upon transports and start them in this direction? Does he believe that these 100,000,000 people, brave and true, backed by the resources of the richest country in the world, would sit supinely around their firesides while that long and tedious operation was performed of loading transports with soldiers and bringing them to this country? No, Mr. Chairman; the military spirit has been rife in all the years of all the nations of the earth. It was rife at Carthage. Hannibal wanted war. It was rife at Rome. Cæsar wanted war. It was rife at Paris. Napoleon wanted war.

The great generals, the great admirals of this earth, Mr. Chairman, have set their faces for war in all the ages of the world, but in this country, to which men have fled from compulsory military service, in this one great Republic on this earth the mothers who clasp the hands of their daring boys do not want war. The farmer in his field, content to reap an independent support from the bosom of the earth, does not want war. The merchant and the minister, those who have made this country great and who are yet in the providence of God destined to make it greater, are not crying aloud for war. But my friend from Massachusetts says we are not prepared for war, he says "I challenge you" nine times in his speech, and if our country would assume the attitude that he assumes, then, indeed, we would need an army of five or ten millions of men and a navy that dotted all the seas to challenge the world. Well, I do not know whether we are prepared for war or not, but the taxpayers of this country think that we ought to be prepared for most any kind of a war. Just last Congress we appropriated $100,000,000 for the Army and about $150,000,000 for the Navy. I believe I am correct, Mr. Chairman, in saying that this is more money than the entire revenues of the Empire of Japan for a year. Then I would like to ask my friend from Massachusetts, sometime when he gets over this present hysteria of which he seems obsessed, to tell me what has been done with all the hundreds of millions of the people's money that has been expended on the Army and Navy of this country. But he says he is not seeking notoriety here. I do not know whether he is seeking notoriety or not, Mr. Chairman, but I do know he is going to be a very notorious man after this speech. I know this speech is going to cause him greater notoriety than he himself ever dreamed of, because as every mother in this fair land reads the speech of AUGUSTUS P. GARDNER she will look with fear and trembling into the faces of her sons and she will say, "Can it be true that we face compulsory military service in this country?"

Generals may be willing to give the sons of America to the Moloch of war, but the mothers of the sons of America do not want to bestow them in that unholy cause. [Applause on the Democratic side.] There is breathed into the breasts of admirals a desire for undying fame. There are some brigadier generals who want to be Hannibals, Cæsars, and Napoleons; but in the modest precincts of the peaceful homes of this country the one prayer that is breathed, the one hope that is expressed for the destiny and welfare of this country, is that she shall remain at peace with all the world [applause on the Democratic side], to work out her peaceful destiny without great armies, without great generals, and without great wars. I hold no brief for the defense of the President of the United States; but I should think, Mr. Chairman, that in the three or four months in which the world has stood aghast at the conflicts of men in foreign lands more mothers' prayers have ascended to the throne of God for Woodrow Wilson than any other one man in this Republic. [Applause on the Democratic side.] But this is no time to talk of war. This is no time to talk of a great standing army. Great God, with fifteen or twenty millions of men in Europe grasping their swords ready to strike at their brothers and neighbors, does my friend from Massachusetts not find enough of that sort of thing? We read of the wars of the world, of the mighty Persian hosts; we read of the mighty hosts of Xerxes; we read of Napoleon's brilliant campaign with complacency; but when we look just across the ocean to-day and behold that which is occurring there, it seems to me that the martial spirit of even my friend from Massachusetts would find enough to satisfy itself. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Not a month ago an Austrian told me that he was going to try to get back home, because, he said, he had a letter from his mother that three of her five boys had lost their lives in the war.

Mr. Chairman, great armies are never justifiable except in defense of liberty or to strike from the hands of men the shackles of oppression and of tyranny. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I would fear to trust the destiny of this Republic in the hands of admirals and generals. Their game is war. The glory that they shall get, if they get glory, is from war. I am willing to have a small army as a sort of police force. I am willing to have as good a navy as we need to protect our commerce and our country. But, Mr. Chairman, I dread the day that the military power shall take precedence over the civil power in this Republic. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Can you point to a nation of militarism that maintained the liberty of the people? Liberty can not live and breathe in an atmosphere of war and military power. O God of this world, give us this one spot upon which to maintain a free Government. [Applause.] Separated from all the warring nations of the earth by broad oceans, separated from our neighbors by almost impassable barriers, it would seem that God had planted this great people here to work out a shining example of liberty. I hope we may never again hear the tramp of soldiery upon these independent shores.

My friend referred to the war between the States. Is he looking for another war of secession? Mr. Chairman, I hope it will never come. He wants a large standing army. Does he look for a war between capital and labor? I hope it may never come, and I wish my friend might go home this night and put his head upon his pillow, read Washington's Farewell Address, and go to sleep and not disturb his brain with the thought that we need a great standing army or that we are about to be engaged in war. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The God of Nations has given us a President who loves peace and who has the courage to maintain the peace. [Applause on the Democratic side.] He has richly endowed us in this emergency not with a Mad Mullah of modern politics, not with a Rough Rider or discoverer of unknown rivers, but, thank God, He has given us a Christian gentleman, who is not to be shaken or disturbed in the execution of a great duty he owes to the American people. [Applause on the Democratic side.] And it is fitting in this great conflict in which millions are engaged that we should have no part.

We look upon their conflict with eyes full of tears and hearts full of sadness, and every mother and every son and every patriot should now and always firmly resolve that we will maintain this Republic as a republic, that it shall be an asylum for those who would escape armies and wars and conflicts and enforced military service; and instead of my friend crying, "Let slip the dogs of war" his prayer should be one of thanks that we have in the White House a President who will preserve this country from the contagion of war. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, that concludes what I wanted to say. It is a subject that I have always felt deeply about. I love this Republic; I love liberty; I hate armies; I hate despotism. I would not bunch the tears of a nation to make a diadem for a king. I am always thinking of Napoleon and the hundreds of thousands of French peasants and French soldiers that lay dying on the snow-capped hills of Russia during his retreat. I care nothing for Charlemagne and all his glory to be divided among his crazy sons. But, Mr. Chairman, I have dreamed that this Republic, standing out single and alone in the world, where men could have government based on the consent of the governed, should yet belie the history of the world and leave a proof that men are capable of this sort of government. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I yield back the balance of my time, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman used 18 minutes and yields back 12 minutes.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I want to be called down at the end of 30 minutes.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Chairman, I may be mistaken, but I thought there was an agreement that the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] was to follow the next speaker.

Mr. SISSON. That was not my understanding from the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. PAGE].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to be captious in the matter, but there was a very clear and definite understanding that at the close of the speech of the gentleman from Massachusetts the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] was to speak for 30 minutes, and I was to follow him. I am not at all insistent upon it, and shall not be. There was to be only one speech.

Mr. SISSON. My understanding was that the gentleman from Massachusetts was to consume an hour, which he consumed, and then I gave the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] permission at that time to speak for 30 minutes, and then I was to have the other 30 minutes, making the hour's division.

Mr. DAVIS. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] spoke night before last for 30 minutes.

Mr. MANN. It is true we had an agreement with the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. PAGE].

Mr. SISSON. Well, I do not wish to violate any agreement at all. The gentleman from North Carolina is not here, and I do not make any sort of contention as to my right in his absence, if the gentleman shall insist upon it, but it was my understanding that I follow Mr. DIES. I want to assure the gentleman I was not endeavoring to take advantage of the absence of the chairman of the committee.

Mr. MANN. I will say that I had an understanding with Mr. PAGE last night, and this morning he confirmed it.

Mr. SISSON. I suppose that he expected Mr. DIES to consume his 30 minutes and that is the reason he is not here, but it was understood when Mr. DIES took the floor that I was to have the remaining 30 minutes of the hour, or I should not have given him that opportunity.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, as I am the only person particularly interested in this matter, I want to say that I expect, of course, the gentleman from Mississippi will go on. It was understood he was to follow the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr GARDNER].

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. But it was not the understanding that there should be any intervening speeches.

Mr. SISSON. Of course I knew nothing of the understanding. I want to say to my friend from Wyoming that I do not think I shall consume all of the 30 minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. I hope the gentleman from Mississippi will consume all the time he desires. I do not make the suggestion because I do not want him to speak.

Mr. SISSON. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. PAGE] is not here now, and if he does not return when I shall have concluded I shall recognize the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present. We are not doing anything here. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. We are trying to make an arrangement among gentlemen. Of course you would not understand what that meant.

Mr. DONOVAN. Proceed to business, then.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Mississippi yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. SISSON. I do.

Mr. MANN. After the conclusion of the speech by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] this morning, I saw the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. PAGE], while the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] was talking, and the gentleman from North Carolina told me that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] would have 30 minutes and the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] 30 minutes.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut makes the point of no quorum. The Chair will count.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Connecticut, who will not be in the next House, wants an extra session.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count.

Mr. DONOVAN. I withdraw my point of no quorum, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut withdraws his point of no quorum. One hundred and one Members are present—a quorum. [Laughter and applause.] The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] is recognized.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I want to say that the European war presents to my mind a situation entirely different from what is presented to the minds of some other people.

In the first place, we were taught by a certain school of military philosophers that preparedness meant peace and not war. I do not suppose that anybody contends that that philosophy will longer be maintained, because the struggle going on to-day in Europe is one of preparedness that holds the world aghast. No man knows what its ultimate outcome can be, even though it is generally believed that the allies will finally win, and if they do what will be the condition of Europe then? If they do not win, then what? The wisest can not tell. As a gentleman, one of my colleagues from Mississippi, said to me the other day, when the war in Europe is over one half of the able-bodied men will be in the grave and the other half will be on crutches.

This simply carries out the position which I took some months ago, in which I stated in a speech to this House that, irrespective of which side would win in a war, both sides would be losers thereby. I do not believe that philosophy that the education and the training of all the world is lost, but I believe that this war will call the world to its senses, and that there will be evolved as a consequence of this great struggle some method of policing the seas by a common force to protect commerce, and an understanding that in proportion to the population each nation shall maintain only a certain number of standing troops to police the nation. The illustration at our very door between the United States and Canada is an evidence of what may be done. Because under a treaty over 100 years old two little boats are maintained by the United States and two small boats maintained by Canada of a type 100 years old have been rebuilt several times there is not a fort on the Canadian border, but we peacefully transact our business one with the other. If this succeeds between Canada and the United States, with over a 3,000-mile coast line, why not apply the principle to all nations?

I find no reason now why we should hasten to increase the Army or increase the Navy. On the contrary, if we have an enemy on earth, I do not know it. But if we had an enemy sufficient to justify a great increase of the Army or of the Navy, then this is certainly not the time to make the increase, because if the war critics are right about it this war will continue at least a year. Many generals say it will continue for three years, and we may learn some great lessons from that war. There may be an outcome that will mean what the world has looked for so long and what an all-wise Providence may teach the world—the folly of great armaments—and when the time is reached we shall have saved the many millions that would otherwise be expended, for use in peaceful pursuits.

Now, I will call the attention of gentlemen who heard the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] this morning to some expenditures, and to ask you whether or not we have been doing our duty, even if we believed in great armaments. There were 41 nations that belonged to The Hague conference. I have here a statement of the expenditures of 31 of those nations. I shall not name all of them, but I want to call your attention to the amount of money expended by some of the great nations and then show you what the United States did.

Russia expended last year for her army and her navy $304,000,000, in round numbers. Germany spent $303,000,000 in round numbers. France spent $289,000,000, in round numbers. Austria-Hungary spent $100,000,000, in round numbers. Japan spent $65,000,000, in round numbers.

Skipping the smaller nations, Great Britain spent $335,000,000 on her army and navy.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Mississippi yield to the gentleman from California?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. KAHN. The gentleman recognizes the fact that the United States pays the enlisted man in the Army $15 a month, and the foreign nations that he has spoken of pay only a nominal wage to the soldier?

Mr. SISSON. Yes; I recognize that fully, and in recognizing that fact I want to call attention to the fact that if you were to try to keep pace in numbers with the standing army of Russia, in numbers with the standing army of Germany, in numbers with the standing army of France, it would bankrupt this Republic to do it. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. Certainly.

Mr. COOPER. I have heard that intimation a hundred times on this floor. Is the gentleman aware of anybody in the United States, from the foundation of the Government to this day, who has ever proposed to keep a standing army of 700,000 or 800,000 men? I never have.

Mr. SISSON. I never heard of anybody doing it either, but I am endeavoring to state to gentlemen who contend that the Government is not doing its duty by the expenditure of money for the Army and Navy that they are doing the Government in the past an injustice. They are not confining themselves to the facts, because when you take into consideration the fact that on one side we are separated by 3,000 leagues of the bounding sea, and on the other side by the 8,000 miles of ocean, from other great nations, it is not necessary that we should maintain a standing army in numbers comparable with those nations interlocked by boundaries one with the other. On the other hand, it would be stupid folly to keep pace with other nations in the size of the army.

No man contends that it is possible for a European nation to land troops here, except they do so in transports, and you hear men say that we have no Navy to prevent this. No longer ago than yesterday, sitting in the naval hearings, I heard Admiral Fletcher say that with the single exception of England the United States had by all odds the strongest and best Navy on earth. Yet you hear men say that we have no Navy. Everybody must admit the purpose of the naval defense is to prevent the landing of transports, because without a navy transports could be put in behind a naval force and our forts bombarded, and after you reduced one fort you could land shiploads of soldiery from across the sea. If we had no navy, that would be true, but if Admiral Fletcher yesterday testified to the truth, it would be utter folly for a nation to start toward our shores with large transports filled with soldiery, arms, and ammunition, even though they had an escort of battleships, for the reason that if upon the sea they should lose a naval battle they would not only lose their naval force but would lose the transports filled with the troops and arms and ammunition, which would be sent to their destruction. Therefore any man who says that we should have a standing army like anything in Europe is afflicted with hysteria.

I take it that the purpose of the agitation at this time is largely on account of the fears the timid may have, and it is got up by these people who are making enormous sums of money out of the manufacture of absorbent cotton, who are making money out of the manufacture of stretchers, out of the manufacture of powder and steel plates, and the munitions of war, kettledrums, and cannon—they are the men who profit by it and who are agitators of a great war preparation.

I want to call attention to another thing. Militarism has a hold in this country to an extent that some of us little dream of. Mr. GARDNER spoke of $500,000 being expended in the cause of peace. Do we realize that the $280,000,000 which we are expending for the Army and the Navy is enabling the war people to convert that into a great propaganda for war and for additional battleships? Has it been lost sight of that the people who make steel plates, manufacture powder and small arms, drums and fifes, gold braid, boots and shoes, and all other things that are sold to the United States to supply the Army—has it occurred to you that these are the men that are maintaining a great propaganda for this preparedness for war, and while you have expended in the cause of peace a half a million dollars you have expended many times more than that in the propaganda for war?

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. Certainly.

Mr. KAHN. Of course I agree with the gentleman fully that this country does not want a large standing army. Does the gentleman mean to say that we ought not to be fully prepared for any and every possible emergency?

Mr. SISSON. I do not know what the gentleman means by "any possible emergency." I think we ought to be reasonably prepared to defend ourselves against those enemies, if such there be, that might come against us.

Mr. KAHN. Let me call the gentleman's attention to a little matter of history on the floor of the House. About two years ago there was a little controversy between a country on the other side of the Pacific and our own country about school matters, and the gentleman from Mississippi himself arose on the floor of the House and insisted that if Japan undertook to foist her propositions upon the people of California he was ready, for one, to go to war.

Mr. SISSON. My friend from California is mistaken about the occasion. I was not in the Congress at that time.

Mr. KAHN. It was in reference to the California land laws.

Mr. SISSON. It was in reference to the alien ownership of land and the passage by the California Legislature of such laws as they have in Illinois, Massachusetts, and to a certain extent in my own State, and in Oklahoma, and other States of the Union. I took the position then, as I take now, that the sovereign States under our scheme of government have the right to pass any land law they see fit and proper not in contravention with the clause of the Federal Constitution.

Mr. KAHN. I agree to that.

Mr. SISSON. We have that right, as has been decided by the Supreme Court in more than a hundred cases, that the Federal Government—that is, both Houses and the President—could not invade the sovereign right of the State. I was unwilling to concede that any alien power of any nation on earth should say through the treaty-making power that we could not pass a land law which, in my judgment, was wise for the people, and before I would surrender that right of a State to any nation on earth I would fight. That is what I said, and everybody will agree with me about that.

Mr. KAHN. Does not the gentleman feel that if he wants to fight he must be prepared to fight?

Mr. SISSON. I say Admiral Fletcher testified yesterday morning that, with the single exception of England, we had by far the strongest navy on earth. I think we are prepared for war; and if we are not prepared, then there ought to be some wholesale investigation of the honesty, integrity, and ability of those men who have been spending these $140,000,000 a year on the Navy and over $100,000,000 annually on an army.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. SIMS. If some great power—Germany, England, or any other county—that has battleships should offer to sell them to us at this time at a low valuation, just as Germany did to Turkey, does the gentleman think a single one of these gentlemen who are so alarmed about our unprepared condition would vote to buy those ships? Would they not want to have ships built in this country, even at greater cost to the Government?

Mr. SISSON. I think that is true. I think there is a propaganda of that kind. There is a propaganda of thrift and of profit, and when a man's occupation has gone his profit ceases.

Mr. KAHN. Is it not a fact that within recent years the Congress itself has directed that battleships be built in the United States navy yards, and is not the Government itself building them?

Mr. SIMS. Out of American material, at excessive cost.

Mr. KAHN. Does the gentleman prefer to import material?

Mr. SIMS. If it is better or just as good and cheaper; yes.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I must decline to yield further. In answer to that question of the building of battleships, even in the Government yards, it is largely a question of assembling parts, structural steel and steel plates, which are manufactured, together with the bolts and everything else, by the Steel Trust and private companies. It is a mere assembling of the parts, that like the assembling of an automobile, where a factory gets the parts made for it. The profit on the steel plate goes on and the profit on the structural steel goes on, and all of those profits continue, and the profits are enormous, and I take it that if you were to take away from these people all of the profits, and take away the opportunity to make these vast fortunes and make them taxpayers and pay their part of it, and let the United States Government own its own mines, its own foundries, make all of its own steel, and not go into the market to buy it, and to maintain the price of Steel common—I take it there would be very much less propaganda when they became taxpayers and not tax consumers, when they became part of the Government that only paid and got no profits back. I take it that that would change their attitude somewhat. I do not say that those men are any worse than I.

If I were engaged in the manufacture of steel, I do not undertake to say that I would be absolutely blind to the profits I might make out of the business. I am assuming that human nature is practically the same all over the world. I take it that because a man puts his money in the operation of a great steel plant he has not lost any of the acquisitive desires he had prior to the time that he made the investment, and if the Government is doing business of this kind I take it that he would like to have the contract. If I were doing it, I would not hesitate a minute about trying to get the contract if I could. If the United States is to make proper progress in liberty, my belief is that it must be made along lines promulgating peace and not war. When I enter a conflict or a quarrel with one of my neighbors, and my neighbor knows that I am armed with a deadly weapon, the laws of the land say that I have done wrong in carrying my weapon concealed, because my adversary is sure to arm himself, and when we are both armed cap-a-pie, I am watching him, and the first false move that he makes to pull his handkerchief from his pocket—called the hip-pocket defense—there is man slain, and so it is in nations. When nations begin to mobilize their armies, well equipped with arms, the other nation strikes first, like the man armed with a revolver shoots first to prevent his adversary getting in the first shot, and men en masse act like individuals do, and I believe that armed preparedness means war and not peace. [Applause.]

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. Certainly.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. The gentleman stated that he felt human nature was pretty much alike everywhere, and I suppose he will concede also that human nature has been pretty much alike throughout all time.

Mr. SISSON. I think this, that human nature is gradually improving. I think the basic principles upon which the human being conducts his life are being gradually broadened. I believe we are making progress and advancement. I do not believe that we are still hauling our goods in sleds by oxen. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. That does not change human nature's desires or ambitions; it is merely the vehicle by which those desires are accomplished. Let me put this question: The gentleman intimated, at least, that he thought some part of a so-called propaganda for war is inspired by the spirit of commercialism on the part of the people who furnish munitions of war?

Mr. SISSON. Yes; that is, the preparedness on both sides of the ocean.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Then how does the gentleman account for the fact that before weapons of war and munitions of war became commercialized, when there were no such great factories as there are to-day, there were more wars than there have been since this commercial age?

Mr. SISSON. Why, that is easy to answer. In the first place, in early history, according to Novicow, a great Russian expert on war, men went to war to satisfy their appetites, and many wars in the ancient world were fought for the women of the other nations. Then many wars have been fought for selfish purposes and for the purpose of making slaves of men. Wars have been fought in the past for the purpose of getting more territory. In every instance in the world's history in the past wars have always been unjustifiable on the part of the aggressor, but they were made by human beings who were steeped in ignorance, uneducated, to whom the doctrine of brotherly love had not been proclaimed, and amongst whom the doctrine of the rights of man was unknown, that men are born with certain inalienable rights, and that among those are the right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.

Not only that, but men in those days and in those hours of trouble and trial, living close to each other, were prone to live off what other people had made; but in this age, when education and training all have taught us that we ought to make it to the interest of people not to go to war instead of making it to the interest of people to go to war, and recognizing that human nature, while better trained, willing to accord to each other rights which they were not willing to accord in the past, we should restrain that acquisitive desire and take away the inducement to take from each other by war that which they have. In that way, and in that alone, will you be able to bring about a state of peace in the world—to take away from the nations of the world by a peaceful system the means of accomplishing their acquisitive desire except along the civil paths of law and righteousness made by international laws and settled by international conferences, and when the nations have policed the seas with a common navy, and when nations shall limit the number of the soldiers they shall have in proportion to the population, solely for the purpose of upholding the police power of the State itself and not for the purpose of use against other nations, when that time shall come, as it will come, when you take away the commercial side of it, and when in time of peace men are not making preparations to be ready for war when the other nations are making the same sort of preparation, it must be done by some agreement among all of the nations, just as we settled the differences between the 13 independent nations in the very beginning of this Republic. We settled it by an organization, first, of confederation, then by a Constitution; and they have a common power. The Supreme Court of the United States is arbiter of the differences between those sovereignties, and by voluntarily surrendering a certain portion of our sovereignty to this common power we have had peace, though there are 48 parts now, with the single exception of the Civil War, and that trouble perhaps was in the impossibility of agreement at the time the contract was made; that has been settled and I hope is settled for all times. Now, we have 48 sovereigns who have delegated a portion of their powers to the General Government. This magnificent system of confederated power to a degree should extend to all nations. We can begin a confederation of the nations with each other by saying each will limit the amount of armament and standing army. This can be done only by an international agreement.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. That agreement, of course, must proceed out of the inclination of the people, taken collectively.

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. According to the standard recognized by the individuals who make up all the people.

Mr. SISSON. That is true.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. International or municipal laws are supposed to represent the standard to which the people have arrived and not the standard to which they aspire.

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Then the gentleman admits we have not yet reached that point.

Mr. SISSON. I did not admit that yet; but I say——

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I thought the gentleman said a moment ago it was a point which we "in time" would reach.

Mr. SISSON. There will be some sort of confederation, and besides that confederation there must be a disarmament to the extent——

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. But you can not get a confederation in the interest of disarmament if one nation persists in arming?

Mr. SISSON. That is true if it is one great nation; but I agree with the speaker that if any three great nations agree I doubt seriously whether the rest would go to war. Certainly five great nations could control the situation. This war in Europe is bringing about a new conviction in the minds of everybody, except the admirals, generals, and those people selling munitions of war, that wars should end. War has been made so terrible, so destructive of human life and property, so destructive of morals, leaving in every fireside vacant chairs and upon every door knob crêpe, leaving oceans of tears along in the wake of it, leaving a destruction of country even worse, from the description, if possible, than at certain times of our own country during our Civil War.

Those of you who have been reared where victorious armies alone have trod, those of you who have been reared where you have not seen the sight of smoking dwellings, those of you who have been reared where you have never seen a soldier come and ruthlessly invade a private home, those of you who have lived where you have never seen a little home invaded and food taken away in the nighttime or taken away in the daytime do not know what war is. My childish eyes have looked upon a country desolate with war, and those were Christian soldiers under the Stars and Stripes who made that desolation; and if people living under the same flag can thus desolate a country, in the name of God what must go on where race hatred and race prejudice are as they are to-day in Europe. Is it possible that civilization, that education and Christianity, that a man's civilization is only skin deep? Are we still savages and brutes? I do not believe this. On the contrary, my earnest conviction is that if we could take away all the profits, if we could take away the military glory that these men are seeking, and if Germany could control her army instead of her army controlling Germany, then I believe the German people would be better off. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

If Russia, instead of the Duma and a few privileged classes with the army, could control Russia, Russia would be better off. Is England to-day in any worse condition because she had a standing army of only 200,000 men? And yet she is mobilizing now at the rate of 500,000 soldiers every three months. Do you tell me that the enormous tax which the Russian people bore and the enormous tax the German people bore and the enormous tax the French people bore for 40 years in preparing for this conflict is to be commended? Is it not better, even though you may lose a few battle fields, to prepare for war when war comes? But, however wrong you may contend I am in that position, I say this without hesitation, that Europe would have been in infinitely better condition to-day, Europe would have been in a better condition to conduct herself for the future and to build up her future greatness had it not been for these powerful engines of destruction which the war has saddled upon the people of Europe.

To-day the war debt of the five great nations of Europe is $27,000,000,000. France, owing $7,500,000,000, for the last three years was unable to pay the interest on her consols, and had to borrow money from her own people and issue new consols to pay the interest on her old ones. Therefore she has reached the point where to pay her current expenses she was bankrupt. Will you tell me what the financial world will do and how the European countries will be able to maintain themselves with this enormous indebtedness rolled upon the $27,000,000,000? And that $27,000,000,000 does not include the debt of the Balkan

States, nor the little Swiss debt, nor the debt of the Scandinavian States, but only the debts of the great nations of Europe. In the name of God, would not the condition of war, except for the loss of life, be almost as good as the conditions of peace, if the bondholders and those who are financing this trouble shall have a mortgage upon posterity and use the armies of the people in time of peace to collect from a downtrodden, debt-ridden people the interest on these consols and these bonds? [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I yield to the gentleman two minutes more.

Mr. SISSON. Is it possible that we propose to put ourselves in that condition where our indebtedness will be such that when we shall have paid our current expenses we will not have enough money to pay our interest on the bonds? Why, my fellow Members, I can not subscribe to that doctrine. Slavery in one form is to my mind as objectionable as slavery in another, and I am unwilling to become a slave myself to those people who shall finance the people in their expenditures for debts caused in preparing for war in time of peace.

Mr. Chairman, I want to extend my remarks by putting in the RECORD an editorial by Mr. Watterson, the editor of the Courier-Journal, of the date of December 8, as follows:

SHALL OUR AMERICAN REPUBLIC BE PRUSSIANIZED?

"Dear God and Father of us all,
Forgive our faith in cruel lies,
Forgive the blindness that denies!

"Cast down our idols! Overturn
Our bloody altars! Make us see Thyself in Thy humanity!"

—John Greenleaf Whittier.

I.

"An inquiry into the state of the Nation's defenses"—the high-sounding sobriquet of the movement started by the plate-armor combine to rob the people and fathered by a Massachusetts Congressman—were more fitly and accurately entitled "A plan to put Woodrow Wilson in a hole," and for other purposes, the "other purposes" being a taking issue and campaign funds for the Republicans, along with galore of personal exploitation for the spread-eagle orator whose favorite stunt is "to wrap the flag around him, march down to the footlights, fire two hoss pistols and die like a son of a gun"!

The scheme presents three distinct aspects for the consideration of reflecting men; first, its fraudulent, partisan character; second, its empty patriotic appeal; and third, its untimely promulgation of a wicked principle.

"I am very much afraid," says Mr. GARDNER, eager to get in his work and unable to restrain his partisan intention, "that the President means to lay the cold hand of death upon the whole movement."

But how could the President do that? The "movement" is for the Congress, not for the Executive. Even here, however, the GARDNER prejudgment of the President is supplemented by the charge made in advance that the Rules Committee will not allow it. Thus, before the assembling of Congress, we had proof that the proposed "inquiry into the state of the Nation's defenses" was not an emanation of patriotic solicitude, but a play for party advantage.

Coincident appears a yet more sinister figure upon the scene. This is an association calling itself "The National Security League." Its arrival would be suspiciously prompt even if we did not know that every job big enough to pay its way along the turnpikes and through the tollgates of legislation always reinforces its invisible lobby with a marching club of noisy zealots—willing dupes of the drum and fife—who dearly love to carry torchlights and are ever ready to rally around bonfires and pie counters.

The Nation to all such is in perpetual peril. If it were not, what would become of the professional lifesavers? Sixty years ago, according to the Know Nothing rescript, the Pope was going some dark night to swim the Atlantic and, like a duck upon a june bug, swoop down upon the helpless Stars and Stripes. These 10 years, since Japan licked Russia, it has been the Mikado, who, like a submarine, was going to swim the Pacific and swoop down upon Chinatown. Statesmen with osculatory intellects and 22-inch collars, seeking to establish a system of paternalism, based upon woman suffrage and prohibition, have never wearied of depicting the terrors of invasion and rum. Year in and year out they have held up the Nation by the tail as a horrid example of unpreparedness and depravity. To whom the Courier-Journal has said, as it now says to Representative GARDNER and the National Security League, adopting the words which Capt. Simon Suggs on a memorable occasion addressed to Parson Jediah Bullin, "Don't crowd the mourners nor rush the growler!"

II.

Cold-storage statesmanship is the order of the day. Senator HENRY CABOT LODGE comes bravely to the support of his kinsman. When did this expert in the unfeeling arts of piousness, prejudice, and patriotism fail to note the nail on the barn door, seeing the door itself not at all? Premising that the Gardner resolution should be passed by both Houses, the Massachusetts Senator is reported in a recent interview as follows:

"We hear it said that from our Regular Army and militia combined we could not at this moment get together 120,000 men for our defense. It has been publicly stated that we have not sufficient ammunition even for such troops as we have; that our fortifications for our great cities are very insufficient; that we have few, if any, guns of greater range than those on battleships; that such troops as we have, instead of being concentrated at the points where they are needed, are scattered through the country at different posts in positions where there is no need of troops. It is said that we have nothing resembling reserves, either of men or ammunition, and no sufficient arrangements made for providing mines to protect our harbors. I for one would like to know, and I think the American people would like to know, whether or not there is truth in these statements."

This would seem to be an accusation of somebody. It reads very like an indictment. Yet, subjected to a little analysis, it misses the mark intended—that is, the present Democratic administration of the Government—because, if there be any thing wanting to our national defense, it lieth not with the Democrats but with the Republicans. For whatever is or is not they are solely responsible. From the 4th of March, 1897, to the 4th of March, 1913—16 years—the Government was in the hands of the party of which Senator LODGE is a leader. Most, if not all of the time, he has been a member of the Senate Committee on Naval Affairs. How comes it that, with vast moneys expended annually and things going to the bad, as he now describes them, this is his first warning to "the American people"? Why was he silent when at any moment the despots of Europe, having nothing else to do, might sneak into Boston and sack Faneuil Hall or crawl up through Simms Hole and cut the throats of every mother's son of us here in Kentucky? Was it his loyalty to McKinley; his love for Taft; or did he think that Teddy could frighten them away by a look? But now, now that the outer world is fighting like mad, exhausting itself, destroying itself, with nothing across the horizon to disturb the most patriotic Republican except a Democrat in the White House and a Democratic majority in Congress, Senator LODGE, at once alarmed and economical, wants to know, you know! As if the official reports were not both voluminous and accessible, he uses such terms as "we hear it said" and "it has been publicly stated."

And what is it that this veteran official, failing to inform himself, has "heard"? That the Army is short of soldiers? Whose fault is that? The Army is what the Republicans made it. That it lacks ammunition? For what? Is there an enemy anywhere in sight? That the troops we have "instead of being concentrated at the points where they are most needed are scattered through the country at different posts in positions where there is no need of troops." Where is there the need of troops? New England seems reasonably peaceable. Since Beach Hargis was sent to State prison the boys up in Breathitt have simmered down. In spite of HOBSON, "all is quiet along the Potomac." Where would Senator LODGE have President Wilson send the troops, even if they were in possession of adequate arms and sufficient ammunition?

But—horrible to relate—our cities are undefended; the fortifications are tumble-down and mounted with popguns. Again, who is to blame if not the Republicans, and what have they done with the vast sums of money they have pretended to be spending all these years?

Senator LODGE—we are quoting him as reported by the New York Sun, a friend and not an enemy of the proposed inquiry—multiplies the counts in his arraignment of his party. The Republicans have done even worse by the Navy than by the Army. Here, being of the Naval Affairs Committee, the Massachusetts statesman ought to be an authority. What could Mr. McKinley, Mr. Roosevelt, and Mr. Taft have been thinking of when they let things go to such rack and ruin? During the 10 years between 1903 and 1913—6 of them under Roosevelt and 4 of them under Taft—more than $1,200,000,000 were spent on the Navy. Now, these Republican agitators tell us that we have little other than junk to show for it and charge it to the Democrats, whilst the plate-armor people stand around and say "We don't need any foreign contracts. As soon as Congress meets we shall have plenty of American contracts. Mr. LODGE will fix it in the Senate and Mr. GARDNER in the House." But let us resume our interesting citation by a Republican of his fellow Republicans. Senator LODGE continues:

"If we turn to the Navy we can read in the newspapers almost every day statements of a similar character. I know myself that we are short of scout cruisers, having only three. A proper number of fast scout cruisers is essential to the efficiency of the fleet.

"We are insufficiently supplied with aeroplanes and hydroplanes, which are so essential to modern warfare.

"We have a large number of submarines—not enough in proportion to our fleet—but it is stated that many of those of early types are not at all up to recent standards and would be practically useless. It is said that we have only one torpedo to each torpedo tube.

"We ought to have the truth about these things, and then it is for the American people and nobody else to decide what they intend shall be done. It is not a party question in any sense, and the national defense ought never to be a party question."

No, it is not "a party question" if the Republicans are to be held responsible, but it is "a party question" where the Democrats may be held; for, as Senator LODGE concludes, "We are spending some $250,000,000 a year on our Army and Navy and we ought to know what we are getting for our money and whether for that money we are securing the highest possible efficiency," his preceding remarks tending, if not intended, to arraign the Wilson administration.

In the Senator's despite, and in defense of the administration, the Courier-Journal might with deference submit that Mr. Wilson may have his doubts about the expediency of spending great sums of money upon armament for which there will be no immediate use and which by the time it is called for may be obsolete and valueless.

Where is the urgency that excites Representative GARDNER—the exigency that impels Senator LODGE—the danger that arouses the National Security League?

To meet the dilemmas suggested by these questions, the organizers of the new war party cite the accomplished ex-Mayor George Brinton McClellan, of New York, now a professor at Princeton, who does not believe that the European war will bring about universal disarmament and peace. On the contrary, he thinks that when it is over it will be only a question of soon or late when we shall have to stand by our guns. They quote him as follows:

"No matter who wins, it is almost certain that at some not far-distant time we shall be confronted with the alternative of either abandoning the Monroe doctrine or fighting to maintain it. We have made of it a great national principle, a question of national honor, so that if we abandon it we must concede that we are not strong enough to maintain it; that we are only a second-class power, at the mercy of all the swaggering bullies of the earth. If we fight for it in our present unprepared condition, there can be but one outcome. A triumphant and victorious Germany would have little to fear from us, and while we might possibly in the end be able to check Japan by herself, we could scarcely hope to do so if she received help."

The Courier-Journal has said something like this: If the Kaiser could win, it would become a certainty. In that event Germany would rise on its hind legs and say "To hell with your Monroe doctrine." But the Kaiser can not win. When the allies have finished him they will be too much played out to think about any more fighting.

Naturally England, being our next-door neighbor and foremost competitor for markets, would be likeliest to tackle us. But the impediments are almost insuperable. Outside of trade neither wants what the other has. England was, and is, and will continue to be, in favor of disarmament. It was Germany that, requiring foreign exits and entrances, and resolved and prepared to fight her way out, forbade. With Germany prostrate and the others exhausted—the isolation of the United States still our best defensive—it will be our own fault if we have to go to war with any nation. Hence, Prof. McClellan's appeal that Americans "awake to their present condition of unpreparedness, and that immediate steps be taken to build up a national defense," coming from the son of a soldier, if not a soldier, loses much of its force and should not be regarded especially relevant to the discussion.

III.

Backed by a self-constituted and self-styled body of exclusive patriots—the National Security League, obviously organized and financed by the plate-armor people—it is at once an effrontery and an affront, not to say a stupidity, in Representative GARDNER to sneer at the President as "a hopeless pacificist," and to turn upon dear old Andrew Carnegie as the enemy of his country and his kind.

"In my opinion," says the Massachusetts warrior, "the effect of the vast sums of money spent by Mr. Carnegie in his peace propaganda has been to blind Americans to the fact that our national security from a military point of view is undermined"; adding that "every Army and Navy officer to whom I have spoken tells me the same story of inadequate security," as if he could expect any other testimony from witnesses whose trade is war.

All this while Mr. GARDNER tells us nothing we did not know before. His proposed "inquiry" could lead to nothing not already to the hand of every Member of Congress. As well arraign Jesus Christ for preaching peace on earth, good will to men, as Andrew Carnegie for taking the word out of the mouth of the Savior and contributing millions of money to spread its blessed portent throughout the world.

Before the war in Europe the cause of arbitration as an international agency was making progress. But the voluntary disarmament of the nations was obviously a long ways off. It seemed to most people an iridescent dream. With what is going forward it becomes at least a possibility.

There have been wars and wars. As far as history reaches backward blood has been the single recourse of diseased ambition, the only balm for wounded pride. There have been wars and wars, dynastic wars, religious wars, territorial wars, but never a war like this; heroism driven from the earth, mercy vanished from the heavens, individuality lost in brutish multitudes and death-dealing machinery, pity fled, generosity dead; in place of glory the gluttony of greed and hate, the agencies of blind, unsparing destruction. Reflection stands aghast, pity appalled; yet there must be an end—it can not last forever—and when it is over, when murder has done its worst, when exhaustion hangs limp over barren fields and despair stares gaunt and silent into the cannon's mouth, mayhap thought will still hover about the scene and reason whisper to those that survive its horrors; mayhap at dead of night the Christ shall steal through the shadows to fasten His spirit upon the souls of men. Then, but not till then, our time will come.

What shall be our attitude? Shall it speak for civilization? Shall it rise for the Christian religion which we profess, standing uncovered to the sun in robes of living light, or shall we appear, like Mars, cap-a-pie, in full armor, the old dread specter of fury and force? Shall we say to Europe, "Fight no more"—henceforth the world shall be at peace and it shall be written over the portals of every people, "They shall beat their swords into plowshares and their spears into pruning hooks; nation shall not lift up a sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more."

There is hope that something may come of it. Germany beaten—perhaps ground to the dust even as Belgium is—will be, must be, disarmed. Then, why not the rest? The debts will remain to be paid. The men will be needed in the fields. But if to get a party issue in America a group of baffled political leaders are permitted to Prussianize our Army system under the plea of national defense, laying the foundations for a militariat at Washington like that at Berlin, in the interest of corrupting murder mills and ambitious soldiers, it will be but a question of time when what is happening there will happen here. In short and in fine, a question the people should begin to consider is, Shall we fall in with Senator LODGE and Representative GARDNER to worship at the shrine of Krupp, even to the footstool that holds the Kaiser's feet, or follow the genius of the American Republic up the steps of the throne of God?

Even the Prussian militariat, with the Kaiser at its head, must begin to see the futility of its Pan German scheme of world conquest. When all is lost they will fully realize it. Forty years the Germans have been taught by their philosophers to believe that war is the state of man. Forty years their professors and historians have told them it was the hope of Germany During these years the armor makers and the saber rattlers—who derive a profit from war and for whose benefit myriads of good men are fed to powder—were preparing for war.

It will not do for any German now to put up a poor mouth and to attempt denial of this. That there was provocation—especially in England and France—may be true enough. Germany had been commercially put in a pocket. There was sore need of colonial expansion. The mistake lay in the idea that war was a remedy, that it was inevitable, and that, if it was bound to come, Germany was best prepared for it—England supposed to have her hands tied in Ireland and no one suspecting the Belgians of such power of resistance.

It was precisely the mistake that Napoleon made. Two years before his fall Napoleon could have secured world peace and the confirmation of his dynasty, with a larger France than he had found. He refused it and went to his finality. All his calculations failed him, as all the Kaiser's calculations have failed him. The very elements rose against him, as they have risen against the Kaiser. It seems a doom fixed upon God-defying ambition.

Let us agree that no such opportunity was offered the Kaiser as was offered Napoleon. Let us even allow that the Kaiser felt himself obliged to fight and that the defeat of his wondrous preparedness is not a punishment but a destiny. All things apart, to what end, if not to the substantiation of the truth that war is not a remedy for any earthly evil or wrong, that it is organized and legalized murder, and that, quite destroying its victims, it leaves its victors worse off than they were before?

This brings us face to face with what we have called our civilization, and that again brings us face to face with what we have called our religion.

Is Christendom a Christian? Are we, the American people, a Christian people? If in the green leaf we are thus to rush to our guns with Senator LODGE and Representative GARDNER, what may we not have to do in the brown? Is the Republican Party to repeat in the United States, under the guise of patriotism and the national defense, the selfsame error which lured Germany and the unknowing, unasked, unconsenting German people into their present awful plight?

Is the Republican Party, beaten on the old issues, to reconstruct and revitalize itself by a popular appeal having the alleged glory and prowess of the Nation for its text, war as its ultimatum—making a combine between the saber rattlers, the plate-armor makers, and the voters, as the German militariat, representing a feudal caste, the Kaiser at its head, made alliance with the German middle classes, embracing the money kings of Berlin and Hamburg and the infidel doctrinaires of Bonn and Heidelberg? In short, are we, the American people, to be led unconsciously into adopting the gospel of war and the setting up of an all-powerful military aristocracy, as the unhappy, the unfortunate Germans were?

Have we a Treitschke among us? Is his pseudonym HENRY CABOT LODGE? Have we a Bernhardi? Is his nickname AUGUSTUS PEABODY GARDNER? Nietzsche is dead; but his spirit liveth and roameth abroad, at the moment taking a look-in upon Congress.

Now, gentlemen, I want to say that, so far as I am concerned, I agree absolutely with the position taken by the President of the United States in his address to this House. I am unwilling that the Army should control America. I want America to control the Army. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I am unwilling that we should prostitute our liberty and that the enormous amount of money taken and wrung from those people who work in factories, fields, and in mines shall be transferred to the people of the Army and Navy, who live in luxury in time of peace, without a chance of going to war but once in a lifetime. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, in behalf of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS], I yield 45 minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, it had been my intention and is still my intention to introduce a complete novelty into this debate by discussing the bill now before the House for consideration. But even with so laudable a purpose as that in one's mind it is difficult in these moments of alleged "nervousness and excitement" with regard to preparedness for war to entirely overlook that tremendously important and at this time much-discussed subject. The gentleman from Mississippi, in his eloquent peroration, said he agreed entirely with the President of the United States in regard to this matter. I should have been much more enlightened as to just what he agrees to had I been able to understand just what the President's position on the subject was from what he said in his message. The President very adroitly, and in that splendid English of which he is the greatest master living, built a man of straw and then proceeded, with our entire approval, to demolish it. The President said that the American people would never agree to conscription and to making our country an armed camp. To all of that we say amen, and if there be a man under the flag who has ever suggested or proposed such an enormity let his name be anathema.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] gave us a lovely essay on the beauties and the blessings of peace. With most of what he said, as a matter of philosophy, we all of us entirely agree. The President suggested that there was something of excitement in regard to this matter. I had not thought so until I listened to the speeches to which I have referred. Now I am inclined to think that if there is not something of nervousness and excitement, there is a very evident disposition or temptation in connection with the discussion of this very important matter to exaggerate, if not to misrepresent. There is a real problem before the American people to-day, having to do with the question of preparedness for war, but it is not any more urgent to-day than it always has been and always will be, so long as men are as they are and so long as human nature is as it is. I for one do not agree with the plan proposed by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] for a determination of the question as to what extent we shall prepare for hostile eventualities. I think Congress and its committees quite competent to do that. But I do think the gentleman from Massachusetts has done the country a real service in challenging the attention of the Nation to the question as to what extent, if any, we should under the present circumstances modify our policy of the past with regard to our military and naval establishments.

We are not prepared for all possible eventualities, and the President very properly stated that we never would be. We never are, as individuals, fully prepared to meet every accident, fully prepared to defend ourselves against all comers, and it would be the height of folly for us to attempt to be so prepared. A considerable experience in my youthful days in regions where men were inclined to carry the munitions of war and quick to pull taught me that those who were best prepared were most frequently those who got into serious difficulty, and it was generally the peaceably disposed, who took some chances, who came out the best in the long run. But the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] surely does not want us to understand, and the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] certainly does not desire that we should understand, that they, or either of them, or that any of their colleagues believe that we can blink or deny the facts of history, or that we can close our eyes to the necessity of being prepared in a reasonable way to defend ourselves.

The question is, and the question has been, and the question always will be, To what length shall we, may we, should we go in preparation and in what direction shall we most press our efforts to place the Nation in such a condition that it shall be able with the least loss to meet any possible armed foe? All of those who have studied the question have realized that in the matter of reserves of war material we are probably not sufficiently prepared, looking at the matter from a reasonable standpoint. Last year there were discussions of the propriety of further increasing our reserve of certain classes of ammunition, the propriety of increasing our reserve of field artillery. There has been more or less discussion of these and like matters every year as the bills were taken up for consideration in the House and before the committees. The question has always been, How much expenditure for these purposes will our constituents approve, knowing the facts, and what expenditures are we justified in making, taking a reasonable view of the matter, based on the policy of being reasonably prepared for what may occur?

The probability is that we did not appropriate quite as much as we should have appropriated last year for fixed ammunition. I suggested that in a mild way—in my usual mild way—at the time. The probability is that we should have appropriated more last year for the reserve of field artillery. That has been something of a fad of mine for some years, and yet I do not think the Congress or the administration or anybody is open to any considerable amount of criticism because we did not appropriate more, for we appropriated more than we did the year before, and I think more than the year before that.

Now, if the agitation that has been started largely by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] shall place the people in a frame of mind where they shall be willing to approve reasonably increased appropriations along certain lines, I think the gentleman from Massachusetts will have accomplished a very excellent purpose. But I do not think the American people are either "nervous" or "excited" about it. Probably if we could know their minds we would learn that they believe we should considerably increase the number of air craft, auxiliary to our fighting forces. Possibly we might find the people agreeable to increasing the Navy a little more rapidly than in the past, particularly in the matter of submarines. Possibly we shall find a disposition on the part of the people to somewhat increase the size of the standing Army, for reasons to which I shall call attention in a moment.

So far, however, as to there being any reason or necessity at this time or any real demand at this time for any considerable increase of our naval or military establishments, there is nothing in the condition of the world to warrant a belief that such necessity exists, and certainly the American people as a whole do not at this time believe such a necessity exists.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. MCKELLAR). Does the gentleman from Wyoming yield to the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. MONDELL. I do.

Mr. FESS. As to the statement of the gentleman from Massachusetts about our limited ammunition, have you any facts as to our ability to supply ammunition in case a war were on, although we do not have it in possession now?

Mr. MONDELL. My understanding is—and I am not an expert, as the gentleman knows, in regard to these matters—my understanding is that most of our ammunition can be manufactured very rapidly, and that with the exception of certain classes of ammunition, such as torpedoes, certain large fixed ammunition, large quantities can be manufactured in a comparatively short time. While we should have a reasonably good reserve, it is not necessary to have such an enormous reserve, constantly deteriorating, as some people imagine. It sounds startling to say that we have only ammunition for three-quarters of an hour for our guns were they all belching at their most rapid performance. But really that is an enormous supply of ammunition, comparatively speaking, for no one can conceive a condition under which all the guns or a major portion of them, active and reserve, could be brought into action at one time and fired continuously for three-quarters of an hour. This is true with regard to most forms of ammunition. Experts all agree, and laymen who have given the matter any study at all, as well, that a larger reserve per gun is now necessary than formerly, owing to the rapidity of fire of modern guns and the rapidity with which ammunition may be dissipated; and possibly, that fact being taken into consideration, we should increase our estimates and our reserves of ammunition above the amount which has heretofore been considered necessary.

Mr. FESS. May I ask the gentleman whether that is in his mind a serious situation—our not having very much ammunition in possession?

Mr. MONDELL. I do not think, I will say to my friend, that there is any fact connected with our military situation that need disturb us now more than at other times. In fact, I am of the opinion we are now rather better prepared than we have been in the past. That is not saying, of course, that we are as fully prepared in all respects as we should be. I think we are not.

As I see it, we stand in no greater danger now than in the past. On the contrary, the probability, the chances, of our being engaged in war are lessened rather than increased by the war in Europe, and we can and may and should discuss all of these questions without regard to what has occurred or what is occurring in Europe, unless it be to this extent: That the war in Europe up to this period has seemed to tend to prove certain things. One of them is that in future wars there will be a larger proportionate use of field artillery; that men need to know how to shovel as well as how to shoot; and that our reserves in certain lines should be increased.

Mr. FESS. Does the gentleman think it does not require greater diplomacy now to remain out of the war than before the war had begun in Europe?

Mr. MONDELL. I agree with the President of the United States, but I disagree with the campaign utterances of his party on the subject. I agree with him that there is no reason on earth why we should be involved in the European struggle, and my opinion is that except through some act of stupidity unthinkable, or some act of aggression unbelievable, it is not possible that we shall be brought into this great European struggle.

I confess to a profound hatred for war. I regret the necessity for military establishments, and in that I think I feel as the great body of the American people do. But I realize, as we all do, as matters now stand in the world, the necessity of maintaining a reasonable military and naval establishment. We shall differ in the future, as in the past, as to what constitutes a reasonable naval and military establishment. If this war has taught us some lessons in regard to reserves, in regard to the character of the arms that shall be needed, we should heed those lessons. If it has taught us something with regard to the conduct of war, we should heed those lessons in the conduct of our military establishments. There is, however, no necessity of our getting at all excited over the matter at this time because of what is occurring in Europe.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. FESS. Does the gentleman fear that an increase of 25,000 men endangers the peaceful conditions, and that it would produce a militarism?

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman has anticipated what I was about to say and to which I referred a moment ago. I am one of the few people who did not believe it wise to fortify the Panama Canal. I have in no way changed my mind in regard to that matter, even though since then our faith in treaties of neutrality has received something of a rude shock. But we have entered upon a policy of fortification. Our guns and mortar batteries frown from either end of the canal. We must have a force of at least 15,000 men there or we should have no force at all. It would be the height of folly to attempt to maintain an establishment there unless we maintain a reasonably adequate one, and 15,000 men, according to all of the estimates of the military authorities, is the very minimum of force with which we could make a stand if we were attacked at Panama.

I called attention at the time I discussed the matter, when I was opposing the fortification of the Panama Canal, that it meant inevitably an increase of our military force by 15,000 men, unless we were of the opinion that the force we already had was 15,000 too large. We are increasing our garrison in Hawaii, and we are maintaining a certain force in the Philippine Islands. We can not reduce those garrisons under any condition of war or peace. When we put 15,000 men in Panama, we have drained from the force we have heretofore maintained at home that number, and we must increase our force from 15,000 to 20,000 in order to carry out the policy of placing a considerable garrison in Hawaii and maintaining garrisons in Panama which we entered upon some time ago. Such an increase would not be an increase at all, so far as our forces at home are concerned.

Mr. SLOAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Certainly.

Mr. SLOAN. Did the gentleman oppose the fortification of the canal because of the belief that some of us entertained, that we owned the canal and had the supreme and absolute control over it, or was it upon the later theory and recent legislation, which, in effect, surrendered very largely our ownership and control of that great piece of engineering?

Mr. MONDELL. I think I made it very clear that my opposition to the fortification of the canal was based on my opinion as to its unwisdom and not upon the theory that we did not have a right to fortify it. I did not subscribe to the doctrine which was crystallized into legislation which, as the gentleman from Nebraska very properly observed, surrendered not only our right to say what tolls should be paid but at the same time and through the same interpretation put in question our right to fortify the canal.

I said during that debate that, while I did not believe in fortifications there as a matter of policy, I would cut off my right arm before I would surrender my right to fortify. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. TOWNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. TOWNER. Is not the corollary of the proposition which the gentleman has so well stated true—that if the European nations, and Great Britain especially, surrendered, as she did, to us the right to fortify the canal, acknowledged that we had the right to fortify it, is not that also a surrender of her position in regard to the tolls proposition?

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman states it very clearly. Any interpretation of the treaty that denies our right to fix tolls puts in question our right to fortify. The two are effected by the same provisions of the treaty; and if we have not a right to fix or remit tolls, by the same token, as they say in the country, we have not the right to fortify it.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Certainly.

Mr. McKENZIE. The gentleman does not assume to say that we have surrendered any right to levy tolls in the Panama Canal, does he?

Mr. MONDELL. I do not like to admit surrenders, no matter how apparent they are, and therefore I will say no, even though we repealed the law differentiating in the fixing of tolls, on the argument that we had not any right so to do—that is, those of us who did not vote for the proposition did not surrender.

Mr. McKENZIE. I want to ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that the Government of the United States is the only power on earth that has the right to fix tolls on freight and passenger traffic through the Panama Canal, and have not we done it?

Mr. MONDELL. I did not think anyone else had the right to say anything about what we should do relative to our own ships until at the behest of Great Britain——

Mr. McKENZIE. Does the gentleman think so now?

Mr. MONDELL. Until at the behest of Great Britain we did, in effect, say that she had the right to say how we should fix the tolls on our own ships.

Mr. McKENZIE. But did we say it?

Mr. MONDELL. No; I did not surrender, for I did not vote for the Panama Canal surrender, I will say to my friend. My flag still flies. [Applause.]

Mr. McKENZIE. In all fairness, did not the gentleman so vote when the bill first passed the House?

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, I did not; because I stated very clearly then that I did not believe, as a matter of policy, that it was wise to remit tolls to our coastwise vessels. I thought it was better to remit the tolls to our over-sea commerce.

Mr. McKENZIE. And the gentleman was right about it, too.

Mr. MONDELL. That certainly was not a denial of our right to fix tolls, or to differentiate between different classes of vessels.

INCOME AND EXPENDITURES.

But, Mr. Chairman, I have taken very much more of my time than I intended to in discussing this very interesting subject of preparedness. There has been a good deal of talk and discussion, and because of it we will give a little more attention to the suggestions and recommendations of those who are in the position to know what we ought to do in order to be reasonably prepared, but we shall not be carried off our feet, and we shall not depart from our policy of maintaining only such an establishment as will ward off the first hostile blow and give time for the citizenship of the Nation to prepare for our perfect defense.

Mr. Chairman, I started to discuss this District bill, but it seems to be the hardest thing in the world in the House at times to discuss the matter under consideration. Some of the newspapers of this city have been inclined to express regret because the District Commissioners did not make larger estimates, because they left out some rather important projects, and because they trimmed their estimates all along the line.

I was interested in their action largely by reason of a statement made by Commissioner Siddons as to the conditions or considerations which affected their judgment. He said on behalf of the commission:

> Bearing in mind, first, that our estimated revenues show a very considerable increase over last year—

That is, the District revenues—

> the commissioners were nevertheless aware of the fact that it was not only desired but the probable necessity throughout the Government to reduce expenditures to a minimum * * * and bearing in mind the general situation in the country and what the Congress probably has to face in the matter of the necessity of reducing expenditures wherever possible, we have fallen in line with that general view and understanding.

Mr. Chairman, we all believe in economy, not only under Democratic adminstrations which are pledged to economy by their platform utterances, but at all times and under all administrations, and yet we have the very highest authority, recently given, for the fact that the American people desire Congress to make such appropriations as are reasonably necessary for carrying on the people's affairs, their only insistence being that the expenditures shall be for proper objects and that honesty and good business judgment shall be exercised in making the expenditures.

What is the condition of the country which the commissioners had in mind when they said in effect that it was such as to necessitate their bringing in a very closely clipped and cropped set of recommendations of expenditures? The ability of the Government to pay its bills depends entirely upon its revenues, and its revenues are derived from two sources in the main—internal revenue and revenue from customs duties. So far as I know, except for the extension of the wave of prohibition, and that does not seem to have had much effect, there has not occurred anything to reduce the income from internal revenue. Our other large source of income is customs duties, and there is no reason for a falling off of revenue from customs duties based on any reduction in the amount of imports. Just now in addition to ordinary sources of revenue we have this new so-called war tax, which makes it a little bit trying for the children in the matter of chewing gum, a little more difficult to get married, hard on the man who has any bank stock, and still harder, as I have recently discovered, on the fellow who wants to borrow money at the bank. Ninety million dollars, we have understood, are to be raised through this so-called war tax, necessitated, so the President assured us, by reason of a reduction of imports resulting from the war in Europe.

Mr. Chairman, I have taken the trouble to secure a table of importations for the 13 months ending October 30 last, during all of which time the Underwood bill has been in operation, the full period of its operation down to the 1st of November—it was impossible to secure complete returns for November—and I find that in that period, under the Underwood bill, we imported $2,014,088,333 worth of foreign goods. I have also looked up the figures of imports for the last 13 months of the Payne tariff, the 13 months immediately preceding the first 13 months of the Underwood bill, and I find that in that period we imported under the Payne bill $1,957,382,892 worth of foreign goods. In other words, we had an increase, an excess of imports in the first 13 months under the Underwood bill over the last 13 months of the Payne bill amounting to $56,705,441. So there is no necessity of unusual and crippling parsimony based on a reduction of imports. There is no reduction but an increase of imports. There is no necessity for a war tax based on a reduction of imports, for imports have increased, in spite of the war, $56,000,000 over a like period before the passage of the Underwood bill.

Mr. FESS. Did the gentleman notice whether the imports in these war months of this year are greater or as great as the corresponding months of the last year before the war?

Mr. MONDELL. The imports during August and September, 1914, were lower than the imports of the corresponding months of the year before, but the imports prior to the war were greater than the corresponding months of the year before, and now we have reached a condition under which the imports are increasing constantly, in spite of the war. The imports for October, 1914, were over $138,000,000, whereas for October, 1913, they were less than $133,000,000, or an increase of over five and one-half millions.

Mr. PLATT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I will.

Mr. PLATT. I wanted to bring that out, and that is the fact, that there was an increase of almost $6,000,000 in spite of the fact of the war.

Mr. MONDELL. Yes; as between October, 1913, and October, 1914.

Mr. PLATT. In spite of the fact that October, 1913, was the first month after the passage of the tariff bill.

Mr. MONDELL. That is true.

Mr. PLATT. What effect has the war had over importations during the war months?

Mr. MONDELL. I will insert the table in the RECORD, from which you can secure that information.

The table is as follows:

Comparative statement of imports and duty collected during the 13 months from October, 1913, to October, 1914, inclusive, and during the preceding 13 months, September, 1912, to September, 1913, inclusive.

NOTE.—Imports for September, 1913, include approximately $13,665,000 entered during the first 3 days of October under the tariff law of 1909.

Mr. MONDELL. The fact is the Underwood bill was intended to largely increase imports, and it has largely increased imports in spite of the war, and, whether the war continues or not, the imports over those of the Payne bill will be increased, and when the war ceases no man knows the amount of foreign goods that will be dumped on our shores.

Mr. FESS. Is it not a fact——

Mr. MONDELL. The fact is that the difficulty is not in decreased importations but in the fact that many articles were placed on the free list, and the duty on other articles was reduced to such an extent that with increased importations in the first 13 months of the Underwood bill of more than $56,000,000 there was a decrease in revenues in the same period of $62,705,565.

Mr. FESS. In other words, the war has not decreased importations sufficiently to necessitate a war tax, because the importations under the war are greater than the importations prior to the war——

Mr. MONDELL. That is true.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman give me five minutes more?

Mr. DAVIS. I will start the gentleman out with four minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. The war tax was not necessary because of any reduction of imports. That is very clear. There has been an increase of importations for eight months prior to the passage of the war tax over the preceding eight months. The war tax was necessitated, as I said on the floor of the House some time ago, not by reason of the war in Europe but by reason of the Democratic war on sound fiscal and financial principles and policies. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman yield for one question?

Mr. MONDELL. I will.

Mr. COOPER. Do not the increases which the gentleman has given as to importations under the Underwood law and the Payne law afford an absolute demonstration of the fact that the Underwood tariff law as a revenue producer was a demonstrated failure before war began, and that if there had not been a war that law must of necessity have been amended or there would have been a tax anyway?

Mr. MONDELL. That was thoroughly and abundantly demonstrated before the war began. The war was the excuse, the opportunity of the Democratic Party to get out of a hole in which its bad management had placed it and the country along with it. [Applause on the Republican side.] And it was very clear then that the bill would have to be amended, and it grows clearer every day.

Mr. SLOAN. Was not the passage of the war-revenue bill there a confession of the failure of the Underwood tariff law as a revenue producer?

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, unquestionably, and while it failed as a revenue producer the only thing that prevents a general flooding of our markets with enormously increased importations of foreign goods is the situation created by the war.

In spite of war abroad importations have increased, are constantly increasing, to the detriment of the American people, and there is a constant loss to the American Treasury by reason of the reduction in the rate of customs duties. It is now apparent that whoever shall be in control of Congress after the close of the European war it will be necessary to revise the tariff, in order to secure adequate revenue and prevent the complete overthrow of industries by a flood of foreign goods. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Chairman, I now yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER]. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me just one minute? I wish to yield that minute to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY].

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, I will not take that much time. When I went home I met my people on the cotton situation, and I want to ask leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD on that subject.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER] is recognized.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, it is perhaps not inappropriate that we should discuss national defense upon a District of Columbia bill. It was 100 years ago the 24th of last August when a small force of about 5,000 British put our raw levies to flight at Bladensburg and came here and burned the National Capitol.

I do not believe in war. But war comes like a bolt from the blue. It is not enough that our people have always wanted peace. Some unforeseen occurrence, like the shot at Lexington or the shots at the Chesapeake or the massacre at the Alamo or the destruction of the Maine or the first shot at Fort Sumter brings war before we expect it.

We pray for peace; but if war comes we shall not have time to gather supplies and create armies as we did in 1861 and in 1898. We should be prepared.

It was one of the main objects of the Constitution, as therein stated, "to secure domestic tranquillity" and "to provide for the common defense." The two go together. Unless we provide for the common defense we are the temptation of every rapacious or irritable nation, and peace will be a dream only.

Now, I am going to speak mostly of our defenses on land. I was on the Committee on Military Affairs for some 10 years. On land, as on sea, real defense lies in the mobile forces that can attack—in speedy ships with high-power guns on the water and in men with rifles in their hands that they know how to use, like Gen. Jackson's frontiersmen, on the land. An army of sharpshooters is our real defense. Forts and slow-moving naval fortresses may be out of date, but the man behind the gun is never out of date. [Applause.] The fathers of the Constitution understood this well. They passed a militia bill in the First Congress which enacted that every man between 18 and 45 years of age was to appear at an annual muster provided with a musket, a horn of powder, and bullets. They were not satisfied, as our present authorities are, with, at the most, 1,100,000 rifles in hand when we have 16,000,000 men that may be called on in time of war.

Even before that first militia bill a small school for officers had been established. The new Nation was surrounded by the colonies of the then great powers; Spain, England, and France owned these colonies and were aggressive. Are we in any better position to-day? The ocean that then separated us by weeks from the other side has now become the speediest and best means of transportation, and we are now even nearer than then to the great military powers.

That militia bill provided for a reserve of arms and men, and the fathers of our country also provided a small standing army. They had, in 1792, an army of 5,000 men. Our population at that time, besides 700,000 slaves, was only 3,300,000 freemen. Our free population has increased thirtyfold. If we now had a standing army in the same proportion to population, we should have 150,000 men instead of 75,000.

I stand by the principles of our forefathers. Our Army should be in the proportion that they established. I believe they had about the right number for a standing army. It was not a large army. Our Army is a school of arms, a college of military information and progress. For its size, ours is the best army in the world, because both the horse and foot are an army of sharpshooters, and no other army in the world can claim that.

But the fathers of our country did not depend on this organized army. They put their trust and dependence in the reserves, or what we call the volunteers—in a whole people that would spring to arms at their country's call. And we do this also, and rightly. No standing army can be great enough to carry on a great war. We had millions, North and South, in the Civil War, which put 4,000,000 men in arms. Ten millions or more are now engaged in the European conflict. But in peace no nation can afford to put its whole male able-bodied population in the army. Germany enlists less than one-half of her available recruits for two years, and less than one-half of her men have been trained in arms. Including not only those who are with the colors, but also the landwehr, or reserve, and the landsturm, or home guard, Germany's trained men number about five and a half millions. We do not hear that there are arms or equipment for more, or of their putting their 11,000,000 able-bodied men in arms, nor have they put any such number in the field. No other nation puts so many in the army as Germany. The tax is too terrible. The American Army costs on the average $1,000 a man per year. It costs still more to take those same men from the community and from productive pursuits. A standing army here of a million men would cost a thousand million dollars a year, and the cost is prohibitive.

But we can make provision for arms as they did in the militia bill of old times, for ammunition, equipment, and educated officers at one-fortieth of this cost, even if arms and equipment have to be entirely renewed every 10 years. The sum that will support 25,000 men in the Army will in 10 years make full provision of arms and equipment for a million men. If it is used only for arms—that is, for rifles, artillery, and gun carriages—it will in 2 years make provision for more than a million men, and would in 10 years make provision for five million men.

If we can rely upon our factories in case of emergency to supply most of the clothes, harness, wagon work, ammunition, and shoes, as we may fairly do, so that we need only put arms and part of the other material in store, we can, with the same sum or at the cost of 25,000 men, put rifles, field cannon, and gun carriages in store sufficient for 5,000,00 men within 10 years, and we can do this without withdrawing a single man from work or wages and without establishing the least show of militarism.

This is the system that was adopted by our forefathers. It is the way also by which a population of 250,000 Boers in South Africa—by providing for the common defense and having cannon, rifles, and ammunition—held Great Britain at bay with her 250,000,000 of population and her standing army of over 300,000 troops. It is the only way to provide national defense at reasonable cost.

After all, standing armies are trifles in time of war. The first necessity will be that of arms. It is an open secret that just at the present time the English forces can not go to the Continent because England has not arms with which to equip them. I know this also from private advices. France has been holding back her levies because she can not fully equip them. Arms are a necessity, and it takes months and years to provide them. Our factories are now glutted with foreign orders which they can not fill until after months or years of delay in building machinery to manufacture military rifles. Arms can not be provided immediately.

The new Springfield rifles cost $15 apiece, and a stock of them can be accumulated in 10 years at an annual cost of $1.50 for each rifle. Fifteen million dollars a year will give us 10,000,000 Springfields within 10 years, or enough to put rifles into the hands of 10,000,000 men if some great military power should attempt to invade us. I grant that no such storm cloud threatens now, but who dares warrant the chances of the next 10 years, unless we make for peace by having a rifle ready for the hands of every man as did our forefathers. We are not entitled to call for volunteers unless we can arm them.

Now, about 16 years ago, in the Military Affairs Committee, just at the outbreak of the Spanish War, I found that we had just enough repeating rifles to put in the hands of our Regulars and only old Springfields for our Volunteers. At my instance and with the aid of the War Department we finally increased the appropriation for making rifles from some $350,000 to $1,700,000, which supplied 100,000 rifles a year. Now they have gradually reduced that sum, because we have 300,000 Krags and 700,000 Springfield rifles on hand, or thereabouts (I get these figures from the appropriations which tell about what we have made), and they only estimate for $250,000 this year, which is about enough to give 16,000 rifles, or only sufficient to take care of ordinary wear and tear. We ought to put rifles in reserve for time of necessity. The War Department publications show plans for increasing the Regular Army to 120,000 and the militia to 150,000 and for volunteers to make up a first line of about 500,000, and they are making all their plans for supplying this first line only with arms and equipment. This is not right. We need supplies in store for the second and third lines as well, so that if we happen to be forced into war the whole citizen soldiery can have arms with which to fight. [Applause.]

Our Government factories can make 1,500 rifles a day, with two shifts; or, with three shifts and working every day in the year, they could make 2,200 a day or 750,000 in a year. But what is that if we get into war? Modern war is a matter of days and weeks, at most; of months, and not of years. It will take over 10 years to get our men supplied with Springfield rifles, at $1.50 per year per man. It will make for peace to have a stock of arms ready to put into the hands of our citizen soldiery. They cost little.

The machine guns, using the same ammunition, cost about $515 apiece. Four are now allotted to 1,000 men, and if that ratio continues $2.30 a man would provide the gun, or, on the 10-year basis, it is 23 cents per man per year.

The 3-inch field gun costs less than $5,000 for the gun and carriage proper, and, allowing a battery of four guns to 1,000 men, each man can be provided with these essentials of the field artillery at a cost of $20, or, on the 10-year basis, $2 a year.

The evidence taken last Tuesday shows that we have only enough field artillery for 300,000 men. The department only expects to provide 1,290 guns in all, or enough for 450,000 men. Guns and carriages can not be made in haste. Of all things that take time, artillery takes the most, and we should provide it lavishly and have it in store. This will not be done in order to have war, but in order to avoid war and keep the peace. We should see that the aggressive nations, who look greedily upon our lands and wealth, should know that we have arms and artillery for our millions and not merely for a first line.

Small arms at $15, quick firers at $2.30 per man, and field guns at $20 a man, a total of $37.30, can be provided for a million men for $37,300,000.

I am in hopes that this is all that we need to keep in store. Perhaps ammunition, clothes, shoes, harness, and equipment can be left, for the most part, to be made by our various factories in times of emergency. But if not, the total cost of full equipment for each man for artillery, ammunition, arms, and necessary equipment is something under $225, so that $22,500,000 a year would give full equipment for 1,000,000 men in 10 years.

I add a memorandum of this equipment, Mr. Chairman, which I submit, as follows:

MEMORANDUM—ARMY EQUIPMENT.

A rifle costs $14.50 to (It was $12.50 a few years ago, but before that was $17.)	$15.00
There are 100 rounds in the belt, 120 in the combat train, 120 in the ammunition train, making 340. A like amount ought to be held in reserve, or, in all 680 rounds, which cost $27 per 1,000, or about (At private factories the cost is $35 a thousand.)	18.00
Machine guns cost about $515 apiece, and each should have 21,000 rounds of ammunition, making altogether about $1,100. Four machine guns are allowed to 1,000 men, making $4,400, or, for each man	4.40

As to field guns, a little over 3 are allowed to 1,000 men. The battery of four 3-inch field guns, with limbers, caissons, harness, and every appurtenance except horses, will cost between $70,000 and $71,000. As to ammunition, they wish 1,800 rounds for each gun, making $72,000. The large 6-inch gun batteries cost nearly or quite double as much, but there will be comparatively few of these, and we might average the cost, therefore, by allowing the cost of four 3-inch guns to 1,000 men, which, with the horses, would be $150,000, or, per man	$150.00
The uniform, army shoes, and other essentials (like socks and underclothing) which could not be furnished by purchase in market without being especially ordered, amount, per man, to not over	30.00
The total cost of equipment, per man, for artillery, arms, ammunition, and necessary equipment	217.40

I am talking no secrets. All this is in the pamphlet issued as to organization.

Twenty-two dollars a man for 10 years would provide all that he needs of arms, artillery, and equipment. Is it too much to provide all this for a million men?

I prefer to provide arms alone for 5,000,000 men and to leave the manufacture of the rest of the equipment to the manufacturing power of the United States when we need it.

You will ask me whether our citizen soldiers will have training. If you have plenty of arms you can issue them lavishly to every school that desires them, under proper regulations to be adopted by the Secretary of War. Examinations should be arranged, and every schoolboy who has qualified as a marksman or sharpshooter and knows how to take his gun to pieces and put it together again should receive some prize. Men in the community who have received this education would be almost soldiers, ready, if they have learned to obey orders, to make marches and to shoot straight. Target practice at short ranges, with a diminished target, can be had against any railroad embankment. It is no matter of great expense, and will provide trained recruits for expansion of the Regular Army and National Guard in time of need, as well as for volunteers.

But some one will say, "But what of officers?" We want qualified officers, scattered through the community as they were in 1848 and 1861, when West Point graduates from civil life furnished almost the greater part of our successful commanders. We are neglecting the training of officers.

Our Military Academy has not grown with our population. In 1812 it had 250 cadets, and our population was less than 7,500,000, including slaves. We have now over thirteen times as many people. If we had the same proportion at the academy now it would be a school of over 3,300 young men instead of less than 700. That school is not able now to supply the needs of the Army. Before 1860 a large majority of the graduates went into civil life. Every graduate of the four-year course in civil life can be expected to remain available for the Volunteer Army for 30 years thereafter, and every cadet in the academy will thus represent eight officers who will be ready for volunteer service. If there be one West Point graduate allotted for every hundred men, they would be pretty well supplied; and if each West Point cadetship thus supplied 8 officers to 800 men, the annual cost of, say, $1,600 for a cadet—it is rather high—makes the cost for officers about $2 a year for each man that they command. It is a small price.

These graduates would no doubt take an interest in the National Guard and improve it greatly.

The men in civil life who had been educated in West Point were the greatest asset that the United States had in the Mexican War and in the Civil War. These graduates were specially equipped to help in time of war, and the work done by our armies in 1848 and 1861 was not like that of 1812, because we had many officers who were trained and competent.

What is the cost?

They are the cheapest investment that we ever made. A West Point (or several military academies) educating 3,300 men would in time provide an officer to every hundred men, or an army of two and a half million men.

It would take time to obtain this supply, and meanwhile we might well establish some system by which prizes could be offered to graduates of a scientific course, who should also stand a thorough examination in military science. We might establish a system of military cadets in the Army. We had it once. The Germans have it now in their one-year men, who are graduates of colleges.

We want men who will lead our forces in time of war and who in time of peace will serve their country by adding to the efficiency of the militia.

Our strength lies in the people, not in standing armies. It lies in defense and not in attack. It lies in peace and not in war. But we can only keep peace if we have a people who are not only numerous but who are provided with arms as well as with trained officers, and who from youth up know how to obey orders, march together, and shoot straight, because they have learned it in school.

Such an army would be invincible, for on the country's call its soldiers would spring up and be born like Minerva, fully armed and ready and equipped for war. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has used 2 hours and 10 minutes.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PROUTY].

Mr. PROUTY. Mr. Chairman, I want to spend a few minutes discussing this bill, and yet I think I realize that I would not be in order at this time unless I said a few things about war. [Laughter.]

I want to make my declaration now, so that you will all understand it, that I am for war; but it is for war against wrong and injustice, and not against my neighbors and friends. I am for civilization, I am opposed to barbarism, whether of nations or of individuals. It is a strange fact, as I review the history and conditions of the world, that as individuals men are largely civilized. The people of the world have made marvelous progress in civilization, but as nations we are just as barbarous as we were in the dark ages; we resort to the same methods to decide matters of right now as they did then, but as individuals we submit to the rule of right and justice.

What is civilization? I was sitting back here trying to analyze it, as my friend from Wyoming, Mr. MONDELL, was talking. Civilization is nothing more than a man surrendering the power to determine his own rights or to enforce them. I can not determine my own rights as a citizen. The community will not let me. After the right has been determined I can not go ahead and enforce it, for the community will not permit. I must surrender, in order to be a civilized man, both the power to determine my own rights and the power of enforcing them. The nations of the world will never become civilized until they surrender their right to determine for themselves the question of right, and providing a power and a means of enforcing it without the arbitrament of war.

To-day we are beholding the greatest spectacle that the world has ever seen, and what is it all about? What is the question to be determined? The question to be determined is whether or not Servia was particeps criminis with a high-school boy who shot down the prince of Austria. That is the question involved. Austria wanted to go into Servia and settle that question herself. Servia wanted to settle it for herself, but neither of them was willing to submit to a high court of right and justice to determine that question. After we have seen 17,000,000 people in arms, after we have seen three or four million men stricken down, after we have seen thousands upon thousands of widows and orphans made, after we have seen blood flow like rivers, will there be any determination of the great question that lies at the base of this conflict, and that is whether Servia was an accomplice in that transaction?

As I said, I am for war, but I am for war for right and not for war upon my neighbor. We have established a country here based not upon force, not upon power, but upon eternal right, and I undertake to say that as long as we do stand for right we will never be threatened by any other nation. I am for peace as between my neighbor and myself as to our mutual rights. You can not determine it by war. That determines only one question, and that is which is the stronger, and not which one is right. You never can determine a question of right by mere force. I know it is commonly said that might makes right. As to nations that is true, but as to individuals it is not true. But I see no reason why we should not have the same principles apply to national morals that apply to individual morals. No man would stand up and say to-day as to his civil rights that might makes right. As between men nobody would claim that, and yet good men, strong men, able men, stand up and advocate a theory that might makes right when you apply it to national morals.

I am not one of those who believe that we are in any danger. I never have become hysterical about the invasion of the yellow race, or any other race. We have lived on this portion of this little continent as a nation for a century and a quarter—125 years—and during all that time no nation has declared a war upon us, and no nation has undertaken to approach the offensive; no nation has ever, so far as authentic record goes, considered the question of making an invasion upon us. We have had two wars.

A MEMBER. Three.

Mr. PROUTY. Two wars outside of the one among ourselves, which I did not include.

Mr. KAHN. The Mexican and the Spanish Wars.

Mr. PROUTY. The Mexican War I had forgotten, and it ought to be forgotten. But no nation declared war on us. Great Britain did not declare war in 1812 and she would not do it now. Spain, with her armada, did not declare war upon the United States, and they would not now. Mexico will not declare war, nor will any other nation. All we need to do is to stay here, be men and be right, stand for high ideals, and we will have no trouble.

I agree with Abraham Lincoln when he said that all the armies and the navies of the world could not reach the Ohio River. I agree with that proposition. I have looked the thing over pretty carefully and I say that all the navies of the world could not enter the port of New York, even if there was not a battleship in New York Harbor. With our land batteries and our mines and other things all the navies of the world could not enter New York Harbor and approach New York City. There is no well-protected harbor that I know of—any approachable harbor—where they could come in.

In conversation with a gentleman back yonder a moment ago, he said that they would land their forces at some place where there was not any port. What does that mean? You can not land an armed vessel out in midocean. You can not land them where there are no ports. The very best they could do, if they could not get into any of these fortified harbors, would be to land at some place along the seacoast, and to do that they would have to anchor away out at sea and send their men in in small vessels to the shore, by boats and skiffs, and so forth; and I undertake to say that all of the armies of the world could not land enough men on the shore so that our policemen would not be able to arrest them. [Laughter.]

Mr. PETERSON. They might come by aeroplane.

Mr. PROUTY. Yes; but where are these hundred million people during this time? Suppose an army was to start now from Germany or France or England with a hundred thousand men on their transports—and that is a big amount to carry—and they would get down here at some place, and by our modern method of telegraphy we can tell where they are and what they are doing, by means of our scouts—suppose they would land there or would approach there to land, and then would get into their little boats to come to land, do you suppose one of them would ever get to shore? Why, talk about the Navy and the Army and all that—I can go down here into Arkansas, where the boys have been trained from youth to shoot out the eye of a squirrel, and get enough men to pick out every man before he got to shore. [Laughter.]

Mr. FESS. What about the battleships that would be out there with the transports?

Mr. PLATT. How would you know just where they were going to land? There is a good deal of room on the ocean, as the German cruisers have shown.

Mr. PROUTY. I would have this wireless telegraphy, established from one end of this country to the other, tell us.

Mr. PLATT. But they will be on shore by that time.

Mr. PROUTY. Oh, no; they can not land 100,000 men in a minute.

Mr. PLATT. They do not need to land over 20,000 men to get 20 miles inland.

Mr. PROUTY. Twenty thousand men would not last a breakfast spell with the outraged citizenship of America. [Laughter.]

Mr. OGLESBY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PROUTY. Yes.

Mr. OGLESBY. I would like to say to the gentleman that when we went down to Cuba it took us from 10 o'clock at night until daylight to land 1,000 men in those boats, exactly the way the gentleman is describing.

Mr. PROUTY. Of course. I am not so dizzy as you fellows think I am.

Mr. OGLESBY. And I want to add that there was nobody there to stop us.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PROUTY. Yes.

Mr. KAHN. Of course the gentleman does not pretend to say that civilians could begin to snipe troops and get away with it?

Mr. PROUTY. I undertake to say that we could call out the State militia of a State like Arkansas—and I am picking the smallest State in the Union, so far as the militia is concerned—where the boys are trained to shoot the eyes out of squirrels from their youth, and I would plant them down on one of these unprotected shores that you speak of and I guarantee that no German or English could land. [Laughter.] But I did not intend to make a war speech. How much time have I remaining, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has eight minutes remaining.

Mr. SIMS. Go ahead. You are doing very well.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. The gentleman noticed that I spoke of Jackson's frontiersmen as being the best sort of a defense. An army of sharpshooters is the best army in the world; but we have not got it.

Mr. PROUTY. Yes; I agree with that—except in Arkansas.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I wish we had them all over the country, just as you say they have them in Arkansas.

Mr. PROUTY. What I am trying to say is that I am in favor of an international court of arbitration to settle these questions and remove the tax burden that comes from settling them by war, and I want to say that it is time for the American people, as well as other people, to consider these great questions from the standpoint of the men who furnish the money and the blood to conduct wars, rather than from the standpoint of the men who owe their whole career and everything they have to the art of war. I think it is time for us to consider the orphans, the children, and the mothers of this country as well as the fellow who wants to wear epaulets.

Mr. Chairman, I now want to talk about something that is just as warlike, if we can judge from the newspapers, as this is, and that is the bill making appropriations for the District of Columbia. If you will allow your minds to calm down a little bit, I will try and bring mine down and call your attention to a real situation. You all know that it has been said ever since I have been in Congress, especially since I have been upon the District Committee, that I am a fellow who is constantly stirring up things and causing a great deal of trouble to this District.

If you will look through what I have said from time to time, you will find that I have never advocated anything except the purest, simplest justice as between the people of this District and the rest of the people of the United States. With that kind of preface, I want to call your attention to a real situation. If you will turn to the last page of this appropriation bill, you will find that it appropriates eleven million three hundred and two thousand dollars and odd; and if you will turn to the report of the District Commissioners, just filed, and of which I see my friend MONDELL has a copy, you will find that the revenues of the District of Columbia last year amounted to $7,321,000, independent of a million and a half dollars that came in under special levies or taxation. We have had in this District for more than a quarter of a century a plan by which the District furnishes a dollar——

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Over a third of a century.

Mr. PROUTY. Yes; over a third of a century—a plan by which the District furnishes a dollar and the people of the United States furnish a dollar. Since the District of Columbia has $7,321,000 as their part, to match that the United States must put up $7,321,000 on their part; otherwise you would destroy the symmetry of that sacred hallowed thing called the half-and-half principle.

Now, you will notice that if that were done that the District of Columbia appropriation bill ought to provide for the expenditure of, say, in round numbers, $15,000,000. As a matter of fact, they only find it necessary to expend $11,000,000, and while I am discussing that phase of it I want to call attention to the fact that even of that item there are $128,000 that ought not to be included. There are $128,000 appropriated in this bill for expenses of the water works which is provided for out of an entirely different fund, so you should take $128,000 from the figures which I am using, because that ought not to have been included in the sum total of those figures because that does not come out of the general revenues of the District or the United States, but comes out of what is known as the water fund. Now, the result of this, just figured coolly and calmly as if you were on a board of supervisors or an alderman in the city, you would say, What are we going to do about this? We have $2,000,000 surplus revenue. You would say one of two things: Either we would cut down the amount of the revenues to be derived or we would increase the appropriation. You would not leave a couple of million dollars of unexpended money knowing it was going to increase in the future rather than diminish, because every man who has studied this problem knows the revenues even on the present—I was going to say "sham"—basis are going to increase. There is no question about that, the commissioners so say, and everybody who has studied the question knows it is true. It is not only this year, but it is going to increase and next year it will be eight and a half or nine million dollars.

Mr. SIMS. And that is without increasing the rate of taxation?

Mr. PROUTY. Oh, yes; I am not discussing that question just now. Now, the American Congress, sitting as I feel we are, as just an arbiter between the people of the United States and the District of Columbia, should do something. Now, what shall it be? Well, some, I suppose, will say we ought to cut down the taxes in the District of Columbia. I suppose that is really what they mean. But, on the other hand, I do not believe there is a man in this Congress who has got the nerve, in view of the record of the facts in this case, to get up on the floor of this House and state that he believes that the people of the District of Columbia ought to have their taxes reduced. What are the simple facts? I will not go into them at length, but what are the simple facts? They are that they pay now 10 mills on the dollar on actual value of real estate. Under the organic act, about which they have said so much, it was provided it should be 15 mills, but now they pay 10 mills.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Does the gentleman desire more time?

Mr. PROUTY. I should like a little more time.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I will yield the gentleman 10 minutes additional.

Mr. PROUTY. As I say, they pay 10 mills on the dollar on real estate. I undertake to say, after having spent three years investigating that question, there is not a city in the United States of any size that does not pay a good deal more than that. You can but recall your own taxes at home. I have compiled, as you all know, the taxes of all cities of any size in the United States, based upon actual value, not upon assessed value, and the law provides upon actual value, and the average in the United States is a little over 19 mills. Therefore I say I do not believe any man has the hardihood to stand on the floor of the House and say to all the people of this Nation that the people of the District of Columbia ought to have their taxes still further reduced.

Mr. CRISP. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PROUTY. With pleasure.

Mr. CRISP. I just want to ask the gentleman if it is not also true that intangible personal property and articles of adornment are also exempt from taxes here, which does not apply elsewhere?

Mr. PROUTY. Well, half of that proposition is true. Moneys and credits are not assessed here at all. Congress did a few years ago correct that provision of 1892 in regard to wearing apparel—that is, articles of personal adornment. Now, I am not going to discuss the question of whether property is assessed here at the full value—that is, based upon the two-thirds proposition. I am not going to discuss that because I have not the time, but I will say in a general way from all the information I can obtain, and I have sought it honestly, because I hold no grudge against these people, they have been splendid to me personally, and I have no grudge against them, but I have been probing for the facts, and I find that property in the District of Columbia is assessed lower on the basis of the law—that is, two-thirds—than it is generally in other cities. There is no dispute about the proposition that property in the city of Washington instead of being assessed at two-thirds is only assessed one-third. Of course there are isolated cases where that does not apply, but take it as a whole; and a committee of this Congress filed their report after giving a most elaborate study of the question covering a period of more than two years of time. Then, as has been suggested, moneys and credits are not assessed at all here. Men can come here with their millions and tens of millions and twenty million dollars, as they have, and escape taxation at home and escape taxation here. Well, I am not now discussing that part of the question, but I want to say it is unfair to the people of the United States that men can take up a technical residence in the city of Washington and escape taxation at home and thereby defraud their people at home and at the same time give no benefit to the people of the District of Columbia. So I pass that proposition. I do not believe there is anybody going to get up here and say that we are in favor of reduced taxation.

Now, what are you going to do with that $3,000,000 next year, $4,000,000 the next year, and $5,000,000 the next year, assuming there is to be no change in the manner of assessment and no different rate? What are you going to do with it? Oh, give it back to the District and go out into my district and your district and levy a war tax to make the deficit good. I have seen a good deal of effort about here to find money to be economical on, and we are told we have not money enough with which to run this Government, and yet here are $2,000,000 that you are going to hand back to people who are the wealthiest people per capita of any people in the United States, and go out to our people to get the money to make it good. Now, is it not absolutely fair to say that these people themselves ought to use the money that they themselves are able to put up on an equitable, generous basis before they ask my people to contribute? These people are educating their children here by paying half taxation, and our people pay full taxation and then contribute half to the people down here. My people are getting no richer than these people here; my people have no greater revenues per capita than these people have here, and yet all this time we are paying out for my people money to support these people. Of course, some people, somehow or another, get charmed and fascinated, like a snake fascinates a bird, when they get among these people here and listen to their stories. I admit I do not get fascinated in that way. I want to determine but one question, and that is the question of what is right between my people and these people here.

Now, while I am on my feet, I will say that an amendment will be offered by my friend, Mr. JOHNSON, chairman of our committee, providing that the funds collected from the District of Columbia shall be used to pay the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia, so far as they go, and that whatever is necessary beyond that shall be paid out of the Public Treasury. Is not that fair? If they collect money by a very low rate of taxation, more than equal their half, is it anything unjust or unfair to say that they shall use the rest of that money for themselves before they go out among other people in order to collect money to make that good?

And then another thing that I expect will be suggested: When the organic law was enacted all of you who are familiar with that will remember a committee spent nearly four years in investigating the question of relations between the Federal Government and the District of Columbia. They considered very carefully the question as to what was a fair rate of taxation to be put upon these people. The distinguished Senator from Iowa, Mr. Allison, was chairman of that committee, and after making an examination of the tax rate in cities of the United States they found a 15-mill tax, or $1.50 a hundred, was a reasonable and average tax, and therefore in the organic act it was fixed at 15 mills on the dollar, or $1.50 on the hundred, actual value. That continued for 22 years, but in 1902, when they found they were getting more revenues than were necessary for the District's half, some fascination got hold of Members of Congress, which I have never been able to comprehend, by which they reduced the revenues for the District rather than reduce the part that was contributed by the United States, and they said, rather than be assessed at its full value, it should be assessed at only one-third value. So that real estate in the city of Washington and the District of Columbia is now only paying 10 mills on the actual value, while in my city and in your city it is 20 mills or more.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman two additional minutes.

Mr. PROUTY. There will be an amendment striking out that two-thirds clause and leaving it as it was originally, and then there will be another amendment offered here striking out the word "tangible."

In the original act all property in the District of Columbia—I mean all kinds of property—was assessable. Moneys and credits were assessable for more than 20 years in the District of Columbia. But at the same time that this other law was passed they put in the words "tangible property," which had the effect of relieving personal property, in the form of moneys and credits, from taxation.

Now, there will be a little amendment offered here proposing just to strike out the word "tangible" and leave the act just as it was when Congress passed it after such an enormous and studied investigation. As I have already intimated, there can be no justice in allowing a man like C. W. Post to come down here from Battle Creek, Mich., and make a tentative residence in your city by buying a little house which did not cost more than $9,000. It was valued at $9,700, I believe. He put in it a little of his old household furniture from Battle Creek, Mich. He lived in Battle Creek, Mich., in magnificent style for 22 years, and, so far as I know, never lived in the city of Washington in the last 20 years except when he was visiting here and stopped at the New Willard Hotel. When his will was filed for probate it was found that he had declared that he was a citizen of Washington, and the will and the report in connection with it shows that he had pretty nearly $20,000,000 of moneys and credits. During all that time Michigan had been trying to get some taxes from him, and they have a case now pending in the court where they are trying to enforce the payment of some tax. But he came here, and under the peculiarity of our law exempting moneys and credits from taxation, he claimed a technical residence here, so that he might escape taxation both here and at home. [Applause.]

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP] is recognized for one minute.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, may I inquire how much time is left on either side?

The CHAIRMAN. Fifty minutes' time is left on the gentleman's side.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. The time is exhausted on the other side?

The CHAIRMAN. It is exhausted on the other side.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I am not going to consume the full 50 minutes that remain in this general debate, and the time that I shall consume will be upon the bill that is under consideration. I shall not undertake to discuss the question of whether or not the United States is adequately prepared for all the emergencies that might, in the minds of men who are looking into the future, arise. I am very much more concerned with the appropriation bill that is under consideration at this time.

The current law making appropriations for the District of Columbia appropriated $12,771,054.23 for the expenses of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year 1915. The bill now under consideration, as reported by the committee to the House, carries $11,303,048.45, or $969,611.04 less than the current law. The estimates made by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia as to the taxes, as to the available amount derived from taxes and other sources in the District of Columbia for 1916, amount to a little less than $8,000,000. The estimates that they submitted in the annual Book of Estimates for the fiscal year 1916 were, in round numbers, $12,771,000, so that the appropriation in the bill now reported to the House is $1,596,860.78 below the estimates submitted to the Congress.

The committee, in submitting this bill to the House, believes that it has recommended a sufficient amount of money for the proper conduct of the affairs of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year 1916. We have had in mind, of course, the fact that we must economize at this time, if at any time at all, in the appropriation of the public money. There were matters submitted in the estimates to the committee for new enterprises, for new projects, that did not appeal to us as being of enough importance to warrant now the appropriation for which they asked.

I have no doubt, judging the future from the past, that before this bill becomes a law the amount that it carries will be increased above the amount that has been reported to the House; and yet I am not willing to concede that it is necessary that a single dollar should be added to it, so far as the necessities of the administration of the affairs in the District are concerned.

We have tried to take care of all the District enterprises. We have increased in this bill, practically in the amounts that were submitted to us by the commissioners, the various sums for the conduct of the schools and the police department, but not for the street-extension department, because, I think, no committee has ever appropriated for the full amount asked by the commissioners for the improvement of streets. We did not in this bill, because your committee very seriously doubted whether the commissioners could, within the fiscal year, wisely expend the amount for which they asked.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from North Carolina yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Certainly.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has any provision been made for rebuilding the destroyed Western High School?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, of all the gentlemen upon the floor of the House I would say that I thought my friend from Wisconsin kept up with the matter of appropriations.

Mr. STAFFORD. I try to, and I think there was an item carried for that purpose last year.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Yes. The deficiency bill passed at the last session of Congress carried an item, according to my recollection, of $150,000 for the reconstruction of the Western High School, which was destroyed by fire, and I understand that contracts have now been let for the beginning of that work. There was an estimate submitted for this bill asking an appropriation of $50,000 for the furnishing of the Western High School. I might as well at this time, since the subject has been mentioned, as well as later, in explanation why it is not carried in this bill, say that the appropriation for the reconstruction of the Western High School having been carried in a deficiency bill, the committee, after carefully considering the matter, decided that the $50,000 for its furnishing should also be carried in a deficiency bill at this session of Congress. So it is not a disposition on the part of the Appropriations Committee or the subcommittee preparing the bill to deny the amount asked for to furnish the Western High School; that is not the reason that it was not included in this bill, but merely in the interest of keeping appropriations somewhat straight that we have let it go over, to also be reported in a deficiency bill.

Mr. MOORE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Yes.

Mr. MOORE. I desire to ask the gentleman some questions about the department of education. Does the gentleman care to go into that now?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I had just as lief go into it now as at any time.

Mr. MOORE. Several memorials from colored residents of the District of Columbia have been handed to me, mainly predicated upon an article in the Washington Sun, which appears to be an organ of the colored people, complaining of conditions in the schools in the city of Washington. The Washington Sun has an article which appears to be a report of a committee of what is known as the Oldest Inhabitants' Association of Washington, and it has these rather startling headlines:

Horrible conditions of Washington schools—Report of committee appointed by president says dissatisfaction is widespread in schools.

The memorials all seem to indicate that there is a great deal of dissatisfaction in regard to the conduct of colored schools, that there is a reason for the complaint in regard to rating of children, and a general dissatisfaction. I would like to know if the committee has any information on this subject.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I will say to the gentleman a thing that he knows perfectly well, that the committee reporting this bill has no jurisdiction over matters of legislation. It is only concerned in the matter of appropriation. There has been no complaint made to the subcommittee over which I preside concerning any misappropriation of any of the funds made in the bill for the schools of the District. But, in addition to that, since the gentleman has asked the question, and while it is not a matter that immediately concerns the provisions carried in this bill, I will say, although I have not seen the paper that he reads from, that I have heard and have had statements made to me by colored people who are reliable, in my judgment, and who are greatly interested in the school system, complaining bitterly of the management of the schools in the city of Washington; that injustice is frequently done by a lack of appropriate grading and classification. There have been statements made that there is great dissatisfaction in the management and conduct of the schools of the city of Washington. To my mind there is reason for these complaints.

I want to remind the gentleman from Pennsylvania, as well as the members of this committee, that there is a condition existing in the city of Washington touching the administration of school affairs that, I dare say, does not exist in any other city in the United States or on the globe.

Mr. DAVIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Yes.

Mr. DAVIS. These conditions concerning the colored schools are not due to a lack of appropriation but a lack of management, or mismanagement.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Oh, not at all. It is entirely an administration matter and not of appropriation.

Mr. MOORE. It seemed to me that this was the proper place to bring up the question.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I want to say that there is a condition of administration in connection with the schools of the city of Washington that, so far as my knowledge goes, does not exist anywhere else on earth, and that the law itself is responsible, in my judgment, for the lack of proper administration.

Some of you, and perhaps the gentleman from Pennsylvania, will remember that in 1906 we enacted a school law for the District of Columbia. It is generally known as the longevity law, a law that provides for additional pay for teachers merely upon service. I shall have more to say about that a little further on. This same act provided for the organization of a school board in the District of Columbia. But, strange to say, it places the appointment of a school board in the District of Columbia in the hands of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia. The result is that we have a board of education administering the affairs of the city of Washington that is not answerable to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and who are not answerable or responsible to the Congress of the United States. They are answerable to the people who appoint them, the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, composed of estimable gentlemen appointed for life. Now, if anybody expects a satisfactory administration of school affairs under that state of things, he expects the impossible.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Yes.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Who makes the grading of which complaint is made? Is not that made by the teachers?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. It is made by the teachers.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Should not the complaint be made to the teachers through the superintendent who has the power to correct it?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. The superintendent has not the power to correct it except by sanction of the school board appointed by the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia. They have absolute management even of the detail of the school affairs of the District of Columbia and absolute control over the superintendent, even to his election.

Mr. SLAYDEN. This has nothing whatever to do with the bill.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Absolutely nothing.

Mr. SLAYDEN. But it has raised a very interesting question, and I would like to know what is the injustice in grading. Why should teachers have an animus that would incline them to do an injustice in a simple step in the administration of their schools?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. The gentleman will have to address that inquiry to some one else, because I can not imagine why they should.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Are there negro teachers in these negro schools?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. There are.

Mr. SLAYDEN. They certainly would not want to do an injustice to the people of their own race?

Mr. MOORE. I think the difference is really between the colored people themselves.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. That is correct.

Mr. MOORE. May I take advantage of the gentleman's time just to insert one memorial that is before me?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. If it does not take too long.

Mr. MOORE. It is as follows:

MEMORIAL OF COLORED CITIZENS OF WASHINGTON, D. C., INVITING THE ATTENTION OF THE CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES TO THE VERY DEPLORABLE CONDITION EXISTING IN THE COLORED BRANCH OF THE WASHINGTON, D. C., SCHOOL SYSTEM.

To the Speaker and Members of the House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, citizens of Washington, D. C., credibly informed of the bad conditions in our schools through the report of the school committee of the Oldest Inhabitants' Association (colored) of Washington, D. C., beg to invite through the disclosures of said report the attention of Congress to the very deplorable condition existing in the colored schools of Washington and which the school authorities have during the last five months continued to ignore, though the same has been called to their attention by your memorialists on more than one occasion, and also by the President of the United States, who referred to said board of education October 17, 1914, a copy of said report laid before him.

Your memorialists having vainly sought during the last four months to induce the superintendent of the schools of Washington, D. C., to take cognizance of the self-confessed delinquencies in the rating of the students in Normal School No. 2, and the continuance of said teacher on the pay roll, do now appeal to the Congress of the United States to investigate conditions in the colored branch of the Washington school system as indicated in said report, and grant your memorialists such relief as may seem proper.

Respectfully submitted.

PAUL H. JEFFERSON.
JOHN WILLIAMS.
HENRY TUDY.
OSCAR H. SMITH.
BLANCHE THOMAS.
EUPHRANZIE F. JONES.
ALFRED T. JONES.

That would seem to indicate that appeals to the superintendent are in vain. Of course these memorials are asking for an investigation by Congress. I do not know whether we want to embark on such an investigation, and I was bringing the matter to the attention of the gentleman who has charge of the appropriations to see whether he can throw any light on the subject toward obtaining relief for these memorialists.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman in that connection that when we reach the proper place in the bill—and it was not incorporated in the bill, and I did not seek to incorporate it during the time we were formulating the bill or before it was reported from the committee, because I did not really have the time to do it—it is my purpose to offer an amendment not to investigate this one particular instance to which the gentleman has reference, but for a complete survey of the organization and administration of the school affairs of the District of Columbia, and I shall ask, of course, for a small appropriation in order that this may be done, in order that a report may be made to the Congress of the United States, in the hope that out of an investigation of this sort and a report made by an impartial tribunal we may be able by legislation to so reorganize the administration of the school affairs of this District that equity and justice may be administered to every citizen interested in these schools.

Mr. MOORE. Then we may discuss the matter further during the five-minute rule?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Yes.

Mr. MOORE. May I ask the gentleman one further question, and he need not answer this question if his mind is not made up on the subject? Is it the gentleman's judgment that the administration of the school system should be under the direction of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia rather than of the supreme court?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I have no hesitancy in the world in answering the gentleman. I do.

Mr. MOORE. That is, the members of the board of education should be appointed by the Commissioners of the District?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I think so, unquestionably.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Yes.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I want to say to the gentleman that I am very much interested in his discussion of this question, and also his proposition to investigate it. I remember very well when this change was made, during a wave of reform that passed over the House. Nothing could stop it, because some gentlemen had some difficulty with the members of the old school board as it then existed, and it was claimed that everything was to be happy and lovely if they could get these appointments made by the supreme court. It seemed to me at the time that the members of the Supreme Court of the District were the last persons in the world to make these appointments, and while some of us fought it and voted against it, yet the reform, so called, prevailed.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I am very glad, indeed, to know that I shall have the support of the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] in an effort to restore the administration of the schools to the proper authorities. And now, while I am discussing the schools and this particular law enacted in 1906, which carried this provision for the appointment of a school board by the supreme court, I will say that we also enacted into law what was known as the longevity law in the principle of pay to the teachers of the District of Columbia.

I for one opposed that law at the time it was enacted. I confess that then I did not realize half the iniquity there was in it as I realize it now, and I do not believe that there has been a system placed upon the statute books that carries with it more of injustice, more of inequality, than is contained in the provisions of this act. I know that I am treading on thin ice when I make any reference to a change or any intimation that I would like to change existing conditions respecting the pay of teachers in the city of Washington, but under the present law there is absolutely no merit in promotion. It is automatic and merely means time. Teachers appointed, for instance, in a grade, when first appointed, may be appointed to a position of $600. Later there may be 25 new teachers, as this bill carries 30. Each one of these teachers receives the next year under this law an increase of $50 in their salaries, and the next year an additional $50, and so on until they have reached $800 in that particular class. The teacher who shows aptitude, industry, and capacity for promotion can not under this law be promoted any more rapidly than that teacher who merely does enough to keep from being discharged. There absolutely is no merit in promotion, and it is automatic. When they reach $800 of that particular class they are, by recommendation of this school board, put into the next class, and they start at $800 and their pay is increased $100 a year until they reach $1,200, and then again, when that is exhausted, they are put in the next class, and they advance $100 a year until they reach $1,800, absolutely without any examination or any regard paid to the efficiency of the teacher.

All you have to do under this system as a teacher of the District of Columbia is to do just well enough not to be turned out, and you are promoted just as rapidly as the most efficient and industrious teacher there is in the school. I say that a system that does that is not a good system at least and ought to be abolished. I believe that there are instances innumerable where teachers employed in the city schools of Washington at $600 a year for the first year, showing aptitude, industry, and a capacity to teach, ought to be promoted possibly the very next year to the $1,000 grade, whereas there are many, and I am afraid a majority of those who are employed at $600 ought never to receive another cent of compensation because they are not worth it. But this system automatically carries them all up, and it is a drain upon the Treasury, and it ought not to be allowed. Why, we carried the first year this was inaugurated an extra appropriation of $43,000 to pay this excess of longevity pay. The estimate submitted to the committee and the Congress upon which this bill was prepared asked this Congress to appropriate $485,000 to pay this excess of longevity pay. There is no man on earth who can state whether it is the proper amount or some other amount. The mathematician does not live who can figure out with accuracy at the end of the school year what they shall have to pay, and no man can tell me—I have not been able to find anyone, the superintendent, the chairman of the school board, the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, all have never been able to give this committee any information as to when we are going to reach the maximum possible under this law. I believe if it were in the power of this committee handling this bill, without the provision being subject to the point of order, if we could legislate there would have been contained in this bill a provision to repeal the statute placed upon the books in 1906. I believe it ought to be repealed and a just system inaugurated into law that takes cognizance of merit of those who have charge of the children of the District of Columbia. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has used 25 minutes and has 25 minutes remaining.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, as I said before, and the questions of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] diverted me, we have made appropriations in this bill not only for the maintenance of all the establishments of the District of Columbia in an amount which in the judgment of the committee is sufficient to meet all necessities, but we have gone even beyond that in a great many instances, and while the bill does not provide for a number of new projects that have been suggested, yet it does meet all the necessities of the proper conduct of the affairs of the District of Columbia.

Now, I want to call the attention of the committee to a situation that exists. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PROUTY] touched upon this just a few minutes ago. The amount of money required from the District of Columbia under existing law to meet the District's share of the appropriations provided in this bill is $5,566,764.22. The amount of taxes that are estimated for the fiscal year 1916 by the District Commissioners amounts in round numbers to $8,000,000. Here are more than $2,000,000—say two and a half million dollars—for which no provision whatever is made. Gentlemen of the committee, we have discussed, certainly in the last appropriation bill, because of that section becoming somewhat famous as section 8 in which we undertook to change the ratio of payment as between the District and the General Government in the conduct of the affairs of the District, and I want to say now, under the facts as they are presented before us by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, who make the estimate for the needs of the District of Columbia, that the amount available under the current law is vastly in excess of the possibility of wise expenditure. Under the present law if it is met this District appropriation bill would carry, and of necessity carry, $16,000,000. I do not hesitate to make the statement, and I believe it would be agreed in by every Member of this House who has investigated in the slightest degree the necessities of the District of Columbia, that it is absolutely impossible to expend in this District without the rankest waste and extravagance $16,000,000 in the conduct of its affairs in any one fiscal year.

You must admit one of two things—that we have either got too much money or that we must be spending too much money and spending it, too, unwisely and wastefully. This has been referred to as the organic act, but there is nothing more organic about it than any other statute that is written on the books by the Congress. It is sacred in the eyes of a certain element in the District of Columbia; but I say to you that unless you change that law—and this is the responsible body for the government of the District af Columbia, and the responsibility rests with us—unless you change the law that provides that the National Government must match every dollar that is raised in taxation in the District of Columbia and expended in this District, you must make up your mind that you are going to spend money with recklessness and waste. The system has broken itself down, and it has broken itself down in spite of what the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PROUTY] said to you is true—that the amount of taxes levied and raised upon the property in this District is less both in assessment and in rate than in any other city in the United States of America; in the face of the fact that, so far as my observation goes, no other population in the United State enjoys as great privilege as do the private citizens of the District of Columbia. The time has come, in my judgment, when this Congress should change this law and place it upon a basis of fairness and equity—fairness to the general taxpayers of the United States—and deal out nothing more than exact justice to the property owners of the District of Columbia.

If you investigate no further than to read the newspapers that are published in this city, you would suppose that no other population on earth was so burdened with taxes as the residents of the District of Columbia. The facts are all against them. As a matter of fact, I do not believe there is a Member of this House, living in any jurisdiction in the United States of America, if he owns property in that jurisdiction, that does not pay a higher rate of taxation upon it than any citizen of the District of Columbia pays upon his property. I live in a village in the State of North Carolina, a State whose taxes are possibly as low or lower than the average of the States in this Union. I live in a village of less than 1,000 people, and I pay more taxes, twice over, than are paid in the District of Columbia by any citizen in it, because I pay not only a tax upon the property that I own for the purposes of that village, but I am assessed, as are you, for the maintenance of your county and the maintenance of your State. And the tax rate in the State of North Carolina amounts to more than 2 per cent for a man who has a municipal tax to pay. I state there is not a gentleman here who has a less rate than 2 per cent, and usually on the full valuation. And yet in the District of Columbia, living here with all the advantages that have come because of the presence of the National Capital, with numbers of advantages that do not exist in most cities, at least—and I own a piece of property in the District of Columbia, and know what I am talking about—their property is assessed at about two-thirds of its value and at 15 mills, which amounts to what Judge PROUTY has said, that I am paying 10 mills, or $1, whereas in my State, or in my home, I pay more than $2. And so do you. And yet I am taxed at the rate of 20 mills to help conduct the affairs of the District of Columbia, whose citizenship pays 10 mills. And even at this extremely low rate of taxation, with only tangible property placed upon the tax books, they are raising now more money than can be wisely expended under the present law. And it is high time that there was inaugurated some other system by which we should levy taxes and administer the affairs of this District.

I am not one of those who would contend that there is no obligation upon the General Treasury, upon the National Government, for the maintenance of this District. On the other hand, I contend that we have an obligation that we should discharge. I do not believe that it can be measured by any per cent. I have never believed that any man could justify by the matter of percentages the obligations of the National Government to its Capital. It is a matter merely of the needs and not of percentages. I stand here and say unreservedly that when taxes, levied in the proper amount and at the proper rate upon the property of the citizens of the District of Columbia, are raised and exhausted, whatever amount it may be, it is the duty of this Congress and of the National Government to supplement that sum in whatever amount is necessary for the proper conduct of this District. I do not care whether it is 25 per cent or whether, in an emergency, it might be 75 per cent. It is not a matter to be measured by percentages, but, as I said awhile ago, by the necessities that exist for the expenditure of money. And I think it is a simple matter to arrange, and that it is high time that it was arranged.

I hope that the membership of this committee will lend us their aid in the quick passage of the bill under consideration. I want to say for myself, and I imagine I speak for every Member of this House, that we want to finish these appropriation bills, and, unless we do, our expectation of going home on the 4th day of March and staying there will be thwarted. There is but one way, and that is to diligently keep at work upon these bills. I hope that this committee may have the cooperation of every Member in the House in the dispatch of this bill. [Applause.]

The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That one half of the following sums, respectively, is appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and the other half, out of the revenues of the District of Columbia, in full for the following expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, namely:

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment:

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, on page 1, by striking out the words "one half of," in line 3; and the words "out of the money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and the other half out of the revenues of the District of Columbia," in lines 4, 5, and 6; and the word "namely," in line 9, all on page 1, and insert the following as an amendment thereto: "That all moneys appropriated for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia shall be paid out of the revenues of said District to the extent that they are available, and the balance shall be paid out of money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, but the amount to be paid from the Treasury of the United States shall in no event be as much as one-half of said expenses, and all laws in conflict herewith are hereby repealed."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the provision.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] reserves a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. I would like to have some explanation of the amendment before withdrawing the reservation or insisting on the point.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, the explanation of it simply is this: Under the provisions of my amendment all of the money raised by the District of Columbia from taxation and privileges would be first expended; then, whatever balance was necessary after that, in order to meet the expenses of the District Government, will be paid out of the Federal Treasury, not to exceed one-half.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kentucky yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I do.

Mr. FOSTER. I did not understand that the gentleman's amendment cuts out the language "in full for the following expenses."

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. It was not so intended.

Mr. FOSTER. I thought it did. It ought not to do that.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the Clerk again report the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will ask, Mr. Chairman, that the Clerk report the paragraph as it would read if amended.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the paragraph as it would read if the amendment were adopted.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that the word "and" be inserted, so that it will read correctly.

The Clerk read as follows:

And that the following sums——

Mr. FITZGERALD. There should be no "and" there.

Mr. BORLAND. "And" follows the word "sixteen," in line 8.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the following sums, respectively, are appropriated in full for the following expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916: That all moneys appropriated for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia shall be paid out of the revenues of said District to the extent that they are available, and the balance shall be paid out of money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, but the amount to be paid from the Treasury of the United States shall in no event be as much as one-half of said expenses, and all laws in conflict herewith are hereby repealed.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I wish to inquire of the chairman of the committee whether this is not, in substance, section 8, which was passed last year, with a limitation that the one-half provision that the National Government shall be paid is to be operative?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I will say to the gentleman that this proposition is very different, indeed, from the proposition submitted a year ago in section 8. Section 8, if the gentleman will remember, provided that the surplus of District revenues should be converted into the Treasury to the credit of miscellaneous receipts. This proposes to expend entirely the receipts of the District revenue supplemented in whatever amount may be necessary in the proper conduct of the District, not to exceed an equal amount, from the National Treasury.

Mr. STAFFORD. The effect on the taxpayers of the District would be the same; instead of the surplus money being turned into miscellaneous receipts, they would go to the respective appropriations.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. They would get the benefit of all the taxes under this provision that they pay, whereas under the other provision a certain amount of the taxes might be turned into the Treasury. I think there is a considerable difference.

Mr. STAFFORD. I think it is largely a question of bookkeeping.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, evidently the amendment was not reported the way the gentleman desires it to read. I suppose the gentleman wants it to read: "The following sums, respectively, are appropriated."

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The word "is" ought to be changed to "are."

Mr. FITZGERALD. The word "is" should be changed to "are," and I suggest to the gentleman that that be done.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the word "is" in the printed bill be changed to "are."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it will be so changed. There was no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my reservation of the point of order.

Mr. MANN. I renew the point of order. The gentleman from Kentucky has not yet stated that he has any authority from the committee to offer the amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I do not concede that that is necessary; but, to be on the safe side, I want to say that the following resolution was adopted by the committee when this matter was under consideration by the committee.

At a meeting of the committee on the District of Columbia, held on the 9th day of December, 1914, H. R. 19547 having been called up for consideration the following resolution was adopted, to wit:

Be it resolved by the committee that H. R. 19547 be reported to the House with the expression of opinion that it should pass when amended by striking out the word "exceed," in line 9, and inserting in lieu thereof the words "be as much as"; and further, that said bill as amended by the committee, or the substance thereof when put into the form of an amendment, be offered as an amendment to H. R. 19422 while said bill No. 19422 is being considered in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union or in the House.

Mr. MANN. I concede that that authority of the committee would authorize the gentleman from Kentucky to offer that proposition to this bill under the Holman rule, if it was offered and is germane, but that is not the proposition that has been offered. That is entirely distinct from the proposition now presented.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. There is no difference. The bill H. R. 19547, a copy of which I send to the Clerk's desk, and which I will insert in the RECORD, was before the committee for consideration. That House bill, in its exact form, could not be offered as an amendment, and therefore the committee adopted the resolution that that bill, or the substance of it, when put into a resolution which would fit the District appropriation bill, should be offered as an amendment. Under the Holman rule the report of a committee having jurisdiction of the matter, or of a commission to which has been referred the consideration of a matter to make a report to the House, upon that report the matter would become eligible as an amendment to the bill. Now, a commission could do nothing more than to make a suggestion; but the substance of this bill has been offered in this amendment, and the resolution covers that very situation.

The bill reads as follows:

A bill (H. R. 19547) to provide for the manner of paying the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia.

Be it enacted, etc., That all moneys appropriated for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia shall be paid out of the revenues of said District to the extent that they are available, and the balance shall be paid out of the money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, but the amount to be paid from the Treasury of the United States shall in no event be as much as one-half of said expenses.

SEC. 2. That all laws in conflict herewith are hereby repealed.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Kentucky says that the amendment which he has offered is in substance the bill which the committee authorized him to report. If that be the case, the amendment is not in order. The paragraph under consideration just read simply makes an appropriation of the sum thereafter named, and provides the funds out of which they shall be paid. We ordinarily make an appropriation of so many dollars out of any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated. That is a mere definition of the funds in the Treasury out of which the appropriation is to be paid.

I concede that under the authority granted by the committee the gentleman probably might offer an amendment changing the fund out of which this appropriation is to be paid, but that is not the amendment which has been offered. The only provision in this paragraph in relation to the appropriation made in this bill for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, while the gentleman's amendment seeks, under pretext of amending this provision, to amend the law for all time, or until it shall be changed hereafter. That amendment is not germane to this provision of the bill. The gentleman might offer an amendment, I think, under the action of his committee fixing the fund in accordance with the action of the committee out of which this appropriation for the fiscal year 1916 is to be paid, but it is not a germane amendment to seek to hang onto this provision a provision changing the law or repealing existing law. He has endeavored to go too far, Mr. Chairman. It is perfectly patent to the Chair and every one else that where you have a provision appropriating $10,000 out of funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated that you could not hang onto that a provision repealing law or changing law or adding new law which does not relate to it. It would not be germane. The only provision in this bill is in reference to the appropriations or the sums carried in this bill for the fiscal year named, and it is not in order as a matter of germaneness to seek to repeal law or change law relating to other years.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Chairman, I ask the indulgence of the Chair to say just a few words upon this point of order. The proposer of the amendment, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON], in his statement to the Chair said that he did not concede that this amendment would not be in order offered in his individual capacity, without any authority from the committee, and in what I shall say to the Chair I shall take the position that this amendment would be in order, offered by an individual Member from the floor, without any authority from the committee having jurisdiction of the legislative subject. What is the rule? Rule XXI provides that an amendment proposing legislation on an appropriation bill is in order under certain contingencies, and one of those contingencies is by the reduction of the amount of money appropriated in the bill. This amendment seeks to repeal the act of 1878, which commits the Government to contributing one-half of the amount expended for maintaining the government of the District of Columbia. What does this amendment seek to do? It seeks to repeal that, and as it is certainly germane the question follows, Does this amendment reduce the amount covered by the bill? If the Chair will notice this amendment, he will see that it repeals the act of 1878, and provides that in no event shall the amount appropriated out of the Treasury of the United States for the District government equal one-half of the amount appropriated for the District of Columbia. Therefore it is bound to reduce the amount that the Government of the United States contributes to the support and maintenance of the government of the District of Columbia. Clearly, it does reduce the amount covered by the bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRISP. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Georgia was, I think, absent on account of illness last year?

Mr. CRISP. Yes.

Mr. MANN. The Chair ruled on two or three occasions that an amendment substantially like this was a reduction or retrenchment of expenditures, although it did not even limit it to less than one-half. The argument was made by some of us that it was uncertain whether it was a retrenchment of expenditures. Two or three chairmen—two at least, I am sure—on substantially the same thing ruled, and I think that would be the settled construction in the House now, that it was, even if that limitation had not been placed upon it.

Mr. CRISP. As I understood and caught the reading of the amendment, it provided that in no case should the amount appropriated from the Treasury of the United States be as much as one-half.

Mr. MANN. I understand, and I suppose the gentleman did catch the amendment. I have no doubt that he prepared that part of it, but I say, irrespective of that, I think the Chair ruled twice last year, so far as that point is concerned, it would be in order.

Mr. CRISP. As the gentleman from Illinois states, I was not here last year on account of a very serious and protracted illness, and I am not familiar with the decisions referred to. But I do desire to call the attention of the Chair to an analogous case and a decision based upon this very proposition. This was a decision made in the Fifty-second Congress, based on this Holman rule, and the language of the rule, so far as this is concerned, is identical with what it is to-day. In that Congress the late Mr. De Armond, of Missouri, moved to recommit the District of Columbia appropriation bill to the Committee on Appropriations, with instructions to report it back reducing the amount or proportion that the Government of the United States was to pay toward the maintenance of the government of the District of Columbia. The point of order was made that that amendment was legislation and not in order on an appropriation bill. The Chair held that it was, and, with the indulgence of the Chair, I will read the decision. I read from page 361 of the Manual, under Rule XXI, section 825:

> Question being on the passage of the District of Columbia appropriation bill, a motion to recommit with instructions to reduce the proportion of the fund appropriated from the Public Treasury from one-half, as provided in the bill, to one-fourth of the entire appropriation is in order, since the effect of the amendment, if adopted, would reduce the expenditure of public money, although not reducing the amount of the appropriation.

Mr. Chairman, I respectfully contend that this amendment repeals the act of 1878, and it necessarily reduces the amount of money appropriated from the public funds of the Treasury of the United States for the maintenance of the District of Columbia, because under the amendment the amount appropriated from the United States funds can in no case be as much as one-half of the total amount of the bill, as the present law requires. Therefore, in my opinion, the amendment offered by an individual Member from the floor without authority from the committee having legislative jurisdiction of the subject is clearly in order under the Holman rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that there is but one question in this, and that is the question of germaneness. The Chair will resolve that in favor of the amendment and hold that it is in order. The Chair, therefore, overrules the point of order. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MANN. Mr Chairman, does the gentleman from North Carolina expect to have a vote on this amendment to-night?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I would like very much if we could reach a vote on this amendment, if we can reach an agreement as to the time for discussion under the five-minute rule. How much time does the gentleman from Illinois desire?

Mr. MANN. I will not want much time, as far as I am concerned.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Oh, I think before 6 o'clock we can determine this matter and reach a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can determine it right now by the Chair putting the question.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. As far as the chairman of the committee is concerned, I do not desire any time, and I am ready to vote, but I do not know about gentlemen around me.

Mr. MANN. My observation is that gentlemen who do not desire any time to begin with usually want time before they get through.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I will admit that something may be said that might provoke me to consume some time, but at present I have no intention of consuming the time of the committee.

Mr. OGLESBY. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. OGLESBY. Is it not a fact that this amendment involves the repeal of the half-and-half proposition?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. In my opinion it repeals it, but it only repeals it for the year for which this appropriation is made. There may be some difference of opinion about that, but it certainly repeals it as far as this appropriation goes.

Mr. OGLESBY. Does the gentleman think a discussion and settlement of that proposition can be had between now and 6 o'clock?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Oh, I think it could. How much time would the gentleman like to have to discuss it? We are trying to find that out.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman will realize that there is no quorum present, and if somebody should insist on a quorum——

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Oh, if some gentleman wants people here to hear him he can force me to desist now.

Mr. MANN. That is not the point. Undoubtedly one side or the other would want a quorum when it comes to a vote.

Mr. MONDELL. My suggestion was that a quorum would be insisted on.

Mr. MANN. Would it not be the wisest thing now to see if we can not agree upon a time for debate, and then let it go over until to-morrow, because you do not want to finish debate to-night.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Unless there is an indication of a desire for time, which has not manifested itself so far, I would make the proposition that debate could be concluded on this amendment in 30 minutes.

Mr. BORLAND. Will the chairman of the committee allow me to make a suggestion?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BORLAND. Why would it not be better to proceed with the reading of the bill and let this matter go over until after the other paragraphs are concluded?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I do not think we would be in any better condition then, I will say to the gentleman, because we would have to go through the same performance when possibly we might have less people here than now.

Mr. MANN. I suggest this to the gentleman: It is quite certain the gentleman would have to have a quorum in the House, and I expect he could get them to-night at the time of the vote. Now, I have discovered that it is not wise to finish a debate on a proposition at night and then start in and vote the first thing in the morning. Let us agree upon a time for debate to-night and then quit until to-morrow.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. What does the gentleman suggest?

Mr. MANN. I was trying to find out from people how much time they wanted. As far as I am concerned I do not want much time. Who wants time?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, in view——

Mr. MANN. I would be willing to make it 30 minutes on a side. That is a very reasonable debate.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I am willing to accept that on this amendment. I realize that it is a matter of some importance to some gentlemen in the House and of some importance to the District, and if 30 minutes be consumed to-night then I will make the motion that the committee rise.

Mr. MANN. But we do not want to go ahead now.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Then, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. MANN. Let us fix the time if we are going to do so.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto be concluded in one hour—one half of the time to be controlled by myself and the other half by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in one hour—one-half of the time to be controlled by himself and one-half by the gentleman from Minnesota. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GARNER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that the committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 19422, the District of Columbia appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. DRUKKER, indefinitely, on account of illness in his family.

To Mr. BALTZ, on account of the death of his brother.

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock a. m. to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock a. m. to-morrow. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 22 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, December 11, 1914, at 12 o'clock noon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed and the calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

MILITARY RESERVE.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, in accordance with the notice which was previously given by my colleague [Mr. LODGE], I propose to address the Senate on the subject of a military reserve.

It is natural that when most of the civilized world is engaged in warfare that there should be solicitude and inquiry on the part of our citizens as to our means to defend ourselves in case of necessity. We have been spending large amounts of money on account of previous wars and to maintain the reasonable but very modest organizations which go to make up our Army and Navy. At this time it does not seem to me that it is wise or prudent to take any action which will change our policy or add to our naval equipment except by an omnibus appropriation which can be expended under the direction of the general board of the Navy with the approval of the Secretary of the Navy and the President.

The European war will undoubtedly demonstrate very many things which have been subjects of controversy in the immediate past. We know even now that while flying machines have not proven important destructive agencies, that they have easily demonstrated that they are of the greatest importance and value as scouts both on land and sea.

For many years there has been doubt and controversy about the value of the submarine. Even at this time we may feel confident that the submarine has demonstrated that it is an extremely important agency in the defense of a harbor or for aggressive action against hostile vessels near the home port or coast of the submarine.

We do not know how important the battleship is going to be in future warfare, but it has certainly been demonstrated that the very fast cruiser armed with a few high-powered guns is going to exert a marked influence in any future war.

The character of naval material development in the future must regulate the number of personnel required; and therefore at this time I have no disposition to discuss even that phase of our naval situation, except to say that, based on the experience of the past, our Naval Establishment is in a class with that of Germany and France and probably second only to that of Great Britain. The effectiveness of the Navy is going to depend on the quality of the personnel and the spirit which it displays. In this respect I am confident that no Navy excels our own. Having some familiarity with its personnel during the past 35 years, I think I can say with confidence that from the standpoint of efficiency it has never stood higher than at the present time.

On the other hand, it has been apparent to nearly everyone familiar with our needs that our military establishment could be greatly strengthened without materially increasing its cost. We have a large number of men who leave the Regular Establishment after serving one enlistment or who leave the militia under similar conditions or those who are connected with schools and colleges where military training is undertaken, all of whom might be combined into a military reserve which would be of vital importance and assistance to our relatively small Army. I hope, as do all citizens of the United States, that when this war is ended nations will see the folly of maintaining such great military establishments as European countries have done and that a general agreement may be made which will provide for at least a partial disarmament and result in a limitation to expenditures for military purposes. This war should be conclusive enough to show the folly of following the course of the past, and if it results in so doing it will not be necessary for us to increase our military establishment in any form and we may not find it necessary to increase the Naval Establishment which we are now maintaining. That may be an idle dream, but the prayers of every good American citizen should be that this may be the last of the great wars which are going to involve civilized countries, and that reason—along the lines of arbitration, consideration for the rights of others, compromises, and so forth—may adjust the causes which have led to all wars, including the present one. However, such a result may not be obtained, and it is the part of wisdom and duty for us to consider our own condition and what course it will be advisable for us to follow in case peace is made on such terms that a recurrence of military upbuilding is to take place in Europe.

There seems to be a disposition in the press, at least, to urge publicity and a thorough examination of our condition. There is, however, little force in these suggestions. Anyone may learn about our Military or Naval Establishment by reading the reports of the Secretaries of the departments and the reports of those who are conducting the different bureaus and branches of the service. It is an open book to all citizens, and there need be no doubt about our relative position or our capabilities if one is disposed to study reports. In fact, there is and has been altogether too much publicity in such matter, in my judgment. We have had a demonstration during the present European war of the value of secrecy in conducting military operations, and there is no reason why we should spread broadcast what we are doing or what preparations we have made. I have no doubt every European country is informed in the most minute detail of our condition both on land and sea, and if any change in our methods is to be made it should not be in the direction of greater publicity, but should be to protect our operations even in time of peace from scrutiny both at home and abroad.

There has been one other requirement clearly brought out by the European war which to my mind was conclusive before existing hostilities, but it has finally been given a demonstration which must convince anyone interested in the subject, and that is the necessity of providing more officers in proportion to our military forces authorized or under enlistment. It is reported that one-sixth of the English officers who have gone to the front have been disabled, and presumably most of the competent officers of Great Britain are already engaged, so that in providing the large number of men which are now being equipped and trained for service the question of officers is of vital importance.

We should without any delay graduate from West Point at least twice as many cadets as are now being graduated, not by lowering the standard but by increasing the number of appointments. It would be an excellent investment for the country even if we are not likely to be engaged in a war for many years, because a large percentage of the graduates could be put on a reserve list as soon as they had left the Military Academy, and as such they could become connected with the existing militia organizations and greatly improve their standing and efficiency.

Our first line of defense under present conditions is our militia, which varies greatly in efficiency in different States, depending on the support which it receives.

The poet Crabbe said many years ago, after viewing an encampment of the English militia:

> And raw in fields the rude militia swarms,
> In peace a charge, in war a weak defense.

In justice to the militia it should be said it is infinitely more reliable in these days than in those to which I have just made reference, and I think it is fair to say that the militia forces of the United States were never as efficient as they are to-day; but even under the best conditions it takes time and effort to get a militia force into the field, as is demonstrated by the many weeks which have been required by Great Britain in forwarding its territorials to the battle front, and while our position would give us greater time to prepare for attack than that of European countries, we should develop the auxiliary military forces so that in case of need we would have available a large army of partially seasoned men. I know there are those who will say this will develop a military spirit and that it may be the reason for our getting ourselves involved in hostilities. I do not think that reasoning is sound, and I am confident that the young man who has had a military training in school, in the militia, or in a reserve is a better citizen and a more efficient citizen than he would have been if he had never had such training. I have followed such activities with a great deal of interest for many years, and my conclusion is that among the best elements that go to make up our active life are regularity, good health, and discipline, all of which are developed and increased by even a minimum military training, always assuming that this experience is obtained under the direction of competent officers.

It is my purpose at this time to discuss some phases of a military reserve. My reason for doing this, however, is not entirely because of the war which is now embroiling most of Europe, for I had partially prepared this statement before the war commenced.

I have not arrived at these conclusions without consultation with many of the universally recognized competent and up-to-date officers of our Army, so that these ideas, it seems to me, are entitled to the consideration of the Military Committees and might well serve as a basis for legislation.

It is contended with much force that development and commercial expansion will be resisted by other nations; that national policies which are injurious to the interests of other nations will be resisted by the nations adversely affected; that there are certain vital questions affecting the honor or life of a nation which neither diplomacy nor international courts can settle; and that in the future, as in the past, every nation which would live and grow may be called upon to fight.

There are even those who proclaim that force will ever cease to be a potent factor of national life is a Utopian dream; that while man is virile and nations develop and increase in power and wealth there will be wars. Such people claim that the history of a nation is written in the history of its armies and navies; that as long as these are sufficient to enforce its policies the nation grows.

If these theories are sound, it follows that when a nation refuses to make the sacrifices which are needed to develop its military resources into an adequate defense, and to maintain this development ever potent, it drops into insignificance and finally dies.

The founders of this Nation evidently believed that national defense is one of the cardinal duties of statesmen, and the Constitution provided that Congress should give the Nation this defense.

Gen. Richard Henry Lee, who commanded the Partisan Legion in the Revolution, said:

> A government is the murderer of its citizens which sends them to the field uninformed and untaught, where they are to meet men of the same age and strength mechanized by education and disciplined for battle.

We had a good example of the results of assembling large forces of untrained men under officers of insufficient experience in the hospital and death rolls of the Spanish-American War.

A large body of untrained and unorganized men aggregated together has manifestly no chance of success against a modern army, and a nation which pins its faith upon this sort of defense is courting certain disaster on the field of battle.

If a nation attempts to develop its military resources at all it must provide an army and navy entirely adequate for its defense, for if it stops short of this and spends large sums in developing and maintaining an army or navy which has not a reasonable chance of success against a probable foe the moneys so spent are wasted.

Quoting from the report of the Chief of Staff, 1912:

> An army is an expensive machine maintained in order to support national interests in time of emergency. The economic efficiency of an army should therefore be measured by the effective fighting power which it is proposed to develop and maintain in war. It must not only be able to develop a high fighting efficiency at the outbreak of war, but it must be able to maintain that efficiency during the progress of the campaign. As soon as war begins military forces are subject to heavy losses, and unless means are definitely provided for replacing these losses the military machine will immediately deteriorate.
> It is the experience of modern warfare that any given unit loses 50 per cent of its strength in the first six months of war. If this loss is not replaced, there is 50 per cent deterioration in the power of the unit, and if it is replaced by raw men the quality of the force as a highly trained team is destroyed.
> This problem has an important economic aspect that has been ignored throughout our military history. Military forces are maintained at great expense through long periods of peace in order to meet a brief emergency in war. Sound economics therefore demands that the peace expenditure be justified by unquestioned war efficiency.

There may be differences of opinion concerning the size of the army which a nation must support, but there are no differences among experts concerning the organization of the army and the manner in which it can be most economically and effectually maintained.

The following figures give for 1912 the population of the more important foreign nations, the peace strength of their armies, and the strength of trained men of the great reserves which make and keep effective in war the armies they maintain in peace:

	Population.	Strength of Army—peace.	Reserves.
France	39,600,000	536,000	3,000,000
Germany	64,900,000	566,000	4,700,000

Italy	34,700,000	211,000	1,500,000
Japan	51,600,000	183,000	1,300,000
Great Britain	45,300,000	206,000	215,000

[1] Regulars. [2] Militia.

The above-named countries have trained and available for service in war—France, 1 man in every 10.7 of population; Germany, 1 man in every 11.7 of population; Austria, 1 man in every 12.4 of population; Russia, 1 man in every 18.2 of population; Italy, 1 man in every 18.5 of population; Japan, 1 man in every 40.8 of population; Great Britain, 1 man in every 103.3 of population; United States, 1 man in every 511 of population.

In all of these countries except England the reservists are unpaid, because such countries believe that there are sufficient economic advantages to the Nation to justify a general military education to its youth, and consequently military service is compulsory. In England, on the other hand, enlistment is voluntary, and accordingly she pays her reservists, as must necessarily any country in which compulsory service does not exist.

In France the liability to serving extends from 20 to 45 years of the citizen's age. Service with the colors is compulsory, and, until recently, was two years for all arms. After serving with the colors the men pass into the reserve of the active army, in which they serve for 11 years, during which time they are subject to two periods of instruction, one for 23 days and the other for 17 days. From the reserve of the active army the men pass to the territorial army, in which they serve for six years, subject to one period of seven days' instruction. The final service is with the reserve of the territorial army, and this service is for six years, the men receiving no training, but are subject to muster.

In Germany the service is compulsory, and liability extends from 17 to 45 years of the citizen's age. Until recently service with the colors was three years with the cavalry and horse artillery and two years for the other arms. After serving with the colors the men pass into the reserve, in which they serve 4 years and 6 months or 5 years and 6 months, according to the arms of the service. During their service in this reserve the majority of the men are seldom held longer than for a 20-day period of instruction.

Great Britain, Sweden, Norway, and Switzerland are confronted with conditions similar to our own. They are opposed to compulsory service, but the soldiers they have trained become a part of their developed military strength.

In three days Switzerland mobilized 200,000 perfectly equipped fighting men, most of whom are fair shots and all of whom are accustomed to using the army rifle. At the end of three days these four army corps were ready in every particular of organization, equipment, and transport to march against an enemy. In addition to this force, she can form a reserve of 300,000 men, part of whom have served their time with the active army and 50,000 of whom are always armed. In 1908 Switzerland had about 3,559,000 inhabitants; in 1910 the United States had more than 92,000,000. In 1910 Switzerland spent approximately $8,099,765 for her military establishment; in 1909–10 the United States military establishment cost $101,262,069; in other words, Switzerland is paying about two and a half times as much per capita as we are to maintain her military establishment.

With the exception of the United States, every great nation of the world has appreciated the fact that a certain class of its citizens must, while young, be trained in the use of arms at a minimum expense to the nation and, as soon as trained, passed into a great reserve where they can in peace pursue their ordinary occupations, and yet from which they may be taken with certainty in time of war and used as part of the effective defense of their country.

The United States is the only nation of any prominence which has no scientific means of developing economically and maintaining efficiently its military resources.

There are two questions which are of importance to any nation supporting an army: First. Is the army of such a size and organization as will make it reasonably effective against a probable foe? If it will not furnish the defense expected, the nation will be defeated in war, and the machine is worthless and remains worthless until so organized and brought to such strength as will give the desired and expected defense. Second. Is the army maintained at the minimum cost and maximum efficiency?

The military experts of this country and of all other countries where adequate defense is provided are a unit in saying that this can best be done by establishing and maintaining a system of reserves.

In considering, then, the question of interest to this Nation in appropriating moneys for the Army, we naturally turn first to the size of the army which the country needs. The War Department states that this country will need in war a force of 500,000 regulars and militia and from 100,000 to 200,000 volunteers.

The following facts are taken from Upton's Military Policy of the United States—F. L. Huidekoper's book:

Never in our history have we been thoroughly prepared for war. To employ untrained personnel is always dangerous and very expensive.

In the Revolution we used 231,771 regulars and 164,007 militia and volunteers against England's 150,605.

In the War of 1812 we had 56,032 regulars and 471,622 militia against the English and Canadian forces of only about 55,000 men.

In the Mexican War 31,024 regulars and 73,532 militia were required to conquer about 46,000 Mexicans.

In the Civil War the United States employed 67,000 regulars and 2,605,341 militia and volunteers to defeat about 1,000,000 Confederates.

In the Spanish-American War we were compelled to use 58,688 regulars and 223,235 militia or volunteers to subdue 200,000 Spaniards.

How many Americans have any conception of the outrageous extravagance in men and money that has characterized our past wars? How long would any properly run corporation or company tolerate any such mismanagement?

From 1791 to 1911 our War Department has cost $6,845,129,239 and the pensions $4,115,829,223.

And this vast sum for pensions is due principally to the same causes which have made us always unsuccessful in our wars—short term of service and untrained volunteers, hastily raised, badly officered, and badly supplied.

As the Nation has decided that the Organized Militia is to form part of its developed military defense, the War Department has included the militia as part of the 500,000 men considered necessary for the first line of defense. Judging from the records of our past wars, as given above, the 500,000 men will be none too many.

The second point to be considered is: How shall the Army determined upon be organized so that it may have the greatest efficiency as a fighting machine at the minimum of cost? In this organization the military experts of all countries are again unanimous.

The organization of divisions and other higher military units is based on the principle that the Army, to be an effective fighting machine, must be proportioned in accordance with its tactical, its sanitary, and its supply needs, and that all units required in war must be organized in peace. It is too late after a fire breaks out to start to organize a fire department, and the same principle applies to an army.

The infantry division is differently organized in different countries, but in all it consists of from 10,000 to 15,000 men armed with rifles, with from 4 to 6 field guns per 1,000 rifles, and with similar definite proportions of cavalry, engineers, signal troops, sanitary troops, and other auxiliaries. The infantry strength is the basis of organization, because it is the cheapest of all the arms to organize and equip and the easiest to obtain, train, and supply. (One thousand cavalry costs to equip and organize about four times what it costs to equip and organize 1,000 infantry, and a battery of light artillery costs about twice as much to equip and organize as 1,000 infantry.)

In every army except our own the number of infantrymen in the division in war remains definite and fixed, because means of replacing losses are provided in time of peace. With us, however, the infantry strength is an absolute variable. We can only predict that the effective strength of each unit will fall after war begins. Under these conditions the division is not a continuing unit. Its components are fluid and indefinite, and there can be no fixed strength of organizations under such conditions.

Most military men admit that our present Army organization is very bad; the War Department has proposed an organization which conforms to what has been adopted by all other first-class powers, but legislation is required to put it into being.

The developed military resources of the United States, so far as the Army is concerned, consists of the Regular Army and the Organized Militia.

A table showing the authorized strength of the Regular Army follows.

[1] Under the act of Congress approved Aug. 24, 1912, the 6,000 authorized enlisted men of the Quartermaster Corps are not to be counted as part of the strength of the Army.
[2] Includes 19 first lieutenants of the Medical Reserve Corps on active duty and 60 dental surgeons.
[3] Under the act of Congress approved Mar. 1, 1887 (24 Stat. L., 435), the enlisted men of the Medical Department (Hospital Corps) are not to be counted as part of the strength of the Army. The authorized strength of the Hospital Corps is 3,500 enlisted men.

The Regular Army out of the country can not be considered as available for national defense against invasion; nor can the coast artillerymen in the country be regarded as an available part of the mobile defense, for they, and many more besides, will be needed in the seacoast defenses.

The President, under existing laws, can increase the enlisted strength of the Army to 100,000 men, but he can not increase or change the existing number of organizations.

The Regular Army in this country available for mobile defense consists of 31,500 men, including about 10,000 cavalry; and there are no available trained men to expand it to its fighting efficiency in case of war, and this organization is declared to be defective by all military experts.

The Organized Militia in the country available for mobile defense consists of about 104,000 enlisted men, without any available trained men to expand it to its war strength. This force is badly organized tactically and composed largely of men who have less than one year's service, and those who have had one year's service have been given, on an average, not much more than 48 hours instruction per year in their armories and, perhaps, a couple of weeks in camp. If the military experts are right that the country needs a force of 500,000 trained men supplemented by from 100,000 to 200,000 volunteers to give it a reasonable chance of protection against a probable foe, and that the 500,000 men will be needed at once on the outbreak of war—organized as fighting machines—it would appear that the defense provided at present by Congress is inadequate and practically worthless, and that the moneys spent upon this defense are largely wasted.

The following tables show the organization of the Organized Militia and the Regular Army and the strength of each arm in peace and war. The tables are elaborate and I will not take the time to read them, but will ask unanimous consent that they be incorporated in my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, it is so ordered.

The tables referred to are as follows:

[1] Does not include 1 regiment in Alaska and 2 regiments now in United States but scheduled for service in Hawaii and Panama.
[2] The figures shown in this line are not included in totals, the tactical organization being admittedly faulty.
[3] Figures shown in this line show tactical organization of a Cavalry force of approximately the enlisted strength now in United States if organized into 2 Cavalry divisions of 2 brigades of 2 regiments of 6 squadrons of 4 officers and 150 men each.
[4] Three unmounted battalions of 501 men and 2 mounted battalions of 309 men.

[6] Present authorized strength of Hospital Corps equals 3,500 enlisted men. Actual strength is 590 officers (including 85 Medical Reserve Corps on active duty and 60 dental surgeons). Total strength Hospital Corps needed for 3 divisions and 2 Cavalry divisions (this includes, in addition to the number given in table, all the personnel on duty with troops) equals 477 officers and 3,743 men, leaving to increase to war strength 32 officers and 243 men.
[7] When sufficient reserves are accumulated, peace strength of all regular organizations, except Infantry, can be materialy decreased in horses and men at great saving, and in column 6 the enlisted strength increased proportionately.

Mr. WEEKS. The table for the Regular Army shows that to properly organize it into three divisions will require an addition of 8 Infantry regiments, 4½ regiments of Field Artillery or its equivalent in battalions, 3 battalions of Engineers, 1½ battalions of signal troops, 13 ambulance companies, and 13 field hospitals, or an increase of 333 officers and 13,066 men, of which the President can now supply about 10,000 enlisted men.

The peace strength of the Regular mobile army in the United States could then be held at about 2,300 officers and 42,000 enlisted men; and when trained reservists are provided, the strength of the enlisted men serving with the colors in many of the organizations could be materially reduced. For instance, in the Field Artillery at present—because there are no trained reservists, and because the organizations in the Regular Army are so exceedingly below what is necessary for an efficient army—the existing batteries are perforce held at nearly war strength of men and horses. Even this expensive expedient will not make the Field Artillery effective in case of need, because many of the officers and trained men will be, in war, at once diverted from the batteries to form ammunition and supply batteries, as at present none of these are organized.

When a properly trained reserve is provided and the organizations all organized, the number of men in each battery could be reduced from 133 to about 70 and the horses reduced by nearly one-half. The saving in pay of the men alone would give 560 reservists per battery, or two such regiments could be provided for about one-third more than one regiment now costs. The same can be done with the Cavalry, at great saving in pay of men and cost of horses and their feed. As 1,000 Cavalry costs in equipment about four times what it costs to equip 1,000 Infantry, and as a battery of Field Artillery costs about twice as much as 1,000 Infantry, it is important to hold these arms at the minimum enlisted strength; but until trained reservists are available and until all units needed in war are organized, this can not be done. These expensive arms must be kept at nearly war strength—a very costly, uneconomic, and unwise policy.

There are many reasons, however, why these organizations should not be kept in peace at their maximum strength of privates, provided any means can be devised by which the soldier when he is once trained can be passed to a different status, where he does not cost so much to maintain as with the colors, and yet from which he can be surely and promptly returned thereto in case of war. With the exception of the United States and China, all foreign first-class nations have such a scheme—a reserve system.

ECONOMICAL REASONS FOR PROVIDING A RESERVE OF TRAINED MEN.

The cost of maintaining an efficient army is of exceeding interest to any nation, and as business men and the country's representatives we should adopt the methods which will give equal efficiency with the least cost.

There are many charges which must be paid for the soldier serving with the colors—his pay, food, clothing, shelter, light, heat, water, medical attendance, and the overhead charges of the War Department, the supply departments, and of his officers, and—with the mounted man—his horse and its forage. Leaving out all of these charges except the first three, which are fixed and can not be reduced in this country, we find that the monthly average pay is $17; the food and cooking, $7; clothing, $3.20; total, $27.20 per month, or $326.40 per year.

Counting all the expenses of the soldier serving with the colors—that is, overhead charges of the various departments, pay of officers, shelter, heat, light, medical attendance, cost of maintaining the expensive posts, transportation, wear of equipment, clothing, pay, food, and so forth—he will, with the present sized Army, cost probably $600 a year.

It is believed that men can be held in the reserve at from $36 to $40 per year. We can keep, then, in the reserve eight men for the same cost as one man can be kept with the colors, counting only his pay, food, and clothing.

From cost alone the enlisted men serving with the colors are then kept at the minimum, and as soon as they are trained they are passed to the reserve which, in most foreign nations, is composed of several classes. The first class is used to bring existing units from their economical peace to their effective war strength. The second class is used to supply the wastage of active campaign and to furnish troops for depots, supply columns, and so forth.

No nation is rich enough to keep with the colors in peace all of the men she needs as an adequate defense against a probable foe; and, even if it could afford to keep such a professional army, it would be inadvisable to do so.

First. Because these professional soldiers would yearly cost the Government more and more money by continuous service and reenlisted additional pay, and after passing their prime of life would deteriorate as soldiers and finally pass to the retired list, where, while they are worthless as a part of the developed military resource, they yet cost the Government the price of a great many young reservists. After 30 years' service an enlisted man is entitled to retirement at three-fourths of the monthly pay allowed by law in the grade he holds when retired. He is paid $9.50 per month additional as commutation for clothing and subsistence and $6.25 per month additional in lieu of quarters, fuel, and light. Most of these men retire as sergeants or with higher grade. The number of men now on the retired list is 3,589. According to data received from the Quartermaster Corps, these men receive pay of approximately $2,440,520, or each man costs the Government $680 per year. While I believe that the enlisted man who has served faithfully should be retired and sufficiently well paid to keep him from want, still it appears that the Government has made every effort to induce the enlisted man to reenlist and become a professional or to remain in the service during his active life. This is an expensive and bad policy.

Second. Because after the man is once trained and disciplined there is no advantage to the Government in keeping him in active service. An expensive and uneconomical method is being followed if the soldier is retained in active service (at a yearly cost of $326) a day over the time necessary to train him and pass him to the reserve where he can be held at a yearly cost of $40, and where he is in case of war just as valuable a military asset as the man serving with the colors, provided laws are passed which will keep track of the reservist in peace and compel his certain and prompt return to the colors in case of war or upon call by the President.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator, then, whether he advocates conscription?

Mr. WEEKS. Not at all.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator proposes to continue the present voluntary system, and limit the man's service in the Army. What will retain the man after he has retired from active service?

Mr. WEEKS. The pay he receives as a reservist—$40 a year, or thereabouts.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Does the Senator think that for $40 a year a man can be retained in such a relation to the Government?

Mr. WEEKS. That is my judgment, after considerable personal experience and after consultation with others. We have no trouble in Massachusetts, for instance, in keeping our militia organizations full under the limitations imposed by the law, although they are paid nothing, and although they know the conditions under which they will go into the United States service in case of need. I believe many of the men discharged from the military service will be glad to go into the reserve force, receive the $40 a year, and make themselves liable to call in case of need. They would be the men that would go into active service very largely anyway, and whatever they receive for keeping up their connection with the Army will be so much to the good.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Has the Senator any experience except that militia experience in Massachusetts to justify the belief that for such a trifling sum as $40 a year a man after he retires to private life, and presumably has family relations and business connections, would still hold himself constantly in readiness for service?

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I discuss some phases of the question which the Senator has just asked later in this paper; but nobody can have any actual experience, because there never has been anything just like this. Every country that has a reserve force imposes compulsory service, and we can not tell just exactly what would be the result or how much money would be required to carry it out; but these are the estimates which are made by competent officers, and they accord with my judgment after many years' experience in the regular and militia service.

Mr. LODGE. Do not the English pay their territorials? They have no compulsory service.

Mr. WEEKS. They have no compulsory service. I am not sure whether they pay the territorials or not. I am inclined to think they do make some payment to them.

Mr. LODGE. In that connection, is it not true that these volunteer camps have been in large part composed of men who have gone to the camps in the summer at their own expense?

Mr. WEEKS. Oh, yes; and they very seldom receive any compensation for the service in any form. They take their annual vacation of two weeks and devote substantially all of it to the military service without any compensation whatever.

Third. The time the reservist is serving with the colors takes him away from his wage-earning capacity. It is true that while being trained as a soldier he is also being made worth more commercially by having instilled into him the ideas of discipline, punctuality, and by having developed his sense of responsibility; but, so far as the Government is concerned, when he is trained to take his place in the reserve he should at once be returned to his wage-earning capacity, just as the boy in school or college is withdrawn from labor producing only during the time necessary to make of him a greater wage earner, or, in other words, to fit him to do effectively the class of work which may be demanded of him. The contention, then, that the time men are being trained in the Army is a loss to the Nation because it removes them from productive labor is not any more tenable than would be the claim that it is economically a waste to a nation to send its young men to schools and colleges. The recruit is not only being trained for a service which may be demanded of him by the Nation, but at the same time he is being trained in ways which make him a better wage earner.

Fourth. A short term with the colors will also make the officers and men all work harder, and this will be beneficial to their work and to the Army as a whole, and especially will it tend to develop habits of sustained effort and of industry at work given them to perform.

Fifth. The men sent to war must be young men, and, as far as possible, those having either none or few others depending upon their labor for their support; so men should be taken into the active Army as young as possible, kept there for the shortest time possible, and then passed to the reserve.

This question of reserves is important to every mother and father in the country. If there be no reserve, there will be no body of men to mobilize existing organizations, bringing them to war strength and maintaining them during war at this effective strength, and consequently additional volunteer regiments will have to be called for, for troops must somehow be provided. As in the past, volunteer organizations will be raised; the young boys will join and go to the front. In every war we have ever had these volunteers—green boys under inexperienced officers—will lose from 22 to 28 per cent of their regimental strength in their concentration camp before ever going into a campaign; so a regiment with 800 will in a couple of months have lost 200. In all wars the losses in camp are greater than on the battle field. It will then be ordered to the front and in six months will have lost 40 per cent and be reduced to 360 men, as there are no trained men to supply this wastage; another 800-strength regiment will be raised and go through the same losses, while the officers and men are learning the A B C's of the soldier's profession—that of keeping themselves well, properly fed, and properly supplied.

Such was the experience of our past wars, and such will be the experience of our future wars fought by these volunteer soldiers. Can mothers and fathers of this Nation appreciate that the deaths of many of their sons are due to the ignorance of their officers and to the lack of training in their boys? Many a boy has become sick and has died from preventable disease because he did not know how to take care of himself and his officers were too ignorant to show him. Many a boy has been needlessly slaughtered by bullets and exposure because led by untrained officers.

Our future wars will be fought by the young men, but if there is a body of these men who previously have become voluntarily trained not so many of the untrained ones will be needed at the front at once. The reservist will at least have the advantage of joining an organization officered by experienced men, and he will fight by the side of trained men.

From every reason it seems that the expensive personnel serving with the colors should be kept at such a minimum as will provide the instruction for the yearly increment needed to keep full the relatively inexpensive reserve, and that the expensive Army will be used to keep intact in time of peace the organizations needed at once on the outbreak of war, and be used principally as a training school for the great body of men needed to make these organizations effective upon the battle field.

To explain what is meant by an adequate system of reserves: As the infantry is the cheapest of all the arms to maintain and the easiest to supply and obtain, it must form the bulk of any army. A regiment of infantry will be used in this illustration. The base yearly pay of the officers of a regiment of infantry is as follows:

1 colonel	$4,000
1 lieutenant colonel	3,500
3 majors	9,000
15 captains	36,000
15 first lieutenants	30,000
15 second lieutenants	25,500
1 chaplain	2,400
Total	110,400

The base pay of a private is $15; therefore the base pay of the officers is equal to the base pay of 613 men serving in first enlistment. For economical reasons, then, the enlisted strength in war should be as large as can be effectively handled by the officers. The officers can handle a larger number of trained than untrained men; that is, if trained men are provided, the regiment can have in war from 2,500 to 3,000 men. If trained men are not provided, the enlisted strength will drop to about 1,500. Statistics show that, due to death, wounds, sickness, desertion, and other causes, infantry will lose in a six months' active campaign about 40 per cent of its strength, and that an additional 10 per cent will be needed for its depot troops; or, if an infantry regiment goes to war with 1,500 men, unless some means are provided to supply its wastage, at the end of a six months' campaign it will have but 750 men. All our past wars have shown that we can not by voluntary enlistment, even utilizing the draft and the vicious bounty system, get recruits to supply this wastage, and the result has been that the regiments in the field have often dwindled to less than 300 men, and these regiments remain at the front with their small number of men and large number of higher-priced officers, and that the only way to get additional men to the front was to raise new regiments. This absurd policy has resulted in the great expense of recruiting, equipping, and paying new, untrained men, and sending them to the front under untrained officers, where, when their services are required, the regiment is again only 300 men strong. This is not fancy but a fact, as shown by the records of our Rebellion.

I wish to call to the attention of the Senators who are listening to me the great battle monument in the State of Pennsylvania on the field at Gettysburg. The next time you go there, if you will note the number of organizations representing that State which took part in the Battle of Gettysburg, and the comparatively few men in those organizations, you will find that there were less than 300 men to a regiment present and on duty in the State where the battle took place. If that were true in that State, it must much more certainly be true in other States.

If trained reservists were provided to supply this wastage, the regiments at the front could be kept at their full fighting strength. Fewer men would be required, many less regiments would be raised, and our young sons and relatives would not be sent to the front under inexperienced officers.

Suppose, then, that our Infantry regiments of trained men can be held at a war strength of 2,400, it will need 1,200 trained reservists to furnish the wastage for a six months' campaign and its depot troops. What will be its economic peace strength, provided trained reservists are available to bring it from its economic peace to its effective war strength or to furnish the trained reservists to what, in military parlance, is termed "to mobilize"?

If the peace strength is 1,000 men, 1,400 trained reservists will be needed to mobilize each Infantry regiment and 1,200 to supply and keep it at a full strength of 2,400 men in a six months' active campaign, or a total of 2,600 reservists.

If the time of service with the colors is three years and the strength 1,000 men, then about 300 men will each year be available to pass to the reserve, and 300 into 2,600 equals 8⅔. As some of the 300 men passed to the reserve will desert or become disabled or unfit for service, to keep the reservists full at 2,600 will probably require nine years' service in the reserve for a three years' service with the colors and a strength of 1,000 men. If the number of men serving with the colors is increased or the time of service with the colors is decreased, then the time of service in the reserve can be shortened. From cost alone it is not advisable to increase the enlisted strength above what is absolutely needed to furnish the yearly quota of trained men to the reserve. Shortening the time with the colors is from every viewpoint the best procedure. More men can be trained; it keeps the men the shortest time from being producers; it makes the officers and men work harder during the two years of service of the enlisted men; the men, after being trained, join the reserve younger; the reservist is less apt to get married while in the reserve and thus have fewer persons dependent upon him for support; and because with the increased effort demanded he will have developed character which will make him worth more commercially; and, further, if the Government can train him in two years, it would be folly to pay the extra $326 for another year's superfluous training, when he is an equal asset to the Nation's defense without this time, whether remaining with the colors or in the reserve, and he can be held in the reserve for about one-eighth of what he costs when serving with the colors. If, then, this time is reduced to two years about 500 men will be available each year to pass to the reserve, and 500 into 2,600 equals 5⅕ or 6 years. But, as the needed reserve is over twice as large as the number of men serving with the colors, the time spent with the colors, whatever its length, will be about one-third of that spent with the reserve. Three things are, then, absolutely necessary in providing for any system of trained reservists.

First. The recruit must be trained in the shortest possible time and he must then be passed to the reserve; that is, not permitted to reenlist in the active Army unless needed as an instructor for other recruits.

Second. Whatever the length of time of service with the colors, the length of service in the reserve must be about three times as long. Hence, any law which will give an adequate reserve must provide for this proportional service.

Third. The reservist must be kept track of, have his clothes, arms, and equipment ready for him at some designated depot, be assigned to some organization, and have a means provided by which, when needed, he can promptly join his depot and be equipped and then promptly forwarded to his organization. To do this the reservist must be paid and classified.

The reservist also should be a young man with the fewest possible depending upon him for their support. The reservists needed to mobilize forming one class, and men needed to supply the six months' wastage forming another, should all be unmarried. Perhaps this is not possible, but it is desirable.

The reservists for depot troops forming a third class will not leave home territory except when other resources of war are exhausted; so they may be married or older men.

The two things which any law looking to the formation of a reserve must do with certainty are: Provide an adequate reserve of trained young men and so hold these reservists as to permit them to pursue in peace their productive labors, but compel a certain and prompt return to their organizations upon the call of the President. No law which contemplates that the return of reservist shall be optional with him can be effective. War plans can only be made when it is certain that our organizations will be at fixed strength of trained men during the continuance of the campaign. The enlistment law recently passed by Congress was good in that it recognized the importance of providing a reserve, but this law can not provide an adequate reserve, and it should be changed at once. It provided a longer time of service with the colors than in the reserve and practically discharged the man after his service with the colors, and provided no means of keeping track of the reservist, and did not pay him; and it can not therefore be effective in carrying out the War Department's plans. How can any law obtain an adequate reserve when the time of service with the colors is less than the time of service in the reserve, and yet the needed reserve is over twice as large as the peace enlisted strength? How can the volunteer reservist be kept track of in peace and compelled to return to his organization in war unless he is paid? How can any system of bounty induce a man to return to any designated organization when he will undoubtedly receive a larger bounty and easier service by going to the volunteers or militia?

Those who framed this bill have tried to justify their action by the answers given by certain of the officers of the Army serving with troops to their question: "Which would you prefer, a short or a long term of enlistment?" Of course, any officer serving with troops would answer, "A long enlistment," for this means to him less work and very well-trained men, whose personal equations are all known to their commander. If the question asked had been: "Which is best for the Nation, a short term with a reserve or a long term of enlistment without a reserve?" the answers would have been very different, even from the officers who have not given very much previous thought to this question of national policy.

It does not require much of a mathematician to see that if one man with the active Army costs as much as eight trained men in the reserve, that an active army of 100,000 men and 200,000 trained reservists can be kept for less money than an active army of 125,000 men and no reserve. The first army will have, with a two-year enlistment, an effective fighting strength when needed in war of about 150,000 trained men, 50,000 men of less than one year's service, and behind it a reserve of 100,000 trained men, sufficient to keep it at its effective strength during a six-months' active campaign. The second army, having no traind reservists, will probably be sent to war with 62,500 trained men, 62,500 men of less than one year's service, and perhaps 50,000 untrained recruits, if they can be obtained—a total of 62,500 trained men, 112,500 untrained or partially trained men—total 175,000, which in six months will be reduced to 87,500.

The War Department has plans for the reorganization of the Army, and will urge that the present organization will be ineffective in war and is very expensive and ill-advised in peace, and these opinions of the War Department are the same as those held by the military experts of all other nations.

If our child is sick, do we accept the diagnosis of the man without even a doctor's certificate, and especially if the diagnosis and remedies suggested are diametrically different from the treatment suggested and followed in similar cases by all the celebrated doctors of the world? Our country is desperately ill with nondevelopment of its military resources. The disease has been clearly diagnosed by experts and all the expert world knows it. They also know the remedy and have prescribed it. The sensible course seems to be to follow the expert treatment prescribed. Our past history shows what a different policy has resulted in military inefficiency, military disaster, immense cost in war, excessive expenditures for pensions.

If the Army is needed at all, its principal use is to furnish a reasonable defense against a probable invasion. To do this it must be of sufficient size and of such organization as will make it effective when opposed to a probable foe. Can anyone believe that our little mobile Regular Army of 31,500 men and no reserves can furnish any adequate defense against the army of any of the great powers? Moneys saved by not developing an adequate defense of size and organization and equipments sufficient for the needs of the country is not an economy. If the defense provided will not function effectively when needed, moneys spent upon it are wasted. Either make it effective in the manner prescribed by our experts or let Congress take full responsibility for its present condition.

Mr. DU PONT. I desire to say to the Senator from Massachusetts that the little mobile army of about 31,000 men of which he speaks has not an adequate number of fieldpieces as compared with muskets. There are only two guns to a thousand muskets. That is another feature which makes it very much less efficient.

Mr. WEEKS. I stated earlier in my remarks that each regiment used as a unit should have with it four to six guns.

Mr. LODGE. What is the average number of guns per thousand men in other armies?

Mr. WEEKS. I think the figures I have read will substantially cover the average number of guns with a unit of men.

Mr. LODGE. I was told that there are seven in the German Army per thousand.

Mr. WEEKS. I have given our regiments at somewhat less.

Mr. LODGE. What is the number in ours, exactly?

Mr. WEEKS. It is rather less than two, I think.

Mr. DU PONT. It is only two in our Army.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I will return for a moment to our developed military resources. The tables giving the strength of the Regular Army and Organized Militia in the United States show that the militia might, with the hearty cooperation of the State authorities, be organized into 12 tactical divisions, 5 auxiliary divisons, and 6 additional Infantry brigades; but that in order to so organize the militia which can be used in a mobile army it must be increased by about 2,600 officers and 48,000 men, or it should be expanded to the peace strength of 10,164 officers and 152,610 men.

The war strength of these organizations would be 10,164 officers and 282,292 men. It will therefore be necessary to provide a first reserve of 129,682 men in order that the militia may be sent to war at its effective strength or to mobilize it, and another, or second, reserve of 134,000 men and some 4,700 officers to keep the militia at its effective war strength during a six months' campaign.

The Regular Army in the United States can be tactically organized into three divisions and two Cavalry divisions, having a war strength of 2,321 officers and 73,397 men, by providing a slight increase in the peace strength of the Regular Army in both officers and men and providing a reserve of 29,000 men to mobilize. Another reserve of about 34,000 men is required, so that this war strength of the Regular Army may be preserved at about 73,000 men during a six months' active campaign. When the Regular Army and the militia are thus properly organized and their reserves provided, the developed military strength of the United States will be—

Regular Army	73,400
Organized Militia	282,000
Total	355,400

This force is 150,000 men short of what the military experts of the country believe should be the size of the available organized military force in the United States. While the militia may be a valuable asset and has in its ranks many earnest men with great potential as part of our effective defense, still it never can, under their militia service, become a well-trained and disciplined force, and it would be a crime to send them to the front before they had received in the field the training needed to mechanize them as a fighting force.

It would seem that it would be inadvisable to further expand the militia to obtain this needed 150,000 men—first, because the well-trained troops of the Regular Army, at even the proposed increased size, when expanded to their war strength is too small a force to furnish a sure block to a modern army for the time needed to train the militia, and until this can be done a force of 73,000 Regulars and 282,000 militia, plus the volunteers we might hastily raise, approximates the proportion and condition of the forces that have been beaten by equal numbers in every one of our past wars.

The following garrisons of the authorized Regular Army are serving out of the country, and these can not be considered as part of any developed force which is available for defense of the home territory:

In the Philippine Islands, including about 5,500 Philippine Scouts	17,000
In the Hawaiian Islands	8,000
In Alaska	1,000
In Panama, as soon as quarters are built	3,000
Total	29,000

These garrisons are too small; in fact, it is believed that with the exception of the troops in the Philippines, all the other garrisons will ultimately have to be increased.

It is certainly an altruistic policy which attempts to educate and fit for self-government the people of the Philippines, but this attempt has required the United States to send over 11,000 of its Regular Army to the Philippines and to pay for some 6,000 native troops—a yearly expenditure of some $10,000,000, if we take the cost of the soldier serving with the colors at $600 per year; an expenditure of over five and one-half millions, if we consider only the clothing, pay, and food of the soldier. Taking this latter sum, it means 139,000 reserves. I am not criticizing the policy, provided the Nation is willing to pay this cost; but if the policy means that our Regular Army in the United States will, by this altruism, be reduced below what will give the Nation a reasonable defense, the policy is not only dangerous but pernicious.

The garrison of the Sandwich Islands is 8,000, and probably should be increased to 20,000 in order to provide a navy need; that is, to secure harbor and coaling station for our fleet in the Pacific.

The garrison in the Panama Canal Zone must be sufficient to protect this great waterway. The Nation has assumed new responsibilities with reference to the world at large, and the cost of meeting these responsibilities can not be measured by the appropriations made for similar purposes in its younger national life.

It is not for me to prescribe the size of the mobile army in the United States, but rather to invite attention to what is considered by men who have made a study of this question an adequate home defense and to show, if possible, how imperfectly this home defense has been provided. The War Department tells us the country needs for this defense 500,000 trained men, supplemented by from 100,000 to 200,000 volunteers. The Nation has in the United States a mobile Regular Army of 31,500 enlisted strength and an organized mobile militia of about 104,000 enlisted strength and no available trained reserve. Certainly the War Department under these conditions can not be held responsible for the disastrous outcome of an attack made upon this country. The figures presented by the War Department appear rather stupendous, but they are not inconsistent with what this country has been obliged to put in the field in most of its past wars, and until Congress furnishes the means to approximate the demands of the War Department the responsibility for the results of any war must be borne by Congress.

I am firmly impressed with the idea that haphazard legislation has too long been indulged in with reference to the development of our military resources; that the questions of policy, of economy in maintenance, of effectiveness in the costly machine which we are forced to maintain, have not been intelligently met—certainly they have not been satisfactorily solved.

To quote from an article on "National defense":

If the United States is unwilling to follow all other great nations in their method of providing a trained army, i. e., to require every young man of the Nation to devote one or two years to the training necessary to make of him an efficient unit in the Nation's defense, then the people and Congress must not shrink from the large appropriation necessary to provide an Army by means of voluntary enlistments.

In order that any policy for national defense may be continuing and put in effect it is necessary, first, that a policy be formulated which will be approved by the Nation and by Congress; second, that means be provided so that the general policy when approved will be adhered to and carried out.

This requires some sort of national-defense council, and I am heartily in favor of seeing such a body legislated into prompt existence. Congress then would not be asked to provide for the policies and individual opinion of varying administrations and military committees, which so far have been ineffective and costly, but some definite scheme would be thought out for the economical development and maintenance of that part of our military resources considered necessary for our national defense.

A man can only be an efficient soldier by subjecting himself to that training which will make him one. The Nation lost the vast reserve of soldiers trained by five years of active service in the Civil War; it has no developed professional leaders except those trained in the Regular Army; it has failed to utilize as part of its developed military strength the men who have been trained and discharged from the Regular Army. Our militia, although composed of a fine body of capable men, can not be considered as a whole a reliable fighting force at the outbreak of war. Our Nation has neglected absolutely the lessons taught by its past defective military policy, and is persistent in the policy which our past history has shown to be foolish and exceedingly wasteful in human life and money.

Russia was unprepared for war, and was defeated by a nation less than half of its size in population.

The Turkish Army, which only a few years ago was one of the best in Europe, had been rendered an ineffective fighting machine by diverting the moneys needed to keep it efficient to other purposes; it was crumpled up and vanquished in less than three weeks by nations not considered at all in the same military class.

If the people of this country believe that this great Nation can not support an army of the size sufficient for its defense, it may be within the province of its Representatives to prescribe the size of the army the Nation believes it can afford; but they should then be prepared to assume the responsibility for the Nation's undefended condition. This is perhaps within the province of Congress, but for Congress to dictate the organization of the Army, especially when such is opposed to what all military experts of all nations say, is reprehensible; for, although Congress must assume the responsibility for the condition, it would have no power to avert the disaster which will in war afflict the Nation because of this policy.

Finally, I believe that laws should be passed at once which will reorganize the Regular Army. This reorganization should give to the mobile army the proper proportion of infantry, field artillery, cavalry, engineers, signal, sanitary troops, the needed ammunition and supply trains, and provide for properly equipped depots. The law must provide that the men serve the shortest time with the colors necessary to train them as soldiers, and then pass them as soon as trained to a reserve, and that while serving in this reserve the men must be paid. Make the enlistment age 18 to 21, with consent of parents, and 25 as limit for first enlistment. Permit no man not a commissioned officer, musician, mechanic, horseshoer, bandsman, or one specially recommended as instructor for recruits to reenlist in the line of the mobile army. Provide that soldiers have no legal right to their uniforms or clothing; what they save on the clothing allowance to pass to their credit on discharge as at present, but that upon discharge they must have a serviceable overcoat, service uniform, shoes, and other articles prescribed as field and surplus kit; these to be appraised by a board of officers and their value passed to the man's credit; these clothes to follow the reservist to the depot where he reports on mobilization. Have reservists report their address four times per year, but as the reservist is a trained man it is not necessary to recall him to the colors during the first term of enlistment in the reserve, and he should not be so recalled, but should be permitted to go anywhere in the United States upon giving notification of his new address. If regiments are assigned to certain localities near centers of population, they will draw their recruits from those centers and the reservists will return to their homes. If, however, they do desire to move away, this privilege should be accorded them as a right, the only restriction being that they report four times a year to their organization commander or to The Adjutant General of the Army, giving their addresses. To provide that service in the reserve shall be at least three times the service with the colors, and this can be best done by dividing the reserve into three classes—the first to be composed of men who will be used to mobilize the organizations, the service in this class to be about three years and the men to be preferably unmarried; second class to be composed of men who will supply the wastage of a six months' campaign, service in this class to be three years and the men to be preferably unmarried; the third class to form the depot troops, service in this class to be approximately three years.

A similar reserve to be provided for the militia, and as this reserve is a Federal and not a State asset the militia reserve should also be paid by the National Government. Laws should also be passed to provide trained commissioned officers for the reserve and for such volunteers as may be needed. A fine body of such reserve commissioned officers can probably be obtained from the discharged noncommissioned officers of the Regular Army or from the graduates at West Point, if the plan I have suggested were put into operation, by paying them such part of $300 as may be needed to purchase their uniforms and equipments.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Does the Senator mean there that each man after discharge from the Army should serve for nine years in the reserve or for only three years?

Mr. WEEKS. He may pass on from one reserve to another, but he serves as a first reservist for three years.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. After three years in the reserve, he retires absolutely from it?

Mr. WEEKS. Yes; if he wishes to do so, or he may continue in the second reserve or the third reserve. That is to be optional.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, the Senate has just listened to a most highly instructive and interesting address by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS]. The subject of that address is one of vital importance, and one which at the present time agitates the Nation from one end of it to the other. It seems to me that it could hardly have too extensive a circulation, and I move that 2,000 pamphlet copies of the address be printed.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I dislike to interpose an objection to the request of the Senator from New Jersey that the address of the Senator from Massachusetts be printed as a public document. I am perfectly willing that it should be printed in congressional form by the Senate. It has been the rule of this body, and it is also agreed between the House and the Senate, that speeches which are delivered in the Senate or in the House shall not be printed as public documents. For that reason, and that reason only, I object now to the request.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, the speech delivered by the Senator from Massachusetts is already a public document; it will be printed in the RECORD; but if we start special orders for the printing of Senators' speeches in document form we will have similarly to print every Senator's speech. I have been here three years, and nothing of that sort has ever been done during that time. So I object. I do so, however, with the highest regard for the Senator from Massachusetts and for his speech. I would object if it were a speech of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN] or of any other Senator on the floor of the Senate. I do not think we ought to do it.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Very well, but I feel that the subject is one of vital importance.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair notices that in the resolutions of the House the Vice President, among others, is invited to attend the funeral ceremonies of the late Representative from the State of New York. That the Vice President may not be conspicuous by his absence, it is necessary to state that he has an engagement for Sunday next, which will call him out of the city on that day. The Vice President does not desire that his absence should be taken as a mark of disrespect to the deceased or of any discourtesy to the invitation.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Mr. President, I move, as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was unanimously agreed to; and (at 1 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, December 12, 1914, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, December 11, 1914.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Lord God Almighty, Creator and Father of all souls, Thy will is supreme, and Thy will is good will, for Thou dost love Thy children and satisfiest the longing souls with hopes and aspirations, and leadest them on in thoughts and deeds which live after them. A great sorrow has come to this House in the death of a strong man, firm in his convictions, pure in his motives, which endeared him to all who knew him, and who for years has held a conspicuous place on the floor of this House. In the committees to which he was assigned his counsel was sought. A statesman who served with all vigor and wisdom his State and Nation, SERENO E. PAYNE will live; his going will be mourned by his people and by all with whom he came in contact.

We thank Thee for his life, for his character, and what he did. Comfort us and his family in the everlasting hope of the immortality of the soul. Help us to follow his example, to emulate his virtues, and cherish his memory. And teach us the value of well doing, and guide us by Thine own counsels, that we may leave the impress of our character on those who shall come after us. "A good name is rather to be chosen than great riches, and loving favor rather than silver and gold." So keep us all in the way of righteousness, and bring us at last into Thine everlasting kingdom. In the spirit of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

SENATE.

SATURDAY, December 12, 1914.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we know Thee in the renewing of our lives as we seek the center and source of all truth. Our approach into Thy presence is the gateway into that infinite calm and peace for which our spirits were made. Glorify Thyself in this moment of prayer that out of it we may carry the glory and fervor of divine inspiration. A day in Thy court is better than a thousand. A moment's lifting up of our hearts to God gives to us an outlook of infinite possibility.

The Nation is called upon to-day to mourn the loss of a statesman. We bless God for laying His hand upon men who are furnished for every good word and work. We thank Thee that in the infinite depths of life there is a unity of brotherhood. We bless Thee that our traditions hold us not so strong as our brotherhood, and that a common loss is felt in the falling of a servant of the people. Grant, we pray Thee, still to raise up men whose character may stand the test of public life and in whose patriotism the Nation can rest secure. Add Thy blessings to us this day. For Christ's sake. Amen.

MILES POINDEXTER, a Senator from the State of Washington, appeared in his seat to-day.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

SENATOR FROM CONNECTICUT.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the certificate of the governor of Connecticut certifying that on the 3d day of November, 1914, Hon. FRANK B. BRANDEGEE was chosen by the electors of the State of Connecticut a Senator from that State for the term of six years beginning on the 4th day of March, 1915, which was read and referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

BOARD OF ORDNANCE AND FORTIFICATION (H. DOC. NO. 1342).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, pursuant to law, the Twenty-fourth Annual Report of the Board of Ordnance and Fortification for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1914, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. President, I desire to have printed in the RECORD a resolution adopted by the War between the States committee of the United Daughters of the Confederacy, petitioning Congress for a designation of the War of 1861–1865 in this country as the "War between the States."

There being no objection, the resolution was read and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, as follows:

WAR BETWEEN THE STATES COMMITTEE.

We, the undersigned committee, appointed in Richmond, Va., in 1911, and acting under the authority vested in us by article 11 of our constitution, which specifies, among other objects of our organization, that we must "collect and preserve a truthful history of the Confederate States," beg that you will give your careful attention to the reasons herein set forth why the mighty contest of the sixties should be known and designated as the "War between the States" instead of its being variously and erroneously spoken of as the "Civil War," "the War of the Rebellion," or "the War of Secession."

"Civil war" is defined by the best authorities as "a war between the citizens of a common country," "citizens of the same nation," etc. Now, for four years we maintained an entirely separate government from that of the United States, being an entity known the world over as the Confederate States.

We had an army and a navy, as well as a currency of our own. We levied and collected our own revenue, enlisted our armies, issued cotton bonds, which were accepted for "value received" in all commercial marts. And while our navy was small, its achievements were phenominal considering its resources; and if nothing else entitled it to recognition as a part of the fabric of a separate government, it had the distinction of introducing to the world a new system of naval warfare, and its existence was certainly recognized when the United States demanded and received many millions from England for the damage inflicted upon her commerce by Confederate vessels, which were built and fitted out in England's harbors. The "stars and bars" was an ensign recognized everywhere as belonging to a nation other than the United States.

We weren't fighting for possession of the Government at Washington, nor would we have fought at all if let alone. So, as we were not citizens of a "common country" during a period of four years, it could not be called a "civil war."

Hon. Charles Francis Adams, of Massachusetts, says in a recent letter that "the term civil war signifies nothing. There have been innumerable civil wars, and as a matter of general history it is manifestly absurd for us to appropriate the term to a single civil war of our own."

Mr. Ropes, also of Massachusetts, says in his "Story of the Civil War," part 1, page 98, "They effected at Montgomery, Ala., a regular organization of the Confederate States of America. * * * Twenty-two States remained united. These States, if the views we have advocated above be correct, possessed now the entire sovereignty of the Nation known as the 'United States.' Opposed to them stood 11 States which had seceded, now constituting the 'Confederate States' of America."

Mr. Bryce, in his American Commonwealth, speaks of the United States as "A union of Commonwealths; * * * they have over their citizens an authority which is their own and not delegated by the Central Government. They—that is, the older ones among them—existed before it. They could exist without it."

And the "War of Secession" is equally inaccurate. Seven States had seceded and confederated without resorting to arms. Secession was their court of last resort when all other honorable means to preserve our rights under the Constitution had failed. The right to secede happened to be involved along with our other rights.

Col. Henderson, the eminent English historian, defines secession as "a protest against mob rule."

Nor were we in any sence rebels. Unlike George Washington and the colonists, we were subjects of no power, and hence could not rebel.

Our inherent doctrine of State sovereignty was our main justification for resisting Federal aggression, and it is only in the interest of correct history that we are making this move.

The "War between the States" does not imply that it was a war between individual States. The noun "States" is used in its collective sense. And the official titles of the contending parties were the "United States" and the "Confederate States," hence our contention that the proper appellation for that great conflict is "The War between the States."

PORT OF NYANDO, N. Y.

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably the bill (S. 6528) to make Nyando, N. Y., a port through which merchandise may be imported for transportation without appraisement, and I submit a report (No. 834) thereon. I ask for the immediate consideration of the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask the Senator from Texas to allow the bill to go over. I believe a similar bill has been reported from the Finance Committee.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Very well.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to see what changes have been made from the previous bill.

Mr. SHEPPARD. That course is entirely satisfactory.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

LITTLE SCIOTO RIVER BRIDGE, OHIO.

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably, with an amendment, the bill (S. 6687) to authorize the Chesapeake & Ohio Northern Railway Co. to construct a bridge across the Ohio River, a short distance above the mouth of the Little Scioto River, between Scioto County, Ohio, and Greenup County, Ky., at or near Sciotoville, Ohio, and I submit a report (No. 835) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The bill was read; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The amendment was, on page 2, line 2, to strike out the word "law" and insert:

The acts of Congress approved December 17, 1872, and February 14, 1883, authorizing the construction of bridges across the Ohio River, and of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges across navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JAMES. I should like to ask the Senator from Texas, who is in charge of the bill, a question. I could not gather from the reading of the bill just where the bridge is to be constructed.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The bill was introduced by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE]. I ask the Secretary to read the clause describing the location.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

A short distance above the mouth of the Little Scioto River, between Scioto County, Ohio, and Greenup County, Ky., at or near Sciotoville, Ohio.

Mr. SHEPPARD. If the Senator from Kentucky desires to have the bill go over, I have no objection.

Mr. JAMES. No; I have no objection to it. I presume it is all right.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DISCOURAGEMENT OF REVOLUTIONS IN FOREIGN COUNTRIES.

Mr. JONES. I introduce a bill and ask that it be read at length and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The bill (S. 6905) making it unlawful to promote in the United States revolutions in a foreign country, and for other purposes, was read the first time by its title and the second time at length and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That it shall be unlawful for any person, partnership, association, junta, or corporation in the United States, or in any place or territory under its jurisdiction, willfully to represent, assist, or act for or on behalf of any person, association, party, junta, or faction promoting or carrying on, or seeking to cause, promote, or carry on, a revolution, or seeking by force to establish a government in any country with which the United States is at peace, and the act of the partnership, firm, association, junta, or corporation shall be deemed the act of each individual composing such partnership, firm, association, junta, or corporation. Any violation of this act shall be punishable by a fine of not more than $50,000 and imprisonment for not more than 10 years.

FUNERAL SERVICES OF LATE REPRESENTATIVE SERENO E. PAYNE.

Mr. ROOT submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 500), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That when the hour of 3 o'clock this afternoon arrives the Senate take a recess until to-morrow, Sunday, December 13, at 10 o'clock and 45 minutes a. m., in order to proceed in a body to the House of Representatives to attend the funeral services of the late SERENO E. PAYNE.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Inasmuch as the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] was not in the Chamber on yesterday when the Chair appointed the committee on the part of the Senate to attend the funeral of the late Representative PAYNE, the Chair now desires to appoint him as a member of that committee on account of his long service in the House of Representatives with the deceased Representative.

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia was, on his own motion, excused from further service upon the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Upon motion of Mr. KERN, it was Ordered, That the Hon. THOMAS W. HARDWICK, junior Senator from Georgia, be assigned to membership on the following committees to fill vacancies thereon occasioned by the expiration of the term of service of the Hon. William S. West:

Immigration;
Industrial Expositions; and Railroads.

That he also be assigned to membership on the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads to fill the vacancy occasioned by the resignation of Senator SMITH of Georgia therefrom, and also to membership on the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to fill the vacancy caused by the death of the late Senator Johnston, of Alabama.

SAFETY OF LIFE AT SEA.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I wish to ask unanimous consent to have printed Senate Document No. 476, Sixty-third Congress, second session, entitled "Safety of Life at Sea." The copies have been exhausted. It is an analysis of the London convention, with explanatory notes, and will be useful to Members of the Senate. The fact that the edition has been exhausted shows that it has been drawn upon quite heavily.

The same is true of a memorial entitled "Welfare of American Seamen," Senate Document No. 452. I think there are a few copies of it left in the document room, but it is nearly exhausted.

I ask to have printed additional copies of each of these documents.

Mr. SMOOT. I suggest to the Senator that he had better state the number of additional copies he desires, because if they are to be printed the usual number will be only about 1,600 copies each.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I think perhaps that will be enough.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator had better say 2,000 additional copies each.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Well, I will ask that 2,000 additional copies of each document be printed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. STONE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 1 hour and 15 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, do I understand that those having in charge the memorial services assigned for to-day desire to proceed now? I had risen for the purpose of moving that the Senate resume the consideration of the unfinished business, but I see the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] is present, and I should like to ask him if he desires to go on with the memorial addresses at this time?

Mr. KENYON. Not unless the Senator does not desire to proceed with the unfinished business until 2 o'clock. The eulogies, I am certain, will not be extended, and if the Senator so prefers we can proceed now.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I yield to the Senator from Iowa if he desires to proceed.

MEMORIAL ADDRESSES ON THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE PEPPER.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I ask that the resolutions of the House of Representatives relative to the death of the late Representative IRVIN S. PEPPER be laid before the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate resolutions of the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolutions, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
May 3, 1914.

Resolved, That the business of the House be now suspended that opportunity may be given for tribute to the memory of Hon. IRVIN S. PEPPER, a Member of this House from the State of Iowa.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate.

Resolved, That the Clerk send a copy of these resolutions to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That at the conclusion of to-day's proceedings the House, as a particular mark of respect to the memory of the deceased and in recognition of his distinguished public career, do stand adjourned.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I submit resolutions which I send to the desk and ask for their adoption.

The resolutions (S. Res. 501) were read, considered by unanimous consent, and unanimously agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the business of the Senate be now suspended that opportunity may be given for tributes to the memory of Hon. IRVIN S. PEPPER, late a Member of the House of Representatives from the State of Iowa.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives.

Resolved, That the Secretary send a copy of these resolutions to the family of the deceased.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, when a man who has traveled life's journey into old age and has been overtaken with the feebleness which comes with many years passes on to his reward upon the other shore, while his death may occasion the profoundest grief and sorrow, we feel that it is in harmony with nature and nature's designs; but when a young man who has barely touched his full maturity, a young man full of strength and vigor and hope and ambition, a young man whose work and opportunities are yet before him, is summoned by the grim messenger of death, it is impossible to avoid the consciousness that somehow his passing is not a part of the plan of the world, and to our sadness there is added a touch of protest and rebellion. It is such an instance we are considering this afternoon.

IRVIN S. PEPPER was a young man, a strong man, a man who loved life; a man who was fond of his fellow men; a man whose circle of friends was limited only by the scope of his acquaintances; a man who had thoroughly prepared and trained himself for his chosen work; a man loyal to the highest conceptions of public duty; a man faithful to the interests of the people. When such a man, so trained and equipped for a great work, a man in the first flush of mature life, is called away it is not only a source of profound grief and sorrow to those who knew him, but it inspires the deep regret of which I have already spoken. We wonder why so potent an instrument for the public good should be broken at the very moment it can render the highest and the best service to humanity.

Mr. President, Mr. PEPPER gave at all times his whole strength to the people whom he represented. He was faithful to them, persistent and efficient in performing the duties which his office devolved upon him, and his death created a vacancy that it is difficult to supply. As a friend he was without flaw; as a citizen he had the highest ideals; and as a public servant during all the time I knew him he never faltered or wavered in his course nor strayed from the path of duty which his intelligent conscience opened for him. We in Iowa appreciated the man's fine attainments, pure character, and noble qualities. Those who mourn his loss are numbered only by those who knew him.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, Hon. IRVIN S. PEPPER was one of the first Representatives in Congress that it was my good fortune to meet when I came to Washington about two years ago. I first learned of him through his brother, Mr. E. L. Pepper, who resides in Kansas. Mr. E. L. Pepper once lived in Haskell County, adjoining my home county. He and I were personal and political friends. In 1906 we were both candidates for office on the Democratic ticket. He was a candidate for county clerk, and I was a candidate for district judge. He so neglected his own campaign in looking after my interests that he was defeated, while I was elected. He virtually voluntarily sacrificed himself in my interests. This is the true character of the Pepper family, so far as I have known any of them, and I know it was a particular characteristic of the deceased. Mr. E. L. Pepper afterwards removed to Conway Springs, where he now resides, and I had the pleasure after the lapse of about eight years to repay in a small way the favors extended to me in my early political career by having him appointed postmaster.

Soon after entering the Senate I became quite well acquainted with Representative PEPPER. He was the secretary of the Democratic national congressional committee, of which I was a member, and we frequently met both before and after the committee was organized until his last illness. He was a tireless worker. After the usual day's work was done, and when most Congressmen had left their offices, you would always find Representative PEPPER at his post. He was so thoroughly devoted to duty that at his death it was generally remarked that overwork killed him.

He learned to work as a very young man. He was the youngest son in a family of 10 children, and was early obliged to shift for himself. He worked his way through college by teaching country schools in the wintertime. He was taken from the principalship of a school by Judge Martin J. Wade and made his private secretary when he was a Representative in Congress during the years 1903, 1904, and 1905. Not content with the arduous duties devolved upon him as secretary to Representative Wade, which were sufficient to keep two ordinary men busy, he attended law school in connection with his work, and graduated in law from George Washington University in 1905. He forcibly demonstrated what an able young man can do who is not afraid of hard work. He immediately entered the practice of the law at his home in Muscatine, Iowa, and soon forged to the front in his profession. After serving two terms as county attorney he was elected to Congress in 1910 on the Democratic ticket. His work was so satisfactory to all of his constituents that even the Republicans did not nominate anyone against him in 1912, and he was practically unanimously reelected, only the Socialists voting against him. It is certainly a very high compliment to a Democrat when the Republicans in a northern State, where they usually have the best chance for election, fail to nominate a candidate for Congress. This is the only instance of the kind I have ever known.

Representative PEPPER at the time of his death was the most prominent among those mentioned in Iowa as the Democratic candidate for the United States Senate, and had he lived he would no doubt have received the nomination without opposition. His death was a very great loss to his party and was deeply lamented without partisan distinction by all who knew him.

It was my privilege to accompany the body to its last resting place at Ottumwa. People gathered from all over the State to attend the funeral. Floral offerings were most profuse, beautiful, and gorgeous. Everyone, regardless of party, spoke most highly of the deceased, and expressed the greatest regret that one so young, with such a promising future, should have been carried away so early in life. Representative FRANK E. DOREMUS, chairman of the Democratic national congressional committee, at the time of Representative PEPPER's death, said:

I am completely stunned by the news of Mr. PEPPER's death. Our work on the national congressional committee, of which he was secretary, brought us in intimate contact with each other, and I came to regard him very highly. He was thoroughly honest and conscientious in all he did, both for his country and his party, and possessed a keen appreciation of the duties and responsibilities of public office. Mr. PEPPER was highly regarded in the House, and there are many of us to whom his untimely death is a personal loss.

Speaker CLARK paid him this high tribute:

He had a phenomenal political and professional career, and everybody expected that he would achieve other and higher honors. No young man in the House appeared to have brighter prospects.

He was as loyal a friend as man ever had. He was as true as steel in every relation of life; courteous, kind, considerate. He was one of my prime favorites, and he repaid my friendship in scripture measure, heaped up, pressed down, and running over.

Nothing but words of praise and kindness can be truthfully spoken of this man. The people of the State of Iowa and of the Nation were proud of Representative PEPPER, proud of his high character, his achievements, his unswerving devotion to duty and loyalty to his country, his blameless life, and his noble and patriotic purposes. His death is not only a personal loss to everyone who knew him, but also the Nation's loss.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, on such an occasion as this the poverty of our speech is made manifest. There is no voice or tongue that can express the sorrow of the human heart. Words can not paint the pangs that all men feel when death has ravished them of loved ones or of friends. We stand beside the grave with silent lips, because our words can not portray the anguish of the soul.

From life's morning to age's twilight men struggle and contend; they moil to gather wisdom, gold, and honors, yet in a moment all is gone. Before the sepulcher ambition, wealth, and power are cast aside.

The only thing that lives beyond the tomb is the sweet memory of noble aspirations nobly brought to consummation. By that high standard the life of IRVIN S. PEPPER may well be judged and rightly praised. Who judges so must grant to him the encomium of a splendid success. The story of his career is a recital of devotion to the general good. Perhaps no man has lived in his great State, engaged in life's stern battles, and struck so few blows that have given needless pain nor left behind so many memories of kindly deeds. He was one of those rare characters who fight so generously that even antagonists are not made to suffer.

He was brave, and yet his courage never crushed a foe. He was firm, but his steadfastness was so mixed and mingled with the quality of gentleness no scars were left behind. He marched straight forward, and yet his feet did not crush the weak or bring a sorrow to his fellow man. He filled the full measure of citizenship. Devoted to his home, to his county, to his State, and to his country, his ideals were as great as the Nation, his patriotism as lofty as that which inspired the hearts of the founders of liberty.

His death came as a crushing blow to those who knew him, an irremedial loss to the public, but his memory is sweet with the fragrance of nobility and kindliness and sympathy. And so in these closing words that seem so hollow and inadequate I can do no more than pay a tribute of love and respect to his untarnished memory.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I only wish to add a word to what has been said.

IRVIN S. PEPPER was born in Davis County, Iowa, June 10, 1876, and died at Clinton, Iowa, December 21, 1913. He came to Muscatine, Iowa, when a very young man; had been county superintendent of schools, secretary to Congressman Martin J. Wade, county attorney of Muscatine County, Member of Congress from the second district of Iowa, and at the time of his death was secretary of the Democratic national committee.

His home was Muscatine; his death occurred at Clinton. The funeral services were held at Ottumwa, Iowa, his father's home, and the following Sunday a great memorial service to his memory was held at Muscatine, participated in by thousands of sorrowing friends.

He passed away just a few days before Christmas. He had planned to spend Christmas with his father at the old home. I shall never forget the eloquent tributes at that funeral and memorial service, but especially the tribute of Judge Wade to his friend PEPPER. He described how, at the time of the first nomination of PEPPER for Congress, he had come home to Muscatine, after the convention or the primaries, and had been received at the train by a great outpouring of citizens, the band playing martial music as the procession passed along; and then he proceeded to describe how, a few days before PEPPER had come home again to Muscatine; that the same crowds were at the depot, but no exultant look in their eyes; that heads were bowed and eyes were dim; the same band was there, as the solemn procession moved on, with thousands following the casket, but it did not play the same strains; it played "Nearer My God to Thee." Tributes of affection were on every hand.

This untimely death just at the commencement of seemingly a great career, and just at the Christmas time—a time of happiness among people—and occurring away from home, at that last solemn moment of life, when the thought instinctively turns to home, made the surroundings of his death and funeral doubly sad. While with sorrow we said good-by to our friend, our sorrow was relieved by the thought that the devoted mother was waiting for him yonder in the fields of far away.

He was 37 years of age at the time of his death. One great advantage in life was his—the advantage of poor parents. He knew what hardship and toil meant. It is one of the splendid things of our national life that the son of poor parents has a better chance in the race of life than the son of the rich. The early sacrifices of his boyhood life developed the splendid character of the man.

He was clean in private and in public life. He had the greatness of simplicity in his soul. The Congressional Directory recites as to him probably the shortest biography written, very refreshing in this bombastic document. He became a candidate for Congress to please his mother, but it was a strange fate that she should not live to see his success; she passed away during the early months of his first campaign. His tenderness and devotion to his mother exemplified the traits of character which endeared him to his friends.

He was a man without vanity in his soul, without pride or guile, without deceit in his heart. He was a man of mercy and of truth. A wise son was he, making glad his parents. He had that righteousness which tendeth to life, that charity of spirit which edifieth. He believed in the things that are honest, the things that are pure, the things that are noble. Justice was with him a passion. He believed in the triumph of peace, the realization of human brotherhood. He believed that love worked no ill to his neighbors; therefore he loved his neighbor as himself. He believed the strong should bear the burdens of the weak; that made him a brother man and a heart man. He loved little children, helped the poor, and strengthened the weak. He kept "his father's commandments and forsook not the law of his mother."

He cared little concerning the world's riches. To him life was more than food and raiment. Life meant to him service, helpfulness. No one in want was ever turned from him. His hand reached out to the poor and unfortunate. Moral integrity was ever present with him. He believed in the great stewardship of life. He was a frank, straightforward man, and life was to him a brotherhood in the human family. To have known him intimately made one better, gave one a stronger grasp on the things that make for right, a greater faith in mankind, an enthusiasm for fellowship.

In public life he was one of the leaders of his party; a strong party man, but placing the welfare of his country above the welfare of his party. He had capacity for service and high ideals. He caught the great vision of the hour—that human rights were more important than property rights; that with men and women it was not merely a question of how to live, but how to live better and how to get more satisfaction and happiness for others out of life.

He was always a friend of the soldiers, and secured the passage of many pension bills for infirm, aged soldiers. He was always the friend of the under man.

So good a Congressman was he that at the end of his first term no nomination was made by the Republican Party against him.

It is hard to understand the purposes of the Almighty, hard to understand why he should be taken just at the sunniest hour of all the voyage. It is hard to think that we are so soon forgotten, that the world passes on, that one individual counts but little; and yet, if somewhere a little sunshine has been brought into human hearts, some hope has been revived, and some one is really sorry that we have passed away, then life has not been a failure.

In everything that goes to make real success, Congressman PEPPER'S life was a success. He honored his parents, he honored his State, he honored mankind. He was proud of Iowa, and Iowa is proud if his life work.

Mr. President, I shall not submit the customary resolution of adjournment, because of the fact that the Senate has fixed 3 o'clock this afternoon as the hour of recess until to-morrow. Hence the accustomed resolution which I should otherwise submit would not be in order.

REGULATION OF IMMIGRATION.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, the hour of 2 o'clock having arrived during the memorial exercises, I ask that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of House bill 6060, the unfinished business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THORNTON in the chair). The Chair lays the unfinished business before the Senate.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6060) to regulate the immigration of aliens to and the residence of aliens in the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 18, line 23, the Committee on Immigration propose to strike out the words "mental or."

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. The Senate has ordered that at 3 o'clock p. m. a recess shall be taken until a certain hour to-morrow. That will be a continuation of the present session of to-day for a specific purpose. I wish to know if it is the ruling of the Chair that if this bill be temporarily laid aside and if the recess for the exercises to-morrow be now taken would it still be the unfinished busineses on Monday when we meet?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present occupant of the chair would hold that the bill does not lose its right as the unfinished business in consequence of the order of the Senate for the ceremony to-morrow any more than it lost its right when the hour of 2 o'clock arrived to-day.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Because of the peculiar conditions that existed I did not interrupt the memorial exercises at 2 o'clock; but as the bill is still the unfinished business and it is held by the Chair that it will be the unfinished business after the recess, I ask unanimous consent that it be temporarily laid aside, without prejudice to its position, and that the Senate take a recess until to-morrow at 10.45 a. m. for the funeral services which will take place in the Hall of the House of Representatives.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from South Carolina? The Chair hears none, and it is agreed to.

Is there further business of the Senate which it is desired to have transacted at this time? If not, in pursuance of the resolution that was adopted to-day, the Senate stands in recess until to-morrow at 10.45 a. m.

The Senate accordingly (at 2 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m. Saturday, December 12, 1914) took a recess until to-morrow, Sunday, December 13, 1914, at 10 o'clock and 45 minutes a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, December 12, 1914.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Infinite Spirit, Source of all the riches of the physical, intellectual, and soul life, we would come close to Thee that we may receive the conscious baptism of the Holy Spirit, be renewed in faith and hope, and go forward to the larger life in all that the soul craves for itself, aspiring, achieving in the world of conquest, subduing our passions until we become master of self under the spiritual leadership of the Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. ASHBROOK, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 6282. An act to provide for the registration of, with collectors of internal revenue, and to impose a special tax upon all persons who produce, import, manufacture, compound, deal in, dispense, sell, distribute, or give away opium or coca leaves, their salts, derivatives, or preparations, and for other purposes.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 19422, the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the District of Columbia appropriation bill, with Mr. GARNER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill of which the Clerk will read the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 19422) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and for other purposes.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, there is pending an amendment, with an agreement reached that upon that amendment there shall be a debate of 30 minutes on each side. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON].

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, on other occasions than this I have discussed this question with the House. The amendment in its present form is the amendment in the form which I have always contended it should be in to reach the desired result. There has been a great deal said in the papers within the last day or two about the injustice that is being done the District by this proposed legislation. I believe that no member of your subcommittee, I believe that no member of the committee, and, so far as I know, no Member of the House desires to do the District of Columbia any injustice. I think it would be peculiarly unbecoming a Member of Congress to make any effort to take any advantage of the taxpayers of the District of Columbia under the peculiar form of government which we have in this District.

But I contend that the taxpayer in the District of Columbia should pay taxes on his property in amount about as the taxpayer outside the District of Columbia pays taxes. I contend that the amount of taxes paid upon his property should be about the same amount paid by people living in like cities having like advantages. That proposition no man can deny, and those of us who are insisting on this amendment, and have been insisting so long on this amendment, simply desire that that condition shall prevail here. Whether you favor taxation of invisible property or not the rule prevails generally that the people throughout all the States pay taxes upon invisible, intangible personal property. There is no reason why when a citizen moves into the District of Columbia he should be able to avoid the payment of the tax that he pays in the States.

I am totally at a loss to understand, Mr. Chairman, under what school of philosophy men can contend that the taxpayers of the various States should be called upon to pay, for example, one-half of the cost of the schoolbooks for the children of the people of the District who send their children to school in the District of Columbia; to pay one-half of the school supply bills for the pupils attending the schools. I am at a loss to understand why they should pay one-half of the school-teacher's salary. Under what theory can you say that the taxpayers of Mississippi should pay half of the cost of books for children here in the District, and then out of their own pockets pay for books for their own children and all public-school tax for the support of their schools?

These burdens that are being borne by the Federal Treasury are benefits that accrue alone to the people of this community. An examination of taxation in the cities of the United States shows conclusively that the citizen of the District of Columbia pays about an average of one-half of what the people pay in the cities of like size throughout the United States for the benefits which they get. How can a man justify himself when he goes back to his constituents and is compelled to say to them that they are paying one-half of these burdens? In most of the States the parents of the children have to buy their own schoolbooks, maintain their own streets, maintain their county, State, and municipal governments, and pay taxes for the benefit of the General Government beside. Then upon what theory will men say that these people who live here under the dome of the Capitol, in this particular city set aside for the National Capital, should have special privileges and advantages over other people of the country? I am at a loss to understand it, and at a loss to understand why men should get angry about it, unless it be that by this fair and eminently just proposition we place upon them the burden which they ought to bear and the burden which they do not now bear.

I believe that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PROUTY], in the chart he had before the House at the last session, convinced every Member of the House that the rule was that in all the cities outside the city of Washington they paid about twice the rate of taxation on the true actual value of the property of what they pay here in the city of Washington; that being true, no Member of Congress can justify himself in not voting for this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I do not agree with the gentleman from Iowa that taxes are less than one-half as much in the city of Washington or the District of Columbia as they are elsewhere. On the contrary, I am unfortunate enough to own real estate in several States, although I do not own any in the District of Columbia, and my observation and experience is that property is taxed in the District of Columbia as high, on an average, as it is anywhere else in the country. I believe that the half-and-half plan has worked very well. It is practically impossible for us to tax the Government property in the District of Columbia. The Government of the United States owns an immense amount of property in the District of Columbia. It is easy to instance, as did the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON], the purchase of schoolbooks, and say that it is unfair for our constituents to pay the cost of one-half of them in the District of Columbia. But it is just as easy to say that it would be unfair to have the people of the District of Columbia pay one-half of the cost of the sidewalk in front of the Treasury Building, and yet that is what they do. It is easy enough to cite instances one way or the other. However, my main opposition to the pending amendment is that it will produce legislative confusion. Under the proposition now before us money is to be raised in the District——

Mr. SISSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. I can not yield with only five minutes.

Mr. SISSON. With reference to the sidewalks of the Treasury Department——

Mr. MANN. Well.

Mr. SISSON. I want to say that that has been made heretofore by the Federal Government.

Mr. MANN. It is made out of the District appropriation, and there is an item in this bill——

Mr. SISSON. That is true; but this is the first time it has been in the bill, too.

Mr. MANN. It says for laying sidewalks around Government buildings, paid half by the District of Columbia and half by the Government.

Mr. SISSON. And this is the first time it has been in the bill.

Mr. MANN. It is not the first time.

Mr. SISSON. The sidewalks there now were built by the Federal Government.

Mr. MANN. The bill has carried them in the provision for sidewalks around public buildings. It is on such misinformation the gentleman probably has formed his opinion. My main objection is this: We collect so much money from the people of the District of Columbia. It is proposed that any additional amount shall be paid out of the Federal Treasury, but it is inevitable after that plan is adopted that whenever any proposition is made for a new improvement in the District of Columbia it will be paid for wholly out of the General Treasury. The revenues of the District of Columbia will be considered primarily to carry the ordinary expenses of the District, and whenever a proposition is made for improvement in the District, it will be treated as though it were paid wholly out of the Treasury and not at all by the people of the District of Columbia.

Whenever a proposition is made to increase the amount in the District appropriation bill it will be considered that it is paid wholly out of the General Treasury, and I have seen enough of the temper of the House to know that that argument will be advanced and will have undue weight. Men will refuse in the House here to make public improvements which ought to be made because they will say the entire cost will be paid by the general public away from the District of Columbia, while the benefit is wholly for the people of the District of Columbia. There is no escape from such a conclusion, and there will be no escape from its effect in the House, and the result will be that the District of Columbia, the city of Washington, the Capital of the country, that ought to be viewed somewhat tenderly by the people of the country, will not receive that care that we ought to give to the Capital of our country. I am proud of the city of Washington. I believe anyone who comes here from elsewhere is prouder of the country because he sees the city of Washington. I do not know for certain how it has worked, but the half-and-half proposition was adopted by Congress after there had been long discussion for many years concerning the government of the District, after there had been many trials and some complete failures, but since that plan was adopted the city of Washington has grown beautiful, it has become the pride of our people, and I hope it will continue to be the pride of America. [Applause.]

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON].

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I wish to have the attention of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. Heretofore nothing but the District buildings have ever been provided for in the District bill, and all expenses for sidewalks around the National Government buildings have been borne out of the National Treasury, and the gentleman will not be able to show a single item in the District bill where District funds have been appropriated to pay for sidewalks around national buildings.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP].

[Mr. CRISP addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, about 35 years ago, if I recollect rightly, Congress, after careful consideration of the matter, enacted the legislation under which we have since been operating in appropriating for the District of Columbia. This bill was prepared under that legislation, under that plan. Every item in it, so far as its amount is concerned, was fixed in view of the fact that the Federal Government was expected to pay half and the District half of the expense. It is now proposed, after the bill has been reported, and reported under this law, to overturn this long-established system, the system under which the bill was drafted and formulated, by an amendment which, to say the least, would place us in a condition of uncertainty and confusion relative to the relations between the Federal Government and the District of Columbia in the matter of expenditures.

There is no time in a five-minute speech to go into the question as to the justice or propriety of the system under which we have been operating. But there is a committee of this House whose duty it is to consider such matters. The chairman of that committee has presented this amendment, and it has been held in order by a decision of the Chair.

The chairman of that committee could bring his committee together, could report this same legislation, could on the first day granted his committee under the rules consider this matter at length and in all of its phases, and Congress could determine after careful consideration the propriety of making this revolutionary change. That is not done. But advantage is taken of a rule of the House, questionable in its application, to overturn the long-established system in committee, with a few members present, after an hour of debate. Without regard to the question as to the wisdom of the system under which we are operating, this is neither the time nor the place to change and modify that system. My personal opinion is, based on the information I have, that the half-and-half plan is in the main a wise and a just and a reasonable one. Possibly there should be some modification of it, but no man can say that the plan proposed is fair, just, reasonable, or equitable, because no man knows to what it would lead, no man knows what its ultimate effect would be. So far as my constituents are concerned, they have never been disturbed because I felt it my duty to help build up this beautiful Capital of the Nation. Of course the people here should pay their fair and just share. My constituents are not so narrow as to begrudge the sums which the Federal Government pays toward making and maintaining this city the most beautiful in the world. What we need in the District of Columbia is larger rather than reduced appropriations. Right now this District needs a considerable number of new projects, none of which is provided for in the bill before us. Right now there are interests of the people of the District and of the people of the United States in this city that need attention and care and demand expenditure not provided for in this bill. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES].

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, in casting about for the reasons why the fathers established the National Capital out in the woods and the fields we do not have to go far. Practically in all of the old works of political economy, and especially that notable work of Montesquieu that our fathers delighted to read and study and follow, there was attributed as the reason for the fall of Republics, I believe, following that of great standing armies, the fact of a large capital. I do not wonder that they wanted to get away from the importunities of large populations, large newspapers, the favor and grace of which politicians are glad to have and the influence of which is a matter of great concern to them. Personally, I want a beautiful Capital, but I can not see why paying one-half the taxes of the butcher over on Ninth Street would glorify the Republic. I can not understand why paying one-half the moving-picture man's tax would make a great monument for the United States. And what do we get for these great amounts that are taxed out of the people for the benefit of the District? Nothing but laughs and jeers from the people of this city.

Do you want to build a post office down in Georgia or up in Maine to answer the needs of your people there? If so, the newspapers of this magnificent Capital, with its head in the public crib these many years, taxing the balance of the country, say it is a pork-barrel proposition and laugh it to scorn. Down in my district we have spent $1,900,000 of our local money to improve the waterways and make great harbors that ought to be improved by the people of the United States, and yet the newspapers of the District of Columbia say that the rivers and harbors bill is a pork-barrel bill. So accustomed is this pampered and fatted child of privilege to having its head in the public crib that it is jealous of every expenditure of public money throughout these United States.

Mr. Chairman, if all public men were like the most of us, the disposition of this petted child of the Nation would not influence them in the discharge of their public duties. I am glad that I am not upon their favored list, because it delights me to serve my district and my country without respect to the bouquets of the newspapers or of the people of the District of Columbia. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

And with all that, I want to do them justice, and I want to see a great Capital here, and I want to see great public buildings erected here, and I want to see great parks established here. I want this to be a beautiful Capital of this Great Nation, though not a populous manufacturing center. I will go as far as any man to vote money out of the Public Treasury to consummate that purpose. But oh, how tired I am of this miserable haggling, this miserable criticism, coming from the press of this city and from the people of this city about this niggardly Congress, which is giving them practically $7,000,000 a year, to be taxed from the pockets of the people of your district and of mine. They ought to be taught that they are no better than the balance of the United States. They ought to be taught that when we want money for rivers and harbors in this country and public buildings in your district and in mine it does not become them to speak of "pork barrels" and to criticize Congressmen who want to improve their districts. My district lies nearer and dearer to my heart than all this gilded Capital and all the gilded palaces in this city. I am proud of the sturdy people of my district, who have paid the taxes to make beautiful this city, and none of the sneers and criticisms of the newspapers and the people of this District will drive me from doing what I deem to be my duty to myself, my district, and the people of all these United States. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to this amendment. I am opposed to it because, first, it is an attempt to do a thing indirectly that failed to be done directly. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] referred to the fact that he had introduced a measure last year to repeal the half-and-half act and that it failed. Then there was another attempt to annul the half-and-half proposition subsequent to that, which passed this House, and it ultimately failed to become a law by action of the Senate. Now, we have brought in, in the form of an amendment, an indirect attempt or contrivance to repeal the law.

I am opposed to sitting as a Member of the House, with less than 100 Members here, to undo a legislative act that has stood since 1878, and which required a great deal of consideration by the best brain of our country to establish at that time. I think to attempt to do a thing indirectly that you can not do directly, to start with, is a confession of weakness.

In the second place, I do not believe that a rider, such as this is, should receive very much consideration on an appropriation bill, or anywhere else for that matter. This is to repeal an act which is really an organic act, which is the Constitution, so far as this city and District are concerned, guarding the welfare of the Capital City, and I do not think that it is upon the plane of proper legislation to try to eliminate that in the form of a mere incidental amendment which is nothing more than a rider. A rider is not legislation; it is a means to defeat legislation, and has no place in a legislative body.

Now, in the third place, I do not believe that we ought to undertake to do a thing of this sort suddenly or hastily, in a short time, in an hour's debate, when there is no representative at all of the people of this city and District in this Congress, except the Representatives chosen outside of the District. I am not one of the Members that believe in changing the form of the District government. I am not an advocate of that propaganda, and because I am not I believe that every Member of this House, realizing that the District does not have a representative of its own except as we represent it, ought to be cautious about doing anything that might work any detriment to the people of the Capital City until they have some one to speak for themselves.

Now, that not being probable, it seems to me that we, as the representatives of the people of this District, ought to speak for them rather than against them.

I am opposed to this bill, not because I live in the District temporarily, but I am opposed to it as a citizen of Ohio. I believe in a beautiful Capital, not because I am here but because I am an American citizen. I believe that the men were discreet and acted properly when they ordered built a great depot here, away beyond the needs of this city. A smaller structure would have sufficed, but its art effect would have been lost. They had in mind the Capital City of the Nation when the great outlay was decided upon. If any city in the world ought to be encouraged in showing works of art to the Nation, it is our own Capital City. Therefore I would justify the outlay of money on the part of railroad corporations and others responsible for the building of such a beautiful depot. The same is true of other public buildings. When we came to building a Congressional Library it was proper that it should be a building not simply to house the books, but that it should be the most beautiful building in the world. The same purpose should rule in all we do for the promotion of the growth of the Capital. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PROUTY].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PROUTY] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. PROUTY. Mr. Chairman, I always become more or less amused at the discussion of this question. Every man that rises here on this side or on that side that is opposed to any change always refers to the patriotism of the people in regard to the city of Washington. I undertake to say that I am just as proud of the city of Washington as my friend from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is.

Mr. MANN. I do not believe it.

Mr. PROUTY. I know you do not believe it, and I do not believe what you say now.

Mr. MANN. It is true, nevertheless.

Mr. PROUTY. Well, my statement is true, too; just as true as yours, although not coming with so large and sonorous a sound.

Mr. MANN. You are making a great deal more noise than I am.

Mr. PROUTY. I have not made a great deal more noise than you have, and am incapable of making nearly as much. Now, with that personality I will pass to the discussion of the question. [Laughter.]

To be patriotic does not mean to be unjust. The people of the United States seem to have gotten the idea into their heads that Uncle Sam is rich. Uncle Sam is a pauper. Every dollar he gets he gets as a contribution from his friends. [Applause.]

Mr. MURDOCK. They hold him up, as a matter of fact.

Mr. PROUTY. Now, suppose, having collected it from all his children, one of them should say, "I want a bigger portion of that than the rest get." Suppose my friend from Illinois [Mr. MANN] was Uncle Sam himself, and I should chide him and say, "You are taking money that belongs to me and giving it to the other boy," and he should say, "Oh, yes; but I am proud of that boy!" [Laughter.] I am proud of the city of Washington.. I am proud of this Capital, as proud of it as the gentleman from Illinois is; but I am not proud enough of the city of Washington to go over to Illinois, to his city of Chicago, and take the money that the people there have contributed to pay for the bills that can justly and honestly be paid and that ought to be paid by the people living here. [Applause.]

My good friend from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] exhibited a trait of mind that I often find. It is common. His whole argument was based upon the fact that whatever is is right, and that because this condition has been here 33 years it must be right. Now, that is the standpat temperament, and he can not help it. [Applause and laughter.] They do not believe anything should ever be righted. They think if it ever existed it ought always to exist. But to show the folly of that, suppose that 33 years ago the gentleman had had a suit of clothes that at that time perfectly fitted his boyish form, would he contend that therefore it must exactly fit him now? At that time Washington was a little place. The first contribution by the Federal Government was less than $1,500,000, but now it has reached the point where it is $7,000,000. Conditions have entirely changed. Conditions that fitted then do not fit now. And why do we stand here and say simply because it was all right then, it must be right now?

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman misunderstood me. If I had a suit of clothes that was old and did not fit, I would go to a tailor for a new suit, and would not go to a blacksmith. [Laughter.]

Mr. PROUTY. I did not yield to the gentleman from Wyoming, if I remember.

Mr. MANN. But you attacked him.

Mr. PROUTY. No; I did not attack him. I attacked his argument. Notwithstanding the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois, I still think I have a right to attack the gentleman's argument.

Mr. MONDELL. Yes; but the gentleman did not state my argument correctly.

Mr. PROUTY. I suggest that the gentleman from Wyoming is not in order. He is generally in order, but not now. Now, he further said he defied any man to say that it was fair, just, right, or reasonable for the District of Columbia to pay out the money that it had raised for the purpose of paying its own expenses. I am here to say that it is just and right and fair and equitable that the people of the District of Columbia pay the money that they raise on their own property by a very low rate of taxation, as an assessment, before they should go out and levy a war tax upon the people in my district and in your district to make up the deficit, when these people already have it in their own hands to pay. [Applause.]

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Will the gentleman from Minnesota occupy some time?

Mr. DAVIS. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN].

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I am one of perhaps too large a class in this House, in that I have probably failed to discharge my full duty to the District of Columbia. I confess that I have never taken a very active interest in legislation for the District. Of course, I should have done so. I am ready to admit that I ought to have done it; but there are a multitude of other things calling for our attention, and one finds it impossible to do everything. But in an effort to inform myself I have listened to most of the debate on this question this year, as I did last year, and I confess to great confusion in my mind as to what is proper. I want to deal with perfect justice to the people of the District of Columbia, and I am determined, if I can know how to do so, that I shall deal with perfect justice to my own constituency and to all the other people of this country. If the people of the District of Columbia are enjoying advantages in the way of lower taxes than the people of other cities in this country, then I do not believe that that is a fair condition. I think they ought to be made to contribute to the support of the government of the District of Columbia as much, certainly, as those of us do in fairly well governed cities in other parts of the country toward their support. I have heard statements made on this floor within the last day or two with reference to the percentage of taxes paid in the District of Columbia, and I looked up some receipts for taxes that I had paid in my own city of San Antonio, and I was surprised to find that I was paying more than the people pay here, if these statements are accurate. I do not think that ought to be, although, of course, it might be due to unnecessarily high taxes elsewhere.

Being convinced that this amendment, if adopted, can only be made to apply to the bill now under consideration, I have drawn and sent to the Committee on Rules—expecting, however, that it would have gone to the Committee on the District of Columbia—a concurrent resolution providing for a special joint committee to be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the President of the Senate, to examine into this question of the equity of the existing system of supporting the government of the District of Columbia, and to report to the Congress within 12 months. I hope that it will be adopted, either as an amendment to this amendment or separately, if the Chairman shall rule that it is in order, or that it will be reported from the Committee on Rules and adopted by the House under such a report if it is held not to be in order on this bill.

I want light on this question. I want to know what is just to the people of the District of Columbia and to the taxpayers of the balance of the country. If it is true that the present system begets extravagance, the present system should be abolished. If it is true that more money is being collected than needed for the development of this marvelously beautiful city, then, by all means, we should adopt some means which would reduce the contribution of the people here and in the country at large.

I quite agree with what my colleague has said—that the people of the District of Columbia have assumed an attitude which, to some extent at least, is an insult to the self-respecting Member of Congress. They have assumed a hostility on our part to the people of this community and to the growth of the city of Washington. I feel no such hostility; in spite of their sneers, in spite of their folly, I am still prepared to do justice by all the people who live in this Capital.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, it is impossible to discuss this subject as it should be discussed within the five minutes' time allowed me; but there is one feature of it upon which everybody who is in favor of this amendment may congratulate himself, and that is that not the slightest semblance of a real argument has been advanced against it.

Originally the city of Washington was designed to become the most beautiful city in the world. It has become the most beautiful city in the world, and I am as proud of that fact as is any other man upon this floor or elsewhere. No man here or in the country more desires that Washington should be the most beautiful city in all the world than do I. But I do not desire that to be brought about by the undertaxation of the people of the District of Columbia and the overtaxation of the people in the States.

Only a few months ago I produced here a list of 40 cities, giving the rate of taxation in each and every one of those cities. That table showed that the people of the District of Columbia pay a smaller rate of taxation than the people of any other city in all this land, notwithstanding the fact that statistics show that the people of the District of Columbia are the richest per capita in all this Nation.

As I said in the beginning of my remarks, when this city was first laid out it was bounded by Florida Avenue on the north and the Potomac River on the south. Then in that boundary there was comparatively a few number of acres to the great number of acres which you now ask the Federal Government to bear one-half of the expense in improving. The people of this Nation are not asked to bear one-half of the expense in improving the city of Washington as originally designed, but they are asked to bear one-half of the expense in beautifying the entire District of Columbia.

The city of Washington as originally laid out could now be a city of such excellence, of such beauty, that in a hundred years no city in the world could approach it, if the money had been spent in the city of Washington. But speculators beyond the original boundaries of the city of Washington have secured the expenditure of the greater portion of this money in that direction instead of in the original city of Washington proper. Originally you were asked to beautify about 4,500 acres. By the act of 1878 you were asked to beautify 45,000 acres. That was never the intention of our fathers and it is not the desire of the people of this land to-day.

I heard one gentleman offer an argument that he had never heard any complaint in his section against the half-and-half principle; but, on being questioned, said that everyone he did hear mention it admitted that he did not know before that the people of the Nation paid one-half of the expenses of the District of Columbia. This question has resolved itself into this: That you must waste the money if the United States matches every dollar raised by taxation in the District of Columbia or you must reduce the rate of taxation in the District. If you reduce the rate in order to keep within the bounds of decent expenditure, then you more and more lessen the rate of taxation upon the people that are already taxed to-day less than any other people of this Nation. In other words, just as the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PROUTY] has said, you must still further reduce the rate, making favorites of these people who are now paying a rate already too low, in order that you may not raise more money than can be legitimately expended.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Will the gentleman from Minnesota use some of his time? There will be only one other speech on this side.

Mr. DAVIS. How much time have I remaining, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has 10 minutes.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. Moss].

Mr. MOSS of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PROUTY], who I am sure is a patriotic gentleman, hardly wants to go on record with the proposition stated by him, that we are here to contribute to a pauper, and that that pauper is our own Nation. That theory is a new one to me. I thought that this great Government of ours was a government of all the people, and I thought that we all, no matter from what section we might come, so regarded it.

The argument of the gentleman, in my opinion, Mr. Chairman, is defective when he says that other parts of the country, so far as appropriations are concerned, are entitled to just as much consideration as the Capital of our Nation, and that we should not spend the money of the people for the benefit of Washington. I believe that the Capital of this Nation is entitled to the most careful consideration. It is not the capital of the District of Columbia, it is not the capital of Iowa, it is not the capital of West Virginia, but it is the Capital of all the people of our national domain—of every State in this Union. I believe that instead of regarding this nation as a pauper, to which we all contribute, we should regard it as the nation of nations, and this Capital as the beauty spot of the country. I believe that when the citizens from the State of Iowa, as well as the citizens of all the other States of the Union, come to this Capital they expect it to be grander and more beautiful than any other place in the Union.

Mr. Chairman, I do not think it is a waste of the people's money. I do not think it is an injustice to the rest of the country. I do believe that this great city of Washington, with all its beauty and grandeur, representing the greatness and vastness of our country, should be made more beautiful, and that it is only fair, inasmuch as it is the Nation's Capital, that the Nation should bear the brunt of the expense necessary to make it superior to other cities. I am opposed to this amendment to the appropriation bill which seeks to relieve us from our real responsibilities and obligations, first, because the amendment is not legitimate—it is not a proper amendment; it is an attempt to resurrect a thing that has been defeated by this House before; it is an attempt in an indirect way to defeat the will of the people; and, again, I am opposed to it because I believe it should be the duty and the pleasure of this Congress to make this Capital, the Capital of the greatest of all peoples, the garden place of all the earth, the admiration of all the world.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER].

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, the act of 1878 had some good sponsors, among them being Senator Thurman, of Ohio; Senator Bayard, of Delaware, both great Democrats and honest men; Abram S. Hewitt, a very able Member of this House from New York; and George F. Hoar, then a Representative and afterwards a Senator from Massachusetts, one of the noblest men ever in either House of Congress. The act of 1878 was not a job; it was the result of profound study by statesmen.

I introduced a resolution to have an impartial commission appointed to investigate this question and see what, in justice to the Government and the District, ought to be done, because the problem is one of the most complex on the subject of taxation that I ever have studied. In order that justice may be done, there ought to be an impartial investigation by competent, disinterested investigators.

I am opposed to the pending amendment because it is a rider, and legislating by riders on appropriation bills ought at once to be stopped. By the pending amendment we are confronted with this situation: Either accept something you do not believe in or vote against an appropriation necessary for the life of the Government. In other words, if you do not take what in substance you have once defeated in the House, we will starve the District of Columbia. You shall not vote an appropriation necessary to continue the affairs of the District unless at the same time you accept an irrelevant proposition in which you do not believe and that ought never to have been placed on an appropriation bill. This is an appropriation bill. It is entitled "A bill making appropriations for the District of Columbia." But this amendment does not propose an appropriation for the District of Columbia. It makes no reference to any appropriation. It is a piece of independent legislation and one which as an original proposition was defeated here a short time ago on a fair vote after free debate. And yet here it now is offered on this appropriation bill as a rider. Attaching important riders to appropriation bills is a vicious way to legislate. It leads to legislation by coercion. There should be nothing like coercion on this floor. Each Member ought to be perfectly free to vote as he thinks right on the merits of each individual proposition. If the appropriations are what the District of Columbia need, then vote for them; but let us not be obliged to do something in which we do not believe in order that appropriations may be passed which are necessary for the support of the Government. [Applause.]

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. OGLESBY].

Mr. OGLESBY. Mr. Chairman, if it be believed that the so-called half-and-half plan is inequitable, the matter should be determined by inquiry into the whole subject to ascertain what proportion of the total cost of maintaining the District government should be borne by the National Government. Upon such inquiry full opportunity should be afforded all interested property owners to be heard, either personally or through their duly authorized representatives. The information thus obtained would enable us to fix the proportionate shares of the expense of the District government that should be paid, respectively, from the Federal Treasury and by the other property owners and citizens of the District.

In arriving at our conclusion every phase of the subject, including the value of all the real and personal property of the National Government located in the District; the value of all other real and personal property in the District, and of all other property owned by residents of the District, of a nature properly subject to taxation therein; what property should be exempt from taxation; and what items of expense, if any, of maintaining the District government should not be shared at all by the National Government. The proportionate shares being agreed upon and the total expenditure ascertained, it is a simple matter of arithmetic to figure the amount to be appropriated from the National Treasury, which amount being deducted from the total expenditure, the remainder is the net budget to be raised by taxation. The rate will then follow the budget as in every other city in the United States, and whether property be assessed for taxation purposes at 50 or 100 per cent of its true value would be of no interest to Congress, and for that matter of little concern to the taxpayers of the District, provided, of course, there be no favoritism or discrimination.

There has been no argument submitted in support of the proposed amendment other than the oft-reiterated assertion that the National Government is paying more than it properly should. No facts are presented from which a finding can be made as to what proportion of the expenses of the District government should be paid from the National Treasury. Advocates of this amendment admit that they have made no attempt to ascertain such facts. They have not even given us the benefit of their best guess on the subject.

Permit me to illustrate what they do propose: Assume that I am the owner of a farm in a fertile valley adjacent to a stream which would annually overflow its banks and cause serious damage, and to prevent which temporary dikes had been constructed and annually rebuilt or repaired. Assume also that I am fortunate enough to have for a neighbor my friend the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PROUTY], owning land in the rear, having substantially the same elevation and subject to similar damage from overflow, but with no frontage on the stream. Assume that for a number of years we have shared equally the expense of protecting our lands from overflow in the manner above indicated. Now he comes to me and says that he has carefully examined into the subject and has figured it all out, and has arrived at the conclusion that he has been paying more than his fair share of such expenses and wants a readjustment. I answer him: "Very well, in what proportions should we share such expense? Show me the figures and tell me what facts you have taken into consideration in making your estimate." He replies: "I have not figured it out that way. I have ascertained as nearly as I could the cost per front foot of maintaining similar dikes for the protection of other farms in our valley whose boundaries extend from the stream to the foothills and the expense of which has been borne wholly by the men who own the lands fronting on the stream. I have even ascertained, as near as I could from men in your employ, what it costs you annually per front foot to construct and maintain the dikes on another farm which you yourself own fronting on this stream. My proposition is that you pay over to me a sum equal to the average cost per annum per stream-foot frontage, and since I wish to be fair, yes generous, I will fix the sum which I propose that you pay at really less than I estimate the average cost to be of maintaining the dikes to protect these other farms which I have mentioned. I will use this money which you pay over to me in meeting all the necessary expense, the amount of which I shall use my own judgment in determining, of maintaining our dikes, and if, after I have used all the money which you have paid over I find it is not sufficient, I shall pay the deficit out of my own pocket. If it develops that the amount which you have paid is more than sufficient to meet all the expenses, I shall again be generous and return to you the surplus."

I have heard it repeatedly stated in discussions on this floor that real estate owners within the District of Columbia pay very much lower taxes in proportion to the actual value of their holdings than are paid by property owners in almost every other city of any importance in the Union. Based on my experience, I say that this statement is inaccurate. I pay taxes on a number of parcels of real estate distributed through four boroughs of the city of New York and in the city of Yonkers, as well as on a modest house I own within the District of Columbia, and the general average paid on my New York and Yonkers property in proportion to its true value is less than I pay on the house in the District of Columbia.

I should not consent to have my constituents pay one cent of taxes to relieve residents and property owners within the District of Columbia from the payment of any sum properly chargeable against them. The cost should be divided in proportion to the respective interests and ownerships to be maintained and protected.

I have no more fear of violating the sanctity of the so-called half-and-half plan by changing it to one more equitable than the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] has of violating the sanctity of a Saturday afternoon in August by attending a ball game, or than the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PROUTY] has of violating the sanctity of a beautiful day in June by enjoying its sunlight and air on the golf links of the Columbia Country Club; and if I believed the half-and-half plan wrong, I would not any more recommend its change to the indefinite and inequitable proposition suggested by this amendment than would the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] suggest to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PROUTY] that he wean himself from the allurements of golf by substituting therefor poker and highballs in an attractive rear room of a gin mill on Fourteenth Street.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I had not intended to enter into this debate, so said, and I should not do so had not my friend from Illinois [Mr. MANN], who is always well informed about legislation, made a statement which I think he will not now stand for. It was to the effect that the paving around Government buildings in the District of Columbia had been paid for out of this half and half. I assert that not a single dollar has ever been appropriated in a District bill, until this one, to lay a pavement around a piece of Government property in the District of Columbia. That is the fact, in spite of the statement made by my friend from Illinois. There are other gentlemen upon the floor of this House who have admitted confessedly that they know nothing about this proposition. That is not the fault of those of us who have studied it. There are some of us who have given a good deal of time and thought to this matter of taxation in the District of Columbia, and some, excluding myself, are possibly as near statesmen as those who formulated the half-and-half plan.

There is a mistaken idea advanced here this morning that this amendment proposes in some way to change the rate of taxation for the assessment on property in the District of Columbia. There is absolutely nothing in this amendment that changes either the assessment or the rate of taxation on such property. It is purely and simply an amendment which will use all of the taxes of the District of Columbia as now levied to the extent of all of that revenue, supplemented from the National Treasury by such an amount as is necessary for the conduct of the District of Columbia. There is nothing in it except that, and any gentleman who has a conception other than that is mistaken as to what the amendment will do. It does that and nothing more.

Mr. OGLESBY. Will the gentleman yield for just a short question?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I would like to yield to the gentleman, but I have not the time to yield.

Now, as to the proposition advanced by my friend from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL]. I believe it was that the District of Columbia had no representation—no; it was my friend from Ohio [Mr. FESS]—had no representation upon this floor. I make the assertion that there is no other jurisdiction in the United States that is so ably represented by so many able gentlemen. [Applause.] It has the ablest representation of any district in the United States, and the gentleman from Ohio is one of them and there are a great many more. I do not want to place any injustice upon the taxpayers of the District. I merely want them to bear that share of the burdens of the government in this city—just that and no more—that any other people similarly situated in other cities of the Nation bear. I would not place the slightest burden upon them that anybody else in any other city does not have to endure. I am not willing to place upon my constituency and your constituency an extra burden for the purpose of relieving the District of a just taxation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired; all time has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division.

The committee divided, and there were—ayes 72, noes 44.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Engineer commissioner's office: Engineer of highways, $3,000; engineer of bridges, $2,250; superintendents—1 of streets $2,000, 1 of suburban roads $2,000, 1 of sewers $3,300; asphalts and cements—inspector $2,400: Provided, That the inspector of asphalts and cements shall not receive or accept compensation of any kind from or perform any work or render any services of a character required of him officially by the District of Columbia to any person, firm, corporation, or municipality other than the District of Columbia, assistant inspector $1,500; trees and parkings—superintendent $2,000, assistant superintendent $1,200; assistant engineers—1 $2,200, 1 $2,100, 4 at $1,800 each, 2 at $1,600 each, 4 at $1,500 each, 2 at $1,350 each, 1 $1,200; transitmen—two at $1,200 each, 1 $1,050; rodmen—4 at $900 each, 8 at $780 each; 12 chainmen, at $650 each; draftsmen—1 $1,500, 2 at $1,200 each, 1 $1,050; general inspector of sewers, $1,300; inspector of sewers, $1,200; bridge inspector, $1,200; inspectors—2 at $1,500 each, 5 (including 2 of streets) at $1,200 each, 1 $1,000, 1 $900; transitman, $1,200; foremen—12 at $1,200 each, 1 $1,050, 10 at $900 each; foreman, Rock Creek Park, $1,200; 3 subforemen, at $1,050 each; bridgekeepers—1 $650, 3 at $600 each; chief clerk, $2,250; permit clerk, $1,500; assistant permit clerk, $1,000; index clerk and typewriter, $900; clerks—1 $1,800, 2 at $1,500 each, 2 at $1,400 each, 5 at $1,200 each, 2 at $1,000 each, 1 $900, 1 $840, 2 at $750 each, 1 $600; messengers—7 at $600 each; skilled laborers—1 $625, 2 at $600 each; janitor, $720; steam engineers—principal $1,800, 3 at $1,200 each, 3 assistants at $1,050 each; 6 oilers, at $600 each; 6 firemen, at $875 each; inspector, $1,400; storekeeper, $900; superintendent of stables, $1,500; blacksmith, $975; 2 watchmen, at $630 each; two drivers, at $630 each; in all, $173,870.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment as a separate paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add at the end of line 9, page 9, the following:
"Hereafter the Chesapeake & Ohio Canal Co. shall make the same returns to the assessor and be taxed at the same rate on all of its property, both real and personal, which lies within the District of Columbia, just as individual persons are required to make return and be taxed."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the attention of the committee. The subject needs very few words of explanation. About 91 years ago the Chesapeake & Ohio Canal Co. secured from the Congress a charter by which their property in the District of Columbia was not to be taxed. That corporation has gone now for 91 years without paying any taxes. I ascertained this morning from the assessor's office that this company owns in the District of Columbia real property to the value of nearly $150,000. The only question that arises is, Should they pay taxes or not?—and that question I am willing to submit to the committee.

Mr. SLAYDEN and Mr. MONDELL rose.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I do, and to the gentleman from Texas, who is nearer to me.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I was interested in the history of this canal, and I have often wondered in reference to the present business status of the canal company, as to whether it was a going business concern, and if so, to what extent.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. It is a going business concern, but to what extent I do not know. My information is that the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad owns more than 50 per cent of its capital stock and that it is operated as a subsidiary of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, and that their principal traffic is the coal traffic down the river to Washington and farther down the Potomac River.

Mr. SLAYDEN. That is by barge on the canal?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. It is carried over this canal and is——

Mr. SLAYDEN. I have been under the impression that usually when a railroad acquires a canal property it is done with a view to destroying it as a business concern. They own them for the purpose of controlling the traffic rather than using the canal itself in the conduct of business.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I have no way of knowing the intention of the company which owns the controlling interest in the stock.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Except that one might judge from the volume of business.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I gather from rumor that the railroad desires to own this canal for two reasons: One is that up above Washington, I do not know just how far, some 40 or 50 miles perhaps, the canal at great expense has been built through the mountains. There is the only place where another railroad could be built if one is ever built, and by controlling that opening in the mountain there they can preclude the building of another railroad; and, besides, they use it profitably in their coal business, according to my information.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Under the terms of their charter are they exempt from all taxes ?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. As I said, it was chartered about 91 years ago, and during that time they have been exempted from taxes and have never paid any.

Mr. SLAYDEN. All taxes?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. If the gentleman will yield to me for a moment, that being true that they are exempt by the conditions of their charter and assuming the charter is a perpetual charter exempting them from taxation, would an item carried in an appropriation bill change the situation in the judgment of the gentleman?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. My opinion is, and I am very pronounced in the view that my opinion is right, that it is a repeal by implication and will be effective.

Mr. SLAYDEN. The gentleman put precisely the question that I was going to ask, and I wanted an answer to that, too.

Mr. MOORE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will.

Mr. MOORE. I call the gentleman's attention to line 15 on page 22. His amendment probably would have been more appropriate there.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania will bear in mind, I have offered it as a separate section.

Mr. MOORE. Yes; I understand the gentleman did.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. And I will say to the gentleman I did so at this particular time because of my physical inability to stay here during the consideration of the bill. I have been in bed for two days and nights now.

Mr. MOORE. On page 22, beginning with line 15, there is a paragraph which provides for reconstruction of a retaining wall, with a provision that the Chesapeake & Ohio Co. shall pay one-half, the cost to be $5,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] has expired.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I seek recognition and will yield the time to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] if he desires it. I wish to say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, who was interrogating the gentleman from Ohio, that in the event this amendment is agreed to I shall ask the consent of the House, at the appropriate time, that the committee be allowed to place it in its proper place in the bill.

Mr. MOORE. I brought the question up here because it would appear that we were still indulging the half-and-half plan, which we have already discredited in this bill, and also because it would seem to answer the question of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] as to whether or not the canal company was a going company. If you charge them one-half of $5,000, they are evidently able to pay their part for the reconstruction of a retaining wall. While the gentleman from North Carolina is on his feet, and in his time, I would like to ask whether the Chesapeake & Ohio Canal Co. is a toll company?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I assure the gentleman I can not answer that. Possibly the gentleman from Kentucky can answer in my time. I have never investigated this matter at all.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I have no information on that subject. All I know is that they own this property and pay no tax on it, and have paid none for 91 years.

Mr. MOORE. Does the gentleman know whether vessels of the public are permitted to pass through free of tolls?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I have no information on the subject.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield at that point in order to state the amount of property that would be subject to taxation if the charter did not forbid?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I say the assessments show about $100,000 in real property.

Mr. MONDELL. Can the gentleman from Kentucky inform us as to the character of that property?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I can not. All I have is a report from the assessor.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman does not know whether it consists of landed property or not?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I just said it was real estate.

Mr. MONDELL. And not all boats?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I have just said it was real estate only.

Mr. MONDELL. The bank of the canal?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I do not know what it is. I understand, however, they have some warehouses and terminals, but I do not know.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the Chesapeake & Ohio Canal has undoubtedly some valuable property as a terminal. In the report of the commission concerning the boulevard or park down Rock Creek it appeared under the act of Congress we would have to take a lot of valuable property belonging to the terminal of the Chesapeake & Ohio Canal, if I remember correctly.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I do not know. I have learned through the newspapers and through just common rumor that the Chesapeake & Ohio Canal Co. did have some valuable property which they are seeking to sell for park purposes.

Mr. MANN. The Chesapeake & Ohio Canal was not seeking to sell the property, and the commissioners reported that the Chesapeake & Ohio Canal did not want to sell the property, but Congress had ordered it taken and the commissioners advised it be not taken.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. MANN. I do not wish to argue the question further. I wish to make a statement in my five minutes. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] asked if this was a toll company. Undoubtedly it is. In riding around the city last fall and summer, when we were detained here so long, I frequently rode by the Chesapeake & Ohio Canal, and I noticed a large number of boats were laid up, and practically all of these boats belonged to one company, which company, I think, is owned by the canal itself. I do not know whether these people ought to pay taxes or not—but very likely—although if we buy a canal, as urged by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, in Maryland, there will be no tax paid on that. The Government buys it and pays the expenses of maintenance, but it pays no taxes.

If the other gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL] has his way, we shall have some more canals down here, built by the Government, maintained by the Government, and operated by the Government, which pay no taxes. Whether it is more desirable to have this company sell out to the Government in the end and escape taxation in that way or in this way, I do not know; but if they have a charter which exempts them from taxation, it seems to me that the matter ought to be considered in the proper way.

The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON], the chairman of the great Committee on the District of Columbia, can bring in a bill at any time repealing that part of the charter, and, so far as I am concerned, he can pass it; but I do not believe it ought to go into an appropriation bill without any report from a committee on the matter, and therefore I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For valuation work, as required by law, $30,000.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 9, line 24, strike out "$30,000" and insert "$40,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. MONDELL rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wyoming desire recognition?

Mr. MONDELL. I do.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Will the gentleman from Wyoming yield to me one moment?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes; I will be glad to. It might be well to yield to the gentleman five minutes, or possibly more.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, under the act authorizing the valuation of the property of public utilities in the District of Columbia the general deficiency appropriation bill carried an appropriation of $100,000. At that time the members of the utilities commission estimated that it would require $110,000 to carry out the work as it has been prescribed by the Congress in the utilities valuation act. The estimates submitted to this Congress and the amount carried in the bill is the same—$30,000—for the completion of the physical valuation of these public utilities. After the bill was made up and reported to the House a supplemental estimate—House Document No. 1208—was forwarded through the Secretary of the Treasury, asking an additional $10,000 for the completion of this work. The statement has been made to me by the members of the public utilities commission and those who are engaged by the commission in the making of this valuation that the $40,000 would be required to complete it, and that the completion would be early in September of next year.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Yes; I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. Of what companies have they made the valuation complete?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I will read from a letter, under date of December 9, 1914, addressed to me by Dr. Edward W. Bemis, who has charge of this valuation work:

The work is being done very economically, as the commissioner will tell you, and the two big street railway systems and the electric light and power for the entire District will be appraised on the existing appropriation, but the telephone and gas can not be undertaken without the additional $40,000; and while our force is organized it will be cheaper to do the work next June, July, and August than to dismiss the force and reorganize a year or two later.

My understanding is that the work is so organized, or the present force is so organized, that the $100,000 appropriated will be expended in the completion of the street railway and electric light companies' valuation.

Mr. MANN. They have not yet completed the valuation of the street railways proper?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. No; they have not completed it.

Mr. MANN. I would like to see something some time where some benefit may come from this.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. They make the statement that they will complete the entire work by September, next year, if this appropriation is given them.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. PAGE].

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Yes; I yield.

Mr. STAFFORD. I believe that these gentlemen are receiving very high salaries. I understand this Dr. Bemis is receiving a salary of $100 a day, and the engineer $50 a day, and by this appropriation you are to continue them in employment until September.

Mr. MANN. I think he used to be a college professor, glad to get three or four thousand dollars a year.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. In reply to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD], I will say that in a statement submitted to Congress in the Book of Estimates the rate of compensation to Dr. Bemis is given as $100 a day, but in the contract made by the commissioners with him his service is limited to 75 days in a year. In other words, he is employed to complete this organization and supervise the proper work in the making of these valuations. In that connection we inquired very particularly into this compensation, and the statement was made to us that this particular gentleman was employed on account of the reputation that he had made in other cities, that they could not afford to have any less than the most expert of people there are in the country, because this matter will unquestionably be carried into the courts and be contested there, inasmuch as the utility companies are at the same time making a valuation of their own property.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. He is now receiving a Representative's salary for two and one-half months' work. Of course he is employed, I should judge, in many other places. But the pay that he is receiving here is similar to the pay he is receiving elsewhere at the same time, is it?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I do not know about the same time, but the statement was made to us that Dr. Bemis was receiving this compensation from other cities for doing like work. Whether it is simultaneous with this, I can not answer.

Mr. MANN. It must be simultaneous.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. His employment here is limited by the contract to 75 days in a year.

Mr. MANN. That means that he is not here all the time.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Of course he is not here all the time.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, we have appropriated up to this time $268,000 for valuation work under the Public Utilities Commission. The last appropriation made was in the deficiency act of the last session, and it amounted to $100,000; and I notice that the Public Utilities Commission has overlooked the requirement of law under which they are supposed to submit a detailed statement of their expenditures. They did present a detailed statement of their expenditures under the general item, but no estimate or statement of any sort or kind was before the committee, or is now before the House, as to what was done with it, and how much of the $100,000 appropriation has been expended. Neither has the committee any definite information from any source as to the amount of work which has been performed or as to just how much we have received in the way of actual accomplishment and progress from the expenditure of the large amount of money heretofore appropriated. It seems to me it is a most lamentable oversight that the commission should fail to comply with the mandatory provision of law relative to reporting its expenditures. It seems to me even more unfortunate that the commission has given us no sort of an intelligible statement as to how far it has progressed with the work.

So far as the committee are concerned, we have no sort of an idea whether this work will be completed with the appropriation we are now proposing to make or not. It is suggested that it may be completed, but we have no means of judging in the matter. So far as we know, it may cost $100,000 more. So far as any information we have to the contrary, it may take one or two years, instead of a few months, to complete this work.

Attention was called to the fact that Dr. Bemis, who has charge of this work, was receiving $100 per day.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield in that connection?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I do not believe Dr. Bemis has charge of the work at all. He merely has charge of the selection of the experts.

Mr. MONDELL. I did not yield to the gentleman for a statement. Will he allow me to finish my statement?

Mr. STAFFORD. I thought you yielded to me for information.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Oh, no; impossible. [Laughter.]

Mr. MONDELL. I do not think the gentleman can inform me on this matter.

Mr. STAFFORD. Perhaps not.

Mr. MONDELL. I think I am fairly informed upon it.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman may be better informed than I am, but he has not been giving very much information to the committee. [Laughter.]

Mr. MONDELL. The subcommittee interrogated the commissioners with regard to the compensation of Dr. Bemis. It seemed to them to be large, but they were assured by Commissioner Siddons that a large compensation was necessary, for one reason, in order that the valuation when made might have a proper standing in court. In other words, it must be a high-priced valuation, made by high-priced men, or the court would not feel inclined to give it proper weight.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I will.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. The gentleman is usually fair.

Mr. MONDELL. I want to be fair.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Now, in fairness to the commissioners, and not in defense of myself, was it not rather upon the reputation of Dr. Bemis, instead of the price paid to him, that they were placing their reliance for its effect upon the mind of the court?

Mr. MONDELL. I do not recall that they told us what Dr. Bemis's reputation is. Dr. Bemis has a reputation as a scholar and as a very earnest and persistent advocate of public ownership of public utilities. He has a wide reputation in that regard, and he has been employed elsewhere in matters of valuation. But, as the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] was about to say a moment ago when I checked his interruption, the fact is that Dr. Bemis is not in charge of this valuation at all.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent for five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. The fact is that Dr. Bemis has nothing whatever to do with the valuation, according to the statement made by Maj. Kutz to the subcommitee. Dr. Bemis is simply an organizer. He organizes the force. He does not do any of the actual work of valuation himself. He does not visit the properties or examine the buildings, plant, and equipment. He is the leader and organizer of the men. He selects the subordinates and outlines the plan of campaign. Now, I can understand how a man's services might be worth $100 a day if he were an expert in property values, if he had wide experience in valuing property of this kind; but I do not understand how a man's services can be worth $100 a day simply as the organizer of a valuation force. Any good man with ability along the line of organization and management certainly could do that. Nor do I understand how the valuation, when made, will have any more standing in court than it otherwise would have because of the fact that $100 a day was paid to the man who organized the force. It is true we are paying $30 a day to a man who has charge of the actual work of valuation. Now, it seems to me this matter of compensation has got badly twisted. The important thing here is the valuation of the property, not the organization of the force.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. MONDELL. We have either got these men wrongly placed or we have the salaries a little mixed.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wyoming yield to the gentleman from North Carolina?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Does not the gentleman recognize the fact that the most important function that can be discharged by anyone is the proper selection of the men to do a thing?

Mr. MONDELL. Well, I realize that is important; but I do not think that function is so important that in a matter of that kind a man can well earn $100 a day, to be entirely frank about it. I am not an expert on this sort of thing, but I doubt it. I can understand how a man might be worth that if doing the actual work of valuation, if he had had a very wide and very successful experience in that sort of thing. But I did not intend to dwell particularly on this question of emoluments, although I think that it is rather extraordinary that the public is called upon to pay $100 a day for services of this character.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. PAGE].

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For incidental and all other general necessary expenses authorized by law, $2,799.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I was about to say when interrupted by the Clerk a moment ago that what I particularly wanted to emphasize on this occasion is the fact that we have no information as to what this force organized by Dr. Bemis has done. The law requires a report, and no report has been made. The committee of the House is entitled to a definite statement as to how far the work has progressed. We are entirely in the dark as to the progress that has been made. As a matter of fact, we do not know how much has been spent, and we do not know how much has been accomplished. I think the gentleman from North Carolina will not deny that.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. No; except in this way: The statement was made to the subcommittee and to me personally by the chairman of the utilities commission that this organization was made upon the basis of completing the work within the fiscal year of the current appropriation, and the deduction to be drawn from that is that the valuation of these properties has proceeded to about half of its completion.

Mr. MONDELL. One thing more. The work of valuation ought to be speedily completed. It is not necessary to go into detail as to reasons why the work should be speedily accomplished. My attention has been called recently to a curious view that the Public Utilities Commission takes in regard to needed and necessary extensions of the public-service facilities, particularly the extension of street car lines. I understand that the street car companies are willing and ready to make certain extensions. I know as a matter of personal knowledge that the people of the neighborhood in which I live have been long seeking a railway extension which ought to be made. The Public Utilities Commission insist that they will not even consider this matter of extension of street railway lines until they have completed this valuation. And so here we are, a work going on which ought to be helpful and beneficial to the public, and yet the present effect of it is to prevent the ordinary extension of public service, which but for the fact that the commission is making a valuation would be going on. I do not think that attitude of the commission can be justified by anyone. The people up in the northwest are entitled to certain street car extension, and the Public Utilities Commission has no business in denying them the extension while they dawdle along, or push along, or rush along, whichever they may be doing, in this important matter of the valuation of these properties.

The Clerk read as follows:

For maintenance and repair of fish wharf and market, $500.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The District Commissioners submitted an estimate of $200,000 for buildings at the fish and produce wharf which the committee did not see fit to allow. Those buildings should be provided for in the near future, but I do not think the committee is altogether at fault in the matter, although I think they should have allowed the item. Last year we appropriated $50,000 for the construction of wharves at the fish market—something very badly needed. This year, a year later, we discover that the plans for this work have not yet been drawn. It is a little discouraging to the committee endeavoring to appropriate for the District to discover that after the committee has made appropriations they are not promptly utilized. To a certain extent the committee is justified in withholding additional appropriations until at least the plans have been drawn and agreed upon under which the appropriation of $50,000 heretofore made is to be expended. The commissioners did inform the committee clearly and in detail as to what, in their opinion, should be done, or what construction should be had in the way of buildings at the fish market. Possibly they could not know, neither could the committee intelligently judge, as to just what buildings were necessary until they had proceeded further in at least the drawing of the plans for the reconstruction of the wharf.

Now, I am one of those who believe this to be an exceedingly important matter. I think it is very regretable that we have delayed as long as we have in the reconstruction of this fish wharf and market, this produce wharf and market. This is our situation: The city of Washington fronts on the Potomac, which opens into a splendid body of water that produces the finest, and perhaps the widest, variety of sea food to be found in any like body of water in the world. And down on the lower Potomac on either side are wide areas of agricultural lands producing all sorts of farm and garden produce. This sea food and produce when brought to the city by water is landed at this fish market. I do not know of any one thing that has more effect on the cost of living in this city than the present condition of this entrance for the sea food and a considerable portion of the product of the District.

The committee last year hesitated in making the appropriation asked for, because the committee thought that the plans provided too generously for the retail markets, and this year the subcommittee, at least, was of the opinion that they could not indorse the present plan of the commission for a large refrigerating plant in this market space.

I think it is true that the plans of last year contemplated unnecessary expenditure for the construction of a retail market, but I am heartily and enthusiastically in sympathy with the present plan of the commissioners, the plan which has been indorsed and urged by the present superintendent of markets, whom I judge to be an active and efficient man.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

[By unanimous consent, Mr. MONDELL was given five minutes more.]

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I will.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I want to know if the gentleman from Wyoming has committed himself to the municipality embarking in the business of constructing storage plants?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman that he is not fair in asking me that question in that way. I am ready to commit myself to a municipality doing any proper and reasonable thing, and this is a proper and reasonable thing. This is the situation: The city owns this wharf and market space, the one place in this city where sea food which comes to the city by water can be landed. It is the point to which comes in small sloops and boats a large part of the produce coming to Washington from Virginia and Maryland. At the present time there are no adequate wharves, and boats lie there three and four deep in the busy season. It is expensive to unload them; there is no place to store the produce when it comes in superabundance, and the result is that a great deal of it deteriorates, spoils, or is lost, and that loss ultimately falls on the consumer.

Under the circumstances and conditions that exist here I am heartily in favor of the city building at that point, not an ornamental building, but a permanent structure after having first built these permanent, concrete wharves for which we have already, rather inadequately, I think, provided—a permanent concrete structure that can be used for the temporary shelter of this produce as it comes in and large refrigerating rooms into which the surplus may be stored when it comes into the market more rapidly than the market can consume it. It is in the interest of economy. It will be highly beneficial to all of the people of the District. We all realize that, living as we do so near these fishing grounds, these oyster grounds, these splendid farms in Maryland and Virginia, we ought to be able to secure the products of those waters and lands at a reasonable price, and yet it is our experience that prices in Washington are high. I think that the condition of that fish market wharf has considerable to do with it. We should provide there some space for retailing. We should not attempt to build a great retail market, and yet I assume there are 50,000 people within a half mile or three-quarters of a mile of that point that could be served there in retail markets, and some people from all over the city do go there now and buy in these little insanitary and tumble-down structures those things that they need at reasonable prices.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a few words on the subject that the gentleman has just discussed. First, let me say that in the appropriation bill of last year an appropriation of $50,000 was asked for to improve the fish wharves, and that was granted in the last appropriation bill. In fact, all that was requested and asked for in the estimate by the commissioners was granted in the last appropriation bill.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. The estimate for building was not granted, the gentleman will recall.

Mr. DAVIS. I am referring to the fish wharves.

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, yes; for the wharves, and they have failed to use it up to date.

Mr. DAVIS. I will say that up to date it has not been used. At the same time, they requested an appropriation of $125,000 to build a wholesale and retail fish market at that point. I at least, as one member of the subcommittee that made up the bill, was inclined, and am yet inclined, to grant a very liberal appropriation for the purpose of building a wholesale fish market at and near the wharf, because I believe that is the proper place to build it. However, the information produced to the committee at that time was to the effect that the chief desire was for a retail market to supply the whole city from that point. General information, which everybody ought to know, is to the effect that an exclusive retail market at that point to supply the great city of Washington would be very unwise and inappropriate. To oblige people who live 4, 5, and 6 miles from that place to go there to receive fish from retailers is out of the question.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. The establishment of a retail market there, of course, would not obligate anyone to go there, and it would not necessitate anyone going there.

Mr. DAVIS. Oh, the gentleman forgets that that was to be the sole retail market under the appropriation asked for, and numerous stalls were to be built, constituting the only retail market in the city of Washington.

Mr. MONDELL. There was nothing in the provision prohibiting people from selling fish elsewhere, I take it.

Mr. DAVIS. That is true, but the subcommittee and I myself at least thought that a moderate sum of from fifty to seventy-five thousand dollars to build a wholesale market would be proper, and then, if we desired to, something which in my opinion is very desirable, branch markets could be built in the various quarters of the city, to be supplied from this wholesale market, thus accommodating all the residents of the city of Washington, be the amount required $100,000 or more, because, as the gentleman has well said, the question of reducing the cost of living is affected very largely by the proper distribution of fish in the city of Washington; but to make that the sole retail market for fish in the city of Washington was and is to my mind an absurdity. The commissioners were informed at that time that whenever they will submit to the committee a well-thought-out plan and specifications for a wholesale market, and fix the amount at a reasonable sum, the committee will probably grant it without question. Instead of following the suggestion of the subcommittee last year, they increased the amount from $125,000 for a wholesale and retail market to $200,000, and added thereto a municipal storage plant.

Mr. MONDELL. Does not the gentleman think that under the circumstances that would be a mighty good thing?

Mr. DAVIS. I do not. I do not believe the municipality should be engaged in building a storage plant. I think a moderate storage plant there for taking care of the surplus fish, as the gentleman suggested a while ago, would be proper, but this contemplates a storage plant at which anyone could go there and rent cold-storage space for any purpose desired.

Mr. MONDELL. But that is not the plan.

Mr. DAVIS. Oh, that is the plan contemplated by this $200,000 that the gentleman is now talking about.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DAVIS. I do not desire the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] or any other Member on this floor to think that I am niggardly in asking for appropriations for the District of Columbia. In fact, I will voice the sentiment that has been so often voiced here, that I came to Washington believing that the Capital of the Nation should be the most beautiful spot on this continent regardless of expense, and am still of that opinion; but I do not want money expended uselessly or wastefully, but properly and judiciously. I want a wholesale fish market established near the wharves, for it is the proper place for it, and is much needed. I want a first-class wharf built, for which $50,000 has already been appropriated, all that was suggested for that purpose. It is now in process of construction, at least plans are being prepared, but I believe that is all that has been done.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS. I will.

Mr. MONDELL. Does not the gentleman realize that in connection with a wholesale fish and produce market there that there is a lot of produce comes in, and that there should be a refrigerating plant large enough to care for the surplus that comes in by water?

Mr. DAVIS. There is no question about that, and that is what I want, too; but I do not want a general cold-storage plant built there and run by the municipality or by the Government.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman does not understand that to be the plan?

Mr. DAVIS. That is what is contemplated, and that is what Mr. Sherman suggested when before the committee.

Mr. MONDELL. Why, the area that they propose would not more than accommodate the surplus of fish, oysters, and produce at times.

Mr. DAVIS. His statements were not limited to that at all. He wanted a universal cold-storage plant there, to be rented to anyone desiring it.

Mr. MONDELL. It would not be economical to take produce from elsewhere there for storage.

Mr. DAVIS. I grant the gentleman that it would not be economical, and I grant you that it would be foolhardy, if this city or any other municipality should engage in such an enterprise; but that is the only enterprise suggested. We discussed the matter very thoroughly, and I think you will find the subcommittee is in favor of a proper wholesale market and a proper storage plant to take care of the overflow of this wholesale market. Whenever that is brought before this subcommittee in proper form, I believe you will find it will be fairly met and considered and a proper appropriation made therefor.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS. I do.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Did the subcommittee discover why private capital would not engage in this enterprise?

Mr. DAVIS. We discovered from the testimony given, if the gentleman will pardon me for making a statement I did not care to make, that capitalists in the city of Washington were timid about engaging in any private enterprise of this kind when they are led to believe that the Government will undertake it.

Mr. MANN. They are afraid of Congress.

Mr. DAVIS. They are afraid of something.

Mr. TOWNSEND. They are afraid of Federal competition in the fish business?

Mr. DAVIS. Not at all; but they were afraid that it possibly might not pay.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that recently we took the fish wharf and market away from the lessee?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Yes; that is true.

Mr. MANN. Private capital can not engage in this business. There is only one place they can have this wharf. We are maintaining a fish wharf and market there, such as is maintained.

Mr. DAVIS. Does the gentleman believe that if private capital were to build a cold-storage plant the Government would take it out of their hands?

Mr. MANN. They can not build a cold-storage plant there in connection with this wharf and fish market. I do not know, but that is what I have been told. However, I wish that what I have to say be not taken as criticism of the committee or a criticism of Mr. Sherman, whatever his title might be, or a criticism of Congress, or anybody else.

Mr. DAVIS. He tried to change his title.

Mr. MANN. The fact is we are supposed to be here to represent in a way the assembled legislative wisdom of the country. There are times when it seems to me it would be well if we would give proof to that effect. Now, everyone knows that the cost of distributing food is very large. It is not to be expected that by legislation or otherwise the cost of the production of food products is likely to be decreased, and under the present system it is not likely that the retail prices of food articles will very largely decrease.

Where we have a chance, where the Government has a chance to be of benefit, may be through the channels of food distribution, bringing the articles from the producer to the consumer more cheaply and with less waste than now is the case. I do not undertake to say whether the Government should build a cold-storage plant at the fish market or maintain a fish market or operate a fish wharf, but the Government either ought to fish or cut bait. They either ought to provide the necessary tools for the operation of the fish wharf at the place where the fish wharf is bound to be maintained on the Potomac River, or they ought to let somebody else do it.

Mr. DAVIS. It has already appropriated the sum of $50,000.

Mr. MANN. I know we appropriated some money. We cut out a lease that was down there; whether it was a desirable thing to do or not I do not know. I assume it was when we did it, but we have not done anything since. We have had lots of talk, which I sometimes read in the papers, with Mr. Sherman, who is the representative in the matter, and probably an enthusiast——

Mr. DAVIS. He is an enthusiast.

Mr. MANN. And we have the cold judgment of the committee, and I expect it requires more consideration than they yet have been able to give to it. But we ought to be able here in this House to work out some plan by which sea-food products, as well as truck-farm products, can be brought to the consumer in Washington cheaper than they now reach him. I do not know that it would affect me personally. I do not buy any of these articles at present at the market, and probably pay a price regardless of the cost of distribution. That is all right. I have no complaint to make about that. But the people of Washington and the people all over the country would be greatly benefited if we were able with our wisdom to work out some plan feasible for use here and adoption elsewhere which would bring closer connection between the producer and the consumer. That is really the great economic problem of the age. [Applause.]

Mr. DAVIS. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DAVIS. I would like to have the gentleman yielded one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Illinois may proceed for one minute. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. DAVIS. Does the gentleman think that the Committee on Appropriations or the subcommittee of the District of Columbia ought to work out plans to accomplish that purpose, or ought it to be left to the architect and Commissioners of the District to do that?

Mr. MANN. I do not charge the responsibility upon any one person or set of persons. I say that the legislative wisdom assembled here in some way ought to be able to work out better plans than are now in existence. Far from me to make any criticism of the committee for keeping its judgment cool, because if they get excited they will not have a good plan.

Mr. DAVIS. I do not believe there is an architect on this subcommittee, but we suggested last year to the commissioners and those who appeared before us that they work out a plan along the line the gentleman suggests.

Mr. MANN. All of us working together may be able to work out a plan. I think the committee has done well.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, the matter of the construction of a market on the wharves owned by the United States or the District of Columbia, the present location of the fish market, was submitted to the Committee on Appropriations in the estimates of a year ago. They asked $125,000 for the construction of a fish market on the site of the present municipal fish market on the river front. That plan as submitted to the committee at that time contemplated the construction with this appropriation of what would be largely a retail fish market on the river front at the foot of Tenth Street, a long ways removed not only from the center of population but from practically the whole population of the District of Columbia. The committee at that time decided that the proper thing to do was to not build a retail market at this location and that estimate was turned down. An estimate was made at the same time asking $50,000 for the reconstruction of wharves at the fish market, and that was carried in the last appropriation act. When the hearings were had in connection with the preparation of this bill, the subcommittee found that the plans had not even been made for the construction of this wharf for which we had appropriated. Then in the estimates submitted for next year they asked for an appropriation of $200,000 for the construction of a fish market at the same place, the $75,000 being added to the $125,000 original estimate for the purpose of constructing a cold-storage plant. A cold-storage plant, according to the testimony of the superintendent of markets, contemplated not only the care of sea foods, but his purpose, as outlined in the committee, was to transport to this place on the river front other produce, such as vegetables, etc., that come into the city to be sold to its population. For one, I desire to say that I do not concede it to be wise for the city to go into the cold-storage business. We did not make any recommendation for the construction of this building that was estimated for.

Now, I agree with the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] in that a municipality having taken over the markets of the city, in view of the condition of the present buildings that are used for the distribution of fish, something should be done at this place. My own judgment is that there should be a sanitary concrete building constructed for the reception and distribution of sea products to the population of the District of Columbia. Personally, I want to say that whenever it has been worked out by the proper authorities—the commissioners, the Supervising Architect, the superintendent of markets—and they all combine on a plan that is feasible and not extravagant, and it is submitted to the committee, it shall have consideration and be reported to this House. But I can not believe that we are justified at this time, with a lack of preparation, with a lack of concentration as to what is needed or wise, and in view of the fact that plans have not yet been drawn for the construction of the wharves already appropriated for—I believe that we can not wisely make any appropriation in this bill for the improvement that at some time unquestionably should be made.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I yield.

Mr. TOWNSEND. In the mind of the gentleman is it contemplated that the municipality, as we have been calling the city, should occupy this cold-storage warehouse or lease it to merchants to whom eggs and poultry and beef and sea food should be consigned, and they to have market places there, as is contemplated in the very great projects of this kind now being worked out in New York?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I do not express any opinion about that, but will say to the gentleman that the superintendent of markets did not contemplate the consignment of food to an individual firm in the city, but rather that the city itself should take these foods and put them in cold storage.

Now, that is the purpose of those who had this matter in charge when they submitted the plan that came in the estimates to the committee and with that your committee did not agree. That accounts largely for the fact that provision is not made in this bill for the needed improvement at the fish wharf.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Does not the gentleman think that if these food products are consigned to the city of Washington, or the District of Columbia, that he is taking a step toward a peculiar form of socialism? Would it not rather be better for this municipality, as you call it, to build and equip a first-class modern cold-storage plant and in that plant have cold-storage rooms, and, if you like, on another floor or in an adjoining building establish stalls where merchants individually can have these food products sent to them?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes, Mr. Chairman. There are several gentlemen who wish to interrogate me.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. PAGE] asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Now, in answer to the gentleman's question as to the desirability of building a municipal refrigerating plant for the storing of food products, I personally think that is an enterprise for individual capital, and not for the municipality to engage in.

Mr. TOWNSEND. It seems to me that a proper cold-storage plant is a necessary part of a modern municipal market. It is being discussed very extensively by commissions and individuals in New York interested in this matter, and the plan probably to be adopted in the neighborhood of the Gansevoort Market, at the foot of Fourteenth Street, is to have near the wharf a covered-in extension of the present Gansevoort Market, which would include a large storehouse, where space will be allotted to individual markets, to which eggs and poultry and meats and fish and vegetables can be consigned and there stored, and then drawn upon for the stalls which the city also rents to them.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Granting that that plan might be adopted for the city of Washington, I submit to the gentleman that the location proposed for the construction of this plant would be a very difficult one to reach for the population of the city of Washington and merchants who want to store their products.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I did not have opportunity to explain, but it is contemplated that largely the business transacted there would be by the commission men, the men to whom the produce is consigned.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I think that should be done, but that is not the plan outlined here.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from North Carolina yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I do.

Mr. MANN. I understood the gentleman to say that the plan of Superintendent Sherman contemplated the consignment of these food products to the District of Columbia.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I did not mean that. The gentleman either misunderstood me or I expressed myself badly.

Mr. MANN. That is what the gentleman said. I supposed, although I have not examined the hearings, that his plan was to have the Government own and operate a cold-storage warehouse, taking into it for cold storage anything that was consigned to people, commission merchants or otherwise, here, and holding them until they took them out.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Yes; and he went further than that; not only consigned to the people here, but in the event that these products were consigned here and refused, as they sometimes are——

Mr. MANN. Well, yes——

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. By the merchants, the city should take them and store them in the plant, and to that extent the municipality would hold them.

Mr. MANN. To prevent destruction for the consignor instead of the consignee?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Yes; that is true.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. I wanted to ask the gentleman from North Carolina if we did not have a market at one time here, and it was administered in such a way that nobody got any benefit from it except those who were fortunate enough to secure space in the building?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. The building is leased and rentals are paid. Whether or not they are adequate rentals I can not say to the gentleman. But this market has been leased by the District of Columbia. As a matter of fact, it has recently been decided that these rentals should have been paid to the Government and not to the District. The rentals are paid for the present market facilities enjoyed by the markets in the city. It is so with respect to the fish wharf and other markets.

Mr. FOSTER. It was not proposed that the Government should go into that business in order to make a profit?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. No; I do not think that has been done.

Mr. FOSTER. And it has been of no particular benefit, except to the individuals obtaining the space?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I believe so.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from North Carolina yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Yes.

Mr. COOPER. I wanted to ask the gentleman a question. Do I understand the gentleman from North Carolina to say that he is in favor of the Government building a structure down there and leasing it to individuals?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. That is just what it is doing now. We have a structure there, I will say to the gentleman from Wisconsin, and the Government owns the land and has erected certain buildings that are not what they should be.

Mr. COOPER. They are entirely inadequate and insanitary?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. They are not so inadequate, but they are in the wrong locality.

Mr. COOPER. I always understood that they are inadequate and insanitary.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. They are inadequate, and I admit freely that something ought to be done with respect to them.

Mr. COOPER. The Government, the gentleman believes, ought to retain the ownership of the wharf there?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Yes; and, for that matter, the market. I think the municipality ought to own the market.

Mr. COOPER. As I understand, we appropriated $50,000 a year ago for the construction or reconstruction of the wharf?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Yes.

Mr. COOPER. If the gentleman believes that the Government ought to own a structure of the kind he has described—and the rest of the committee, I take it, are of this belief—why did you not this year appropriate for the erection of a structure of that kind in connection with the wharf and have it all done at once?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. We did not, because the committee did not concur in the plans submitted to us by the authorities who were in charge of that matter. They submitted an estimate of $250,000, which included the erection of a cold-storage plant.

Mr. COOPER. Why did not the gentleman exclude the erection of a cold-storage plant, to which the gentleman and his committee were opposed, and include the structures that are necessary, embracing the construction of the wharf?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I will say to the gentleman that the members of the subcommittee making up this bill did not pretend to have studied this question up to the point where we were willing to say just what is necessary.

We believe that the governing authorities of the city ought to work this out and submit a workable plan to us, and not put that detail and responsibility upon the committee. I would have been perfectly willing, and I am now——

Mr. COOPER. Well, but, if the gentleman will permit an interruption——

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Yes.

Mr. COOPER. Various bureaus of the departments very frequently make recommendations in which they include matters of great detail. Some of those features we reject freely, without any hesitation whatever, and appropriate for the balance of the recommendation.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Yes; but——

Mr. COOPER. Why not so in this instance? I see no reason at all why the same plan should not be followed.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. In this instance, so far as the subcommittee knows, we were not in a position to distinguish between the one and the other. They asked us for the sum of $200,000 for the construction of a fish market. That was the term placed in the estimates. When the subcommittee came to investigate what they proposed to build there it developed from the testimony that this estimate was increased from $125,000 to $200,000 for the purpose of constructing a cold-storage plant; and the $125,000 plans submitted to the committee a year ago were not accepted for the reason that they proposed then to make it largely a building for retail purposes at that location in the city, when your committee felt that it should be a building principally for the distribution of food products. It is the lack of a workable plan, the failure to submit such a plan to the committee, which is responsible for the fact that there is no appropriation in this bill.

I will say to the gentleman that I do not think any time is going to be lost. We appropriated $50,000 for the construction of this wharf.

Mr. COOPER. Nothing has been done in one year.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Absolutely. No plans have been drafted.

Mr. COOPER. There is a year gone. What is the excuse for that?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. They do not render any excuse, and I have none to render to the gentleman.

Mr. COOPER. There is a year gone.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I think a year hence will be ample time to make the appropriation for this structure to be built at the wharf already appropriated for.

Mr. COOPER. If it is the gentleman's idea that there has not been any time lost, I should like to know when time begins to be lost in the District of Columbia?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I think time has been lost.

Mr. COOPER. We appropriated a year ago for the reconstruction of the wharf.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. If the gentleman will permit me, I did not say that time had not been lost in the utilization of the appropriation already made. I said no time would be lost by the omission from this bill of an appropriation for a building to be placed upon a wharf for which the plans have not yet been prepared.

Mr. COOPER. I should suppose that in the reconstruction of a wharf, if anything is contemplated like the building which the gentleman has referred to, the two ought to be constructed together, the market building and the wharf on which it is to be placed.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I will say to the gentleman that I do not think there is that intimate connection between the two which would require that both should be constructed at the same time. The wharf must be constructed, whether any building is to be placed there or not.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. COOPER. I ask an extension of three minutes, or that the gentleman have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that the time of the gentleman be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COOPER. Is this building to be put on the wharf?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. This wharf is the landing place for the delivery of products into the building.

Mr. COOPER. And the building which you think ought to be constructed is to be put on that wharf?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Yes.

Mr. COOPER. From my knowledge of buildings it does seem to me that the two could be more economically and a great deal better constructed if, when the foundations——

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I will say to the gentleman that the wharf must be constructed before the building can be started on the wharf.

Mr. COOPER. Exactly. Yet the foundations of the building are to go into the wharf, are they not?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. No; I think not. They are separate and distinct pieces of work. That is the contemplation of the commissioners and of the superintendent of markets.

Mr. COOPER. How far from the wharf will the building be?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I have not seen the detailed plans, and I do not know. I can not answer the gentleman as to that, but I know that they are estimated for separately and not constructed one with the other.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, just a word. Of course I defer to the judgment of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. PAGE], but I myself can see no reason at all why there could not have been an appropriation made of an amount of money necessary to construct that building which the gentleman from North Carolina says, in his judgment, is necessary, at the same time the wharf is being constructed and a condition put in the appropriation that plans shall first be sumbitted to and approved by Congress. Then at the next session of Congress the plans would have been completed, the money would all have been appropriated, and could have been expended, contingent upon the approval of the plans by Congress.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Will the gentleman pardon an interruption?

Mr. COOPER. In one moment. That is a method often pursued by Congress. It has been done more than once, to my certain knowledge, and is a very practicable and a very expeditious way of getting a necessary improvement made.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. If the gentleman will allow me, in reply to that suggestion he has made, I will say that the whole provision, if placed in this bill, would be subject to a point of order. This committee is not putting any more impediments in the way of the passage of its own bill than it feels compelled to. When the Commissioners of the District of Columbia have submitted to this committee or to the Congress a plan that is workable and feasible, I for one am ready to make the appropriation to meet the needs and the demands that are made upon it.

Mr. COOPER. Suppose the commissioners do not submit to the committee a plan which the committee thinks is workable, what shall the committee do—subside quietly?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. That is up to the committee. They have said to the commissioners what they thought ought to be submitted.

The Clerk read as follows:

In all, Public Utilities Commission, $58,278.96.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do not want to unduly prolong the discussion, for which I am responsible, in regard to the fish wharf and market; but it is a very important matter, and I do not want the debate to close without correcting some errors that have crept into the statements that have been made.

As to the situation of the market, it is peculiar. As I understand, this is the only place in the city of Washington where fish and sea food can be landed by boat. All fish and all oysters and sea food coming to Washington by water by small boats must be landed at this place. It is also a wharf at which is landed in season a great quantity of produce from Maryland and Virginia towns bordering on the Chesapeake Bay and Potomac River. I think the property actually belongs to the Federal Government, but it is under the control of the commissioners. Whatever is done there must be done by the District of Columbia. What they need there is, first, a modern permanent wharf. We need more room for small boats that come in and proper landing facilities. Secondly, we need such facilities and structures as are necessary for the distribution of this produce quickly, cheaply, and without loss. That involves storage space, a part of which must of necessity be refrigerated space.

I regret that some gentlemen of the subcommittee do not take kindly to the idea of municipal ownership. I am not as much given to municipal ownership as some people, but I do not shy at a proposition because it involves municipal ownership, especially when, as in this case, it is inevitable, if you are to serve the people of the District.

I think the gentlemen of the subcommittee misunderstood the commissioners as to what they desire. I hope the commissioners will not bring in plans exactly on the lines that they suggested, because if they do we will have no place where we can have any refrigeration, and refrigeration is absolutely necessary. I have been at this market when there was boatload after boatload of produce going to waste. The produce which comes to the market is not generally consigned. It is brought there by the owner, and it is sold by the owner to the retailer. There is no middleman ordinarily at that market. What we need is an abundant space for storage when there is a surplus of produce. Ordinarily the retailer goes there and buys from the boats the goods which are carried right to the retailer's establishment. But we need space to take care of all surplus, and some of that space must of necessity be refrigerating space. Some can be permanently rented out to people who do a regular business there, but there must be some space under the control of the District directly that can be rented out for brief periods of time to owners of produce, who bring it in their boats, in which they can store their produce until they can dispose of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that his time be extended two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. I am inclined to think that it would have been better had we provided for a wharf and buildings at the same time. That is what I hoped for last year, and I hope that when this bill becomes a law there will be an item carried in the bill—I am not going to offer an amendment—sufficient to build the sort of structure, with refrigeration, that is needed. We do not need a large retail market, and yet there should be facilities for retailing there. It is a thickly settled part of the city. There is a large population in moderate circumstances living all around it. I think there are 50,000 people living within three-quarters of a mile of the market. Others go there occasionally from other parts of the city. The principal object is to provide a place of distribution under which distribution will be cheap and which will preserve the produce from loss. I hope that before this bill becomes a law we may provide for such structures.

The Clerk read as follows:

Bridges: For construction and repairs, $20,000. This appropriation shall be available for repairing when necessary any bridge carrying a public street over the right of way or property of any railway company, and the amounts thus expended shall be collected from such railway company in the manner provided in section 5 of an act providing a permanent form of government for the District of Columbia, approved June 11, 1878, and shall be deposited in the Treasury to the credit of the United States and the District of Columbia in equal parts.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the chairman just what would be the effect of this provision under the amendment adopted this morning. Any money that is to be collected is to be deposited in the Treasury to the credit of the District of Columbia and the United States in equal parts, although the money that is to be paid out is to be paid out of the District treasury. How will that work in connection with the Johnson amendment agreed to this morning?

Mr. SISSON. That would be a mere matter of bookkeeping.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no; certainly it would not be a matter of bookkeeping.

Mr. SISSON. If it is in the form of a tax on the railroad company, the amount of money which is expended would go into the Treasury, one-half to the credit of the District of Columbia and one-half to the credit of the Federal Government.

Mr. MANN. At present one-half is paid out of the District treasury and one-half out of the Federal Treasury.

Mr. SISSON. The act provides that the work shall be done by the railroad company in accordance with the plans and specifications submitted to it by the District engineer, and failing to do that, the District government does the work and collects from the railroad company the amount of the expenditure.

Mr. MANN. And we make an appropriation for the expenditure. It is expended, and then we collect the money back from the railway company and deposit that in the Treasury; but we do not deposit it to the credit of the same account out of which it was paid. We do so now; it goes to the credit of the same account out of which it was paid—that is, under the existing law—but under the Johnson amendment it will not be so credited.

Mr. SISSON. Even so, the District of Columbia would receive a great deal more money from the Federal Treasury than is its just proportion of what the Federal Treasury should pay toward the District government expenses.

Mr. MANN. Oh, well, that is a general statement, and has no application whatever to this proposition.

Mr. SISSON. It does apply to it, I think.

Mr. MANN. Not at all. The gentleman can not tell, nor can anyone else, at present, whether the District government wins by this proposition or whether the Treasury wins. But it is perfectly evident to anyone who can divide 2 into two parts that it is not proper on this bill in connection with the Johnson amendment.

Mr. SISSON. If the railroad company pays the money back into the Treasury, half of it going to the District and half of it to the Federal Treasury, it would simply mean that under the amendment which we adopted to this bill the Federal Government would be paid a little more, perhaps, than the Federal Government paid out. I do not know exactly what the proportion would be, but that still does not prevent this legislation being proper legislation.

Mr. MANN. It prevents it being just.

Mr. SISSON. I do not know whether it does or not.

Mr. MANN. Perhaps the District Government will get half of the money back when the $20,000 has been entirely paid out of the Federal Treasury, in which case that would not be fair to the Federal Treasury, but perhaps the Federal Treasury will get $10,000 of it back when the whole of it has been paid out of the District treasury, and that would not be fair to the District. It is one of the two. It is one of the many difficulties you will encounter in making a slight change in one part of a bill, which is intended to cover everything, but which does not.

Mr. SISSON. It is one of those difficulties you have in getting rid of a very bad system.

Mr. MANN. Well, you will not get rid of it now.

The Clerk read as follows:

Highway Bridge across Potomac River: Draw operators—2 at $1,020 each, 2 at $720 each; 4 watchmen, at $600 each; labor, $1,500; lighting, power, and miscellaneous supplies, and expenses of every kind necessarily incident to the operation and maintenance of the bridge and approaches, $8,620; in all, $16,000.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to remind the chairman of the subcommittee that last year the commissioners made an estimate of $17,000 for resurfacing the Highway Bridge. They made no estimate this year. Therefore, the Highway Bridge is as yet not resurfaced. Was that expected to be taken care of under the item which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has just been discussing?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, my recollection is that the gentleman is mistaken about an estimate having been made for resurfacing the Highway Bridge. The estimate was submitted last year for the resurfacing of the approaches to the Highway Bridge, and we appropriated $30,000 for that purpose.

Mr. MONDELL. Yes; I had reference to resurfacing the approaches.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Yes; and if the gentleman would cross the Highway Bridge he would see that it does not need resurfacing.

Mr. MONDELL. I had in mind the approaches.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. That was appropriated for in the bill of last year.

Mr. MONDELL. Is the gentleman certain?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Yes; it was appropriated for, because I prescribed the sloping part of the approach, and the $30,000 worth of asphalt will reach nearly from the Bureau of Engraving and Printing to the bridge.

Mr. MONDELL. They have not done it yet.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Surely the gentleman is not blaming me, is he? The Congress appropriated the money and directed that it be done. I am not administering the affairs of the District of Columbia.

Mr. MONDELL. I have been waiting so anxiously to see that work done and avoid the bumps over there that I had forgotten that we had appropriated for it. But it is another illustration of—shall I say lack of management in expending appropriations?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I think, if the gentleman will allow me to say it for him, that it is only a continuation of what has taken place in Washington under every administration since I have known anything about it. They ask for so much that they can not spend it all within the time within which it ought to be spent.

Mr. MONDELL. Is that the difficulty, or do the Commissioners of the District get busy about other things, about holding their jobs—looking for better jobs—playing politics? Is not that it? If the commissioners had nothing else to do than to look after the affairs of the District and to give those matters their undivided attention, might not these matters be expedited a little?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I will say to the gentleman in all frankness that my observation is that the present board of commissioners has expedited these things as rapidly as they have been expedited under any former board.

Mr. MONDELL. I supose there is a lackadaisical rule here that it will not do to break.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. There is a rule here to ask for a plenty, and they get so much that with their equipment and organization they can not do it all within the time the gentleman and I expect them to.

Mr. MONDELL. If the gentleman will permit me to amend his statement, I do not think they get so much from the gentleman's subcommittee but what they could expend it very well.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. As a matter of fact, they have not. Just to remind the gentleman along that line, he will remember in the appropriation bill for the current year and the law preceding that, for 1914, there was carried an appropriation of $135,000 for the construction of a bridge across Rock Creek on the line of Pennsylvania Avenue?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I noticed in the newspapers a week ago that the contract had just been let for that.

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, I thought they had made a start there.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. They have done absolutely nothing there. They are building at Q Street, but the street-car bridge on Pennsylvania Avenue has not been touched. There has not been a piece of asphalt disturbed. That bridge is standing just as it was, and within 10 days a contract has been let for the construction of the new bridge from an appropriation carried in the bill for 1914.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that he may proceed for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I have noticed this delay to which the gentleman referred, and by reason of that delay in spending some of the moneys which were appropriated last year I am less inclined than I would be otherwise to offer some amendments increasing the amounts carried in the bill. I think the subcommittee has trimmed the appropriation for streets, both for paving and repairs, for sewers, and so forth, pretty closely. Rather too closely, I think. I am sure they have reduced these estimates more than they should have been reduced if the District was current with its work.

Now, Congress is frequently criticized, and the subcommittee has been criticized and the committee has been criticized for not making larger appropriations under some of these items and for omitting some appropriations or some items. The committee would have been much more inclined to have appropriated larger sums, I am sure, if the District's work in construction and repairs was more nearly current, if the authorities had hustled a little more with the expenditure of the money with which they were provided a year ago. I do not desire to unduly criticize the commissioners. I do not know who is responsible; but some one, surely some one is subject to criticism when the busines of a municipality lags as the business of this municipality seems to.

Mr. DAVIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I yield.

Mr. DAVIS. I have heard it repeatedly stated in the hearings that many of the officials of the government of the District of Columbia could not get around to attend to these matters because in some instances the walking was bad or the old horse that drew the cart was pretty slow. That may probably have been an excuse heretofore, but now we have given them, not Ford automobiles, but automobiles pretty cheap; and I am inclined to believe that now the commissioners and other officers will hustle the more and make more speed and attend to more affairs and expend the money appropriated a little faster.

Mr. MONDELL. If automobiles had that effect, and the subcommittee believed it would, the subcommittee should have appropriated for all the automobiles they asked for.

Mr. DAVIS. We gave them a great many, and we hope it will expedite the matter about which the gentleman is now complaining.

Mr. MONDELL. It is possible that no one is to blame for this state of affairs, that it is a natural and usual thing here in Washington. If it is just a habit, the new year will give an opportunity to resolve to drop it. It would be a splendid thing for the District. The District would get larger appropriations in certain lines, in my opinion, if when we came to consider these items we found that the District business was moving right along and that within the time within which the appropriation was available it would be entirely expended. It is a little discouraging, after having been urged and importuned to make appropriations, to learn a year after that the plans for its expenditure had not been completely drawn or that the work had not been undertaken.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

Highway Bridge across Potomac River: Draw operators—two at $1,020 each, two at $720 each; four watchmen, at $600 each; labor, $1,500; lighting, power, and miscellaneous supplies, and expenses of every kind necessarily incident to the operation and maintenance of the bridge and approaches, $8,620; in all, $16,000.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of obtaining some information from the chairman of the committee. I see here there is an estimate for the pay of two draw operators——

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Where is that in the bill?

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. At the bottom of page 25, line 23. It carries an appropriation for two at $1,020 each, and two at $720 each. What is the difference in the duties of these employees?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. The difference in the duties of these employees, who are watchmen continuously at this highway bridge, is that the higher-priced men are there for very long hours and at night. That is the reason for the difference in compensation. I will say to the gentleman that the amounts appropriated are in exact accordance with the estimate submitted and as they have been carried in the bill for several years.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I thank the gentleman.

The Clerk read as follows:

Bathing beach: Superintendent, $600; watchman, $480; temporary services, supplies, and maintenance, $2,250; for repairs to buildings, pools, and upkeep of grounds, $1,400, to be immediately available; in all, $4,730.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of again asking for information. I see on page 26 for watchman there is allowed the sum of $600 a year, which seems to be small enough.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. In what line on page 26?

Mr. MANN. That is the usual amount.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. On the first line; but there is something else I want to get at here. I see on page 28, line 9, a watchman at $480.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Those people are employed for only three or four months in the summer, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Just for three or four months?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Just for three or four months when the bathing beach is open.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Is that at the rate of $480 per annum?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Oh, no; it is compensation for the period of three or four months when these bathing beaches are open.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Very well; I thank the gentleman.

The Clerk read as follows:

Public scales: All public scales now owned by the District of Columbia shall be sold to the highest bidder or bidders therefor, under sealed proposals which shall be invited by the commissioners, after the value of said scales shall have been appraised and for a sum or sums not less than the appraised value of each or the total appraised value of all of them; any or all of the sealed proposals received hereunder may be rejected and new proposals invited at any time prior to July 1, 1915.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph. What is the reason why this new plan should be adopted with reference to public scales?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, under the present law these scales are let out by bid or otherwise to some contractor. He collects the fees, and under the law he is obliged to enter into a bond to make an accounting to the commissioners for fees received, and so forth. The commissioners in the hearings represented to us that they had been utterly unable to get any accounting from the man who had these scales, and they asked the subcommittee to turn the scales over to them, with the privilege of employing weighmasters and paying them from the fees which they receive.

The committee came to the conclusion that there was no reason why the municipality should own any scales, because we had a perfect supervision of the correctness of all scales in the District of Columbia, or were supposed to have, and the time had come when the best thing that could be done to avoid some complications that were not desirable was to dispose of these scales and put them into the hands of private parties. It would be a saving to the District of Columbia. Now, if the gentleman knows any reason why the municipality should still own scales on which is weighed the load of hay that comes in from the country, whereas the truck of coal that he or myself purchases is weighed on private scales, I would like to hear it.

Mr. MANN. Can not they be weighed on public scales?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. They can not, because none of these public scales is of sufficient capacity.

Mr. MANN. I think many loads of hay are heavier than many loads of coal.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. The gentleman would be surprised, perhaps, if I should tell him—possibly, though, he has seen it—that in the estimates submitted to us by the superintendent of weights, measures, and markets we were asked to appropriate $6,000 for the purchase of a truck for the testing of scales. It was proposed to buy a truck for the testing of scales that weighed 16 tons. I admit I doubted very seriously that there was a scale for weighing coal and other things in the District of Columbia that had a capacity of 16 tons, and I was very much surprised to find that they had scales of more than 20 tons capacity and that there were delivery trucks that were handling as many as 20 tons of coal in one delivery truck.

Mr. MANN. Since I have seen a 15-yard bucket on a dredge working at Panama I am not surprised at that. Before that I would not believe it possible. But there is one thing in this I do not like very well, and that is in the next paragraph, giving the commissioners authority, without any restriction, to locate or permit the location of scales on public spaces under their control. Of course these scales are now on public spaces?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. They are on public spaces now, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. But I have seen such a variety of foolish things done at different times by people in authority, because of such an authority as this, that, while I do not apprehend they would put scales in front of some fine building, I do not know what the District Commissioners might do.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Well, I will say to the gentleman that I agree with him that this is a rather broad latitude, and yet in a matter of this sort the committee did not see how they could carry this out without trusting to the commissioners.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think the District Commissioners can not let these scales out to anyone who is honest enough to make an accounting and able enough to furnish a bond? I think that is a childish argument which they offer.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I will not say that it is childish; but I will say to the gentleman that the commissioners say they have been utterly unable to do so; that there is not very much of this weighing on public scales any more. There are eight of these scales in the District, and practically all the weighing is done on what is known as No. 3 scale. That scale must be moved from its present location, because it happens to be on a space on which we have authorized the erection of a market shed. My own judgment is that these scales will be used practically not at all in the future.

Mr. MANN. I will withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For salaries: Clerk (stenographer and typewriter), $900; supervisor, $2,500; to be employed not exceeding 10 months—13 directors of playgrounds or recreation centers at $65 per month each, assistant director at $60 per month; to be employed not exceeding 7 months—2 assistant directors at $60 per month each, assistant director at $50 per month; to be employed not exceeding 3 months—assistant director at $60 per month, 13 assistants at $45 per month each; watchmen to be employed not exceeding 12 months—13 at $50 per month each; general utility man at $60 per month for 7 months; in all, $23,795.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of securing information. This bill, I believe, is appropriating for one fiscal year, is it not?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. This is appropriating for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. My curiosity is aroused by the statement that a watchman is to be employed for not exceeding 12 months. How would it be possible to employ anyone over 12 months out of this appropriation?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Will the gentleman point out the line?

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Page 29, line 16.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I can not tell the gentleman. That is a matter of text that got in in some way and was overlooked by the clerk. They can not be employed for over 12 months.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. It would not be possible to employ them over 12 months?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Not in one year, although I have seen people who claim they did over 12 months of work inside of 365 days.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. It is not any clearer to me now why it was put in there than it was before. It seems to me it is superfluous and unnecessary.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. It is superfluous; entirely so.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Two guards or swimming teachers for four months at $60 per month each, to be immediately available, $480.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I wish to inquire of the chairman of the committee whether there has been any demand in the District for the establishment of natatoriums for the use of people at large who can not have the advantages of baths in their respective homes. I am referring particularly to the artisan class, or poorer classes, of residents in the District. In some cities, I will say, it is quite general to establish these natatoriums in districts where the artisan class lives.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Possibly the gentleman is familiar with the provision in this bill carrying an appropriation for the bathing beach, so called, and which is now maintained——

Mr. STAFFORD. That is during the summer months?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. That is during the summer months. There has never been any plan submitted or worked out by the commissioners or authorities in charge looking to bathing facilities other than during the summer months. No estimate of that sort has been submitted, and no plan has been inaugurated so far as I know.

Mr. STAFFORD. I thought the commissioners, who are alert, would make such recommendations for the District. It would be serviceable and sanitary as well.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I will say to the gentleman that even if we had some natatoriums we might have to pass a compulsory law to make some classes of people use them.

Mr. MANN. Even the Senate has cut out its baths. It would be compulsion to require them. [Laughter.]

Mr. STAFFORD. From the experience we have of their use in other cities I do not think it would require any compulsion. That is shown by the popularity and the frequency of use of the public bathing beach here; and if they were only given the opportunity, the people would avail themselves very generously of the facilities offered.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In all, for playgrounds, $40,665, which sum shall be paid wholly out of the revenues of the District of Columbia.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the District Commissioners asked that these items for playgrounds, swimming pools, and so forth, should be appropriated for under the head of "department of recreation." Perhaps it is not important what the service is called that has charge of these affairs, but I think that an appropriate term. I think it would be well to group all of these facilities under that general head, and I hope that it will encourage the extension and enlargement of that sort of facilities in the District of Columbia.

Last year an estimate was made of $60,000 for bathing beaches on the Potomac River, or at the Tidal Basin. An appropriation of that amount would undoubtedly have been recommended by the committee except for the fact that Dr. Anderson, the director of the Hygienic Laboratory in the Public Health Service, made a report to the effect that these waters were not fit for bathing purposes; that is, the waters of Rock Creek and the waters of the Potomac River, and the committee did not see fit to take issue with so distinguished an authority on the subject.

I think it is very unfortunate that that appropriation was not made, and I can not understand why the District Commissioners overlooked this great need of the District in making up their estimates for this year. Such items of appropriation are paid for entirely by the people of the District even under the half-and-half plan. They will have something over $2,000,000 of funds remaining if this bill becomes a law in its present form, and the half-and-half plan stands, and there is no good reason why a part of their money should not be used for these exceedingly important purposes.

I venture to say that there are few cities in the civilized world more utterly and disgracefully deficient in opportunities for public bathing than is the Capital of this great Nation. Here we are with Rock Creek running through the city on one side and the Potomac River on the other, and yet conditions are such that it is almost impossible for any one to find a bathing place outside of a bathtub. I happen to be the father of a young son who is ambitious in this direction, as small boys generally are. He has been chased out of Rock Creek Park on the ground that that was not a proper place for him to bathe.

He can not find a place to bathe down on the river front, because there are no facilities and policemen stand ready to chase the boys away when they go there.

Mr. CAMPBELL. That is not bathing; that is swimming.

Mr. MONDELL. My friend from Kansas says: "That is not bathing; that is swimming." Very well. Whether you call them "bathing beaches" or "swimming pools," it is wicked to deprive the young people of this city of facilities and opportunities to learn to swim, to secure the splendid, healthful exercise that one gets in a body of water. We have two little, measly, diminutive pools down on the Mall. During the bathing season it is almost impossible for the youngsters to get to the water, much less to get into it; and yet this is the great Capital city of the Nation, of which we are all proud and for which we desire to do so much. Why, there is not a village anywhere that I know of that does not provide better facilities for its people than this city does in this respect.

Now, the committee is not to blame this year for this situation. We had no estimates. It would have been necessary for the committee to have assumed the responsibility of making an appropriation without anybody having asked for it. The District commissioners were so busy in some other way that they could not get around to determine what was needed or what was wanted or what was required in this particular.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask that I may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I hope that before this bill becomes a law it will contain an item providing for additional bathing beaches or swimming pools, or both. I am not going to offer such an item, because it would not be fair for me, as a member of the committee, to offer an item of appropriation that had not been asked for by those authorized and whose duty it is to make estimates. But it is most unfortunate that this work has been delayed so long. We ought to have additional bathing beaches and pools, open and covered, plenty of them, and in several parts of the city, so that the young people of the city can have an opportunity to learn to swim, an opportunity to exercise themselves in this healthful and helpful way.

There is no estimate in this bill for additional playgrounds. The city needs more playgrounds. It should buy some playgrounds that it is now using under sufferance and by permission of the owners. Possibly Washington does not need playgrounds as much and to the same extent as some other cities do, but we ought to have adequate playgrounds in all parts of the city, and particularly in the thickly settled parts of the city, where the children do not have many opportunities of getting out into the country. They ought to have an opportunity to enjoy themselves in a healthful, youthful way.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wyoming yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. The gentleman seems to have information or ground for believing that we do not have adequate bathing facilities, yet he says he is not going to offer an amendment to provide for them. What justifies him in his position in not offering an amendment if he has information that convinces him that the people of the city of Washington are not properly cared for in that matter? I think it is an important matter.

Mr. MONDELL. Well, I will say to the gentleman that I am a member of the committee. The committee had no estimate before it. The gentleman himself can offer an amendment. There are a number of matters that ought to be provided for in this bill that were not estimated for.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. We have not the information that the gentleman has.

Mr. MONDELL. I do not desire to put my committee in the position of being criticized when, as a matter of fact, it has done its full duty in the matter; but I think some one is subject to criticism for not having estimated for these needed enlargements and additions to the bathing beaches and bathing facilities and to the playground and recreation facilities.

We need spaces in Washington where the young people can play baseball. We need spaces that can be used for tennis and like purposes. Land could be acquired for these purposes quite cheaply now. If we delay, the land will be built up and become very expensive. But there are no estimates for items of this sort, and therefore, as a member of the committee, I do not feel justified in offering amendments to the bill, but I do hope these matters will be taken care of before the bill becomes a law.

The Clerk read as follows:

ELECTRICAL DEPARTMENT.

Electrical engineer, $2,500; assistant electrical engineer, $2,000; 4 electrical inspectors, at $1,200 each; inspector, $1,000; electrician, $1,200; 2 draftsmen, at $1,000 each; 3 telegraph operators, at $1,000 each; 4 inspectors, at $900 each; expert repairman, $1,200; 3 repairmen, at $900 each; telephone operators—3 at $720 each, 4 at $540 each, 1 $450; electrical inspectors—1 $2,000, 1 $1,800, 1 $1,350; cable splicer, $1,200; assistant cable splicer, $620; clerks—1 $1,400, 1 $1,200, 2 at $1,125 each, 1 $1,050, 1 $750; assistant repairmen—1 $620, 2 at $540 each; laborers—1 $630, 3 at $600 each, 2 at $540 each; storekeeper, $875; in all, $48,475.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of again asking information in regard to the differences in salaries provided in lines 18 and 19, on page 30, for four electrical inspectors at $1,200 each and one at $1,000.

What is the difference in the duties of these two employees? Can the gentleman from North Carolina tell me?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I do not know, except that there is a difference in the qualifications of these men in the matter of the time that they have served in their various places, and things of that sort. The salaries are the same that have been carried for these people in the current law and in past appropriation bills. There is no estimate submitted for changing the salaries.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I see in lines 22 and 23 on the same page there is an appropriation for telephone operators, three at $720 each, four at $540 each, and one at $450. Has the gentleman any information as to the reason for this difference?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. It is a difference in the hours that these various operators are at the switchboard, as appears from the statement made to the committee.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. While I do not suppose it is possible at this time to get adequate or just wage scales for the employees of the District or the Government, I do believe that if in some way information is put before this Congress showing that there are employees of the Government who are not being paid a just and adequate wage we may be able at some time in the future—and I hope in the near future—to establish a wage basis that may be somewhere nearly adequate and just. All the way through the Government service you find just such differences as that, where very often there is no real difference in the service required or the qualifications and ability of those employed. I do not know whether the committee have made any inquiry or have any information on the subject. I am not criticizing this committee, but I am satisfied that it is a matter to which more consideration ought to be given than has been given. I am seeking all the information I can get, so that I may do something to adjust the matter.

The Clerk read as follows:

Western High School: Janitor, $900; laborers—one $420, three at $360 each; in all, $2,400.

Mr. MONDELL. Can the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. PAGE] recall when the appropriation of $150,000 for the rebuilding of the Western High School became available?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I do not recall the exact date, but it was passed in a deficiency bill during the last session of Congress, possibly about the 1st of October, or possibly in September. I do not recall the date. I do not have it here before me, but it was in a deficiency bill passed about that time; my recollection is in September.

Mr. MONDELL. All that has been done up to date, as I understand it, is to let one contract for about $30,000 out of the $150,000.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. That was true at the time the hearings were had upon this bill.

Mr. MONDELL. And the probability is that that school will not be ready for occupancy until the beginning of the school term next September.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Certainly not before that time, as appears from the statements made to us by the commissioners.

Mr. MONDELL. Let us hope and pray that it may be ready by that time.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I join the gentleman both in the hope and the prayer.

Mr. MONDELL. Because the pupils of the District have been most grievously discommoded through the necessity of going to other schools far distant from their homes. Here, it seems to me, is another illustration of the lack of activity or promptness in providing for the needs of the District after appropriations are made. There has been some criticism because the committee has not approved an item of $50,000 for furnishing this building. In the first place, that is very properly a deficiency item. In the second place, there is no necessity to appropriate for these furnishings—at least until the contracts shall have been let for the reconstruction of the building.

The Clerk read as follows:

M Street High School and Douglass and Simmons Schools: Engineer, $1,500; janitor, $900; laborers—one $420, three at $360 each; in all, $3,460.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Referring again to this delay in construction, let me call attention to the fact that, as I understand it, the contract has not yet been let for the construction of the M Street High School. Can the gentleman from North Carolina inform me when we first appropriated for that school?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. In the appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1914, $150,000 was appropriated. Again, in the current law $150,000, and in this bill the remainder of the limitation, $250,000, is carried.

Mr. MONDELL. At that rate a pupil in the District will grow up, and if he does not have the benefit of the school himself his children will by the time the authorities get around to construct the building. It seems to me there has been unnecessary delay in beginning and in concluding the work on these school buildings. There has been a great deal of delay in the construction of the much-needed new Central High School. It is in a district very badly in need of high-school facilities. People have sent their children, even when the Western High School was in operation, as far as 4 miles to a high school, and these high schools are crowded. This additional school is very greatly needed, yet the construction of the building, it seems to me, has moved along very slowly.

Mr. Chairman, I ask permission to insert in the RECORD at this time some memoranda with regard to this District bill, which may be interesting to those who desire to get at a glance an idea of what the bill carries and how its items compare with the estimates and with the bill of last year. I have set out the larger items which the committee did not allow, which were estimated for, and all the larger reductions below the estimates.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the matter referred to. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

For five graduate nurses, one of whom shall be colored, who shall act as public-school nurses, at $900 each, $4,500.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, when we were having general debate on this bill the other day I made inquiry of the gentleman from North Carolina with respect to a possible investigation of complaints emanating from friends of the colored pupils. I do not desire to pursue that matter in particular to-day, except to ask the chairman of the committee whether he proposes to offer an amendment.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I do propose to offer an amendment a little later on in the bill.

Mr. MOORE. That being the case, I should like to have unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a memorial signed by a number of colored residents of the District of Columbia, and also an article, in the form of a complaint, coming from what is called the Oldest Citizens' Association—colored—as published in a paper here called the Sun.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD as indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[From the Washington Sun, Friday, November 20, 1914.]

HORRIBLE CONDITIONS IN THE WASHINGTON SCHOOLS—REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE APPOINTED BY THE PRESIDENT SAYS DISSATISFACTION IS WIDESPREAD IN THE SCHOOLS—MR. DANIELS'S INTIMIDATING ADDRESS.

We have received for publication the following report of the committee on the public schools, by the Oldest Citizens' Association (colored), of Washington, D. C.:

"Gentlemen, your committee authorized by appointment of the president August 24, 1914, and especially charged to investigate conditions in our schools, have in part performed that service and submit the following report:

"That inquiry diligently prosecuted among teachers and parents in Washington, D. C., discloses a situation of utter demoralization and reign of terror among the teaching corps. So much so and so widespread did this become that as a source of mutual protection and self-defense they felt obliged to organize a teachers' protective association. This they did over the protest and opposition of the assistant superintendent.

"In view of the above, the truth of which is unquestioned, it must be confessed, on all lines, that this condition among the teaching corps in our schools is a deplorable one, and demands relentless action by this association, composed as it is of many of Washington's most intelligent and substantial citizens. The committee wishes further to state that inquiry among the parents having children in the schools discloses a widespread feeling of distrust, want of confidence, and intense dissatisfaction with school administration.

"The demoralization and reign of terror among the teachers so plainly manifest Saturday, September 26, 1914, at M Street High School, is a case in point, when Mr. Ernest Daniels, a member of the board of education, felt called upon to violently rebuke them for their attitude of dissatisfaction over school conditions, and in well-understood slang language attempted to browbeat and bulldoze the teaching body by threatening them with dire consequences unless they 'got on the band wagon,' and, by way of emphasis, repeatedly said, 'Do you get me?'

"Never before in the history of the Washington schools has such a scene been witnessed, and your committee recommend that this association formally bring this matter to the notice of the board of education, with the earnest request that such action be taken by them as will correct the conditions that appear to exist, and has led up to the same.

"While the conditions throughout the system are far from satisfactory, your committee at this time have had under consideration conditions in Normal School No. 2, developed through an investigation of the same at the close of the school term 1913–14, which exposed a situation unparalleled in school administration anywhere in the United States. It was found that the kindergarten class of 18 graduates had been rated on false premises; that students had been rated as attaining a given per cent in studies not taught in the class, or to a greater extent, during the two-year course, than the reading of a couple of chapters from a book by the teacher; that the marking of the students in the class by the kindergarten trainer were problematical and the result of guesswork, since the trainer confessed during the investigation that she had kept no records of the daily work of the class during the two years, but had relied solely on her memory. In the subjects of "principles" and the "history of education," regarded as highly essential in normal-school training, no regular lessons or individual examinations as to progress were given during the two years, and yet the 18 students were hypothetically marked by the trainer as if they had regularly pursued these studies. It was also developed that the good marks "excellent," "very good," "fair," etc., were in a measure disregarded, since the mark "very good" accorded to No. 1 was also accorded to all the intervening students in the class down to No. 17.

"As astounding as the foregoing may appear, it is exceeded by another phase. Your committee is informed that in the matter of teaching ability or aptitude, wherein the student takes a class in the model school so that the trainer may observe the student in action, many were marked whom the trainer had not seen in action from September, 1913, to February, 1914.

"In the matter of music, which forms so large a part of the work in the kindergarten, and which is rated as three-fourths part of the same, a wide difference exists between the white and colored kindergarten ratings. In the white normal the rating for musical knowledge is said to be 16, while in the colored a credit of 1½ only is given each semester, or 6 in all.

"Your committee believe this discrimination existing in the colored schools should be taken up and the reason for the same probed to the end that uniformity be secured. The importance of this effort will readily appear when your committee states that it has been ascertained that the markings of the kindergarten trainer are credited at 75 per cent, and if they are based on problematical or false premises it can readily be seen how serious is the condition that confronts us as a people in the school opportunities of our children. The sacrifices that are being made daily by the great body of our citizens to keep their children in the schools claim our consideration, and it behooves us to demand that those set apart to teach them shall be fully qualified for the task, and that no falsification of the records be permitted.

"The committee begs further to report that they have not thus far dealt with individual cases, while cognizant of many under that head of a very flagrant character; though it is proper to say that the case of Miss Fay Hershaw, daughter of Mr. L. M. Hershaw, was the medium through which the monstrous facts concerning the conditions in the colored schools herein contained were brought to public light.

"The kindergarten trainer referred to is still in charge of that department of our school system, though the disclosures narrated above were taken stenographically last June and are doubtless now in possession of the school authorities.

"Respectfully submitted.

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 9, 1914.

The Hon. J. HAMPTON MOORE,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: In view of the report of the Oldest Citizens' Association (colored) of Washington, D. C., a copy of which is annexed hereto, the undersigned colored residents of Washington, D. C., respectfully petition the House of Representatives to cause an investigation to be made of the administration of the colored department of the public schools of the District of Columbia for the purpose of determining whether the deplorable conditions set forth in the above-mentioned report do in fact exist, and whether other allegations of gross irregularities attributed to the school officials are well founded.

In the hope that actual conditions may be revealed and the welfare of the schools promoted, this petition is respectfully subscribed.

John Dixon, Daniel Timberlake, William L. Andrews, John M. Hardy, David Kirk, Alphonzo Countee, R. B. Brown, F. Jolie, Noble N. Snowden, George W. Hardy, Green W. Durrette, Maurice W. Farr, Wade H. Powell, J. E. Langston, T. R. Speller, jr., Jefferson Keen, J. H. Young, Oliver B. Gilmore, Florence Givens, Clarence Givens, Mrs. Cora Contee, William L. Motley, Thomas H. Robinson, Virginia Hayes, Eva J. Robinson, Rev. William D. Battle, Mrs. A. H. Battle, Robert Piper, D. D. Rogers, A. M. Rogers, R. T. Wise, Fred Brooks, A. Arthur, George Scott, George Webb, H. L. Butler.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, by way of explanation I wish to say that the facts contained in the article and in the memorial may be worthy of investigation. I do not know. It is asserted for the memorialists that they have not had a chance to have their grievances aired. Whether there is any substantial basis for that I do not know. The article and the memorial speak for themselves. Since the discussion in the House the other day several complaints have come in from other citizens of the District, and in equal fairness I should say that this morning a letter was received from the assistant superintendent in charge of the colored schools, Roscoe Conkling Bruce, saying that so far as he is concerned he would welcome any investigation that might be started to ascertain the truth of these complaints.

The Clerk read as follows:

A detailed statement of the expenditure of the appropriation made for the purposes expressed in the foregoing paragraph shall be submitted to Congress in the Book of Estimates for the fiscal year 1916, and annually thereafter.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the year "1916," mentioned in line 19, ought to be "1917."

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. That is true, Mr. Chairman, and I ask unanimous consent that the word "seventeen" may be substituted for "sixteen" in line 19, page 41.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

For cabinetmaker for repairing school furniture, $1,000.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment as a new paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the purpose of making a complete survey of the school system and school organization of the District of Columbia, to be expended under the direction of the United States Commissioner of Education, who shall report to the Congress not later than December 1, 1915, the sum of $15,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the appropriation is not provided for or authorized by existing law.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I concede the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For repairing and painting quarantine station, $400.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Can the gentleman from North Carolina tell me from what appropriation is carried the sum by which lepers are maintained?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. It has been paid out of a lump sum that is carried for the health department, but I can not tell the specific sum.

Mr. MANN. I suppose it would be possible for the gentleman to ascertain between now and Monday?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I think so.

Mr. MANN. That leads me to ask the gentleman a further question. It is quite evident that we can not pass the entire bill to-night. How far does the gentleman expect to read before he moves that the committee rise? While we have some time yet left to-day we commenced early and have worked steadily.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I will say to the gentleman that I have no disposition to run to a late hour even if I controlled the matter entirely. If he will let us read through the health department to the bottom of page 69, I will move that the committee rise.

Mr. MANN. And in the meanwhile the gentleman will be able to obtain the information that I asked for?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I will try to get the information by Monday.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Bacteriological laboratory: For maintaining and keeping in good order, and for the purchase of reference books and scientific periodicals, $300;

In all, $3,300.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 53, strike out all of line 24.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, in explanation of that I will say that that was a total put in there by mistake; it was copied from an old bill and does not represent anything in this bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For rent of building at 203 I Street NW., $2,400.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. This building for the juvenile court at 203 I Street NW. is right near a public school. I beg to call attention to it, because it seems to me, in a matter of this kind, where you take in all sorts of persons to be tried, that there ought not to be a court so near as that to a public school in the city. Does the gentleman know, or can he give us any reason, why the court has been located there and whether or not it is necessary to have it located there?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. In answer to the gentleman's question, I personally do not know of any reason why this particular locality was selected for the juvenile court.

The court had to move from its old quarters up beyond the State, War, and Navy Building, and the judge of the court leased this building on I Street. I have understood that it was the most suitable building that he could find for this purpose. How near it is to the public school I can not say.

Mr. FOSTER. I will say it is very close to a public school in that neighborhood. It seems to me a very bad policy to locate a court of this character so near a public school.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I would suggest to the gentleman that in that quarter of the city there may be need that the court shall be not very far removed from the school building. I do not know that that is true, however.

Mr. FOSTER. I hardly think that is correct; but if so, we would not improve the condition of the neighborhood by locating the court there. I think it is a very bad policy for the commissioners to locate a court of that kind so close to a public school and in a residence district of the city.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I will say to the gentleman that I have had no complaints coming from those interested in the school regarding the location of this court. I have had some complaints from residents in that quarter of the city regarding the location of the court.

Mr. FOSTER. I think probably the residents have had the school in mind when they have been complaining to the gentleman.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. If so, they did not mention the school, and I judged it was because of their residence near the court.

The Clerk read as follows:

MEDICAL CHARITIES.

For care and treatment of indigent patients, under a contract to be made with Freedmen's Hospital by the Board of Charities, $35,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of giving my views in reference to the items which follow on this page. In the subcommittee which made up this bill I was opposed to these items. First, I am opposed to the Federal Government contributing any sum of money to any private institution. Second, I am opposed to the Federal Government contributing any money to any sectarian institution of any kind, irrespective of the church that it may be under the control of. In the subcommittee I have taken this position. I take the position here now that the District of Columbia should be provided with the proper institutions to care for its own poor. The trouble about these appropriations is that when the religious proposition is discussed on the floor of the House it is always discussed and must be discussed with a great deal of care, because we desire to keep the Federal Government always separate and apart in the conduct of its business from the conduct of the business of the church. I do not believe that, under the guise of charity, it is proper to make these contributions out of public funds. Since the foundation of the Government down to the present time that has been the policy of the Government, and those of you who were in the House in 1896 will recall that quite a disturbance was raised in reference to the appropriation for certain institutions in the Territories where various churches had established universities, schools, colleges, many of them under contract with the Indians. After the Indians had moved from the Territory these appropriations continued to be made.

In 1896 there was quite a controversy about it, and the Congress of the United States passed a statute most drastic in its terms, providing that it should be the policy of the Federal Government to contribute nothing in property, money, or anything of value by appropriation directly or indirectly to any institution of any kind or character that was under sectarian control. In the District of Columbia appropriation bill of the same year a like statute was carried. You can not make an appropriation directly to these institutions without violating that statute. That was the fixed policy of the Government, as both of those statutes decided, the solemn judgment of Congress when the matter was presented and was an issue in Congress. The trouble about these items is not that they are large, but we are compelled, in order that many of these poor unfortunates may be cared for, to permit them to go into some religious institution, and only their actual care and maintenance is paid. Your committee had a provision in the last bill for plans and specfications for building an institution where all of these people could be placed, but in making the estimate for the matter the commissioners did not make the plans and specifications, or did not have time to do it, but at any rate we have not made the progress we should along that line. I do not know that the District Commissioners or that the people here in the District are opposed to the proposition. I know that there are a great many here who are in favor of it, but we are liable at almost any moment to have hurled red-hot on the floor of this House some religious discussion, and some of the papers are already discussing the vast amounts of money, exaggerating the amounts and the purposes for which they are appropriated, that are paid to religious institutions here, and we are being misunderstood.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to be permitted to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, we are liable to be misunderstood because the items in the bill are for only the actual care and maintenance of these unfortunates who are committed, as a rule, by the courts to the various institutions under the care of the Board of Charities or the Board of Children's Guardians. In other words, they are charges which it is the duty of the Public Treasury to support and maintain, and not having an institution in which they can be placed, of necessity Congress has been compelled, since we require by law that they be committed to the care of these boards for the boards themselves to care for them, and the boards in turn commit them, of necessity, to these various institutions, Congress must then in turn pay the bills incurred in their care and maintenance. I have been in favor of leaving these items out of the bill for the purposes of bringing the condition sharply before Congress, showing how totally inadequate the facilities of the District of Columbia were for caring for its own poor; but if the time shall come when a discussion is rife and the religious spirit stirred up throughout the country, Congress will have these items staring it in the face and reason will be dethroned. Therefore, I want again, as I have before, to call attention of the Congress to the necessity and the duty of providing an institution so that we will not be compelled to make appropriations in spite of the law which we have passed, to sectarian institutions. I have no sort of religious prejudice of any kind or character, but I do believe strongly that we should keep the Government and the churches absolutely separate. It is a conviction with me. I have been trained to it all of my life; and feeling that way about it, I feel it my duty to call attention to the fact that these items, in my judgment, ought not to be in this bill. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

For care and maintenance of children under a contract to be made with St. Ann's Infant Asylum by the Board of Charities, $6,000.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that we met to-day at 11 o'clock, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GARNER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 19422, had come to no conclusion thereon.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

By unanimous consent, Mr. KELLEY of Michigan was granted leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of J. Cobb, of Shepherd, Mich., Sixty-second Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

SALE OF WASTE PAPER.

The Speaker laid before the House a letter from the Doorkeeper of the House of Representatives showing the amount of money received from the sale of waste paper from December 1, 1913, to December 1, 1914, which was ordered to be filed.

EVENING SESSION TO CONSIDER OMNIBUS PENSION BILL.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Tuesday, December 15, at the usual hour of adjournment, the House shall take a recess until 8 o'clock to consider the bill H. R. 19545—an omnibus pension bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SHERWOOD] asks unanimous consent that next Tuesday, on the 15th of December, at 5 o'clock, the House take a recess until 8 o'clock, to have a session extending not later than 11 o'clock, to be devoted to the consideration of an omnibus pension bill.

Mr. MANN. It being the understanding, I take it, that there will be no other business transacted?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Although I remember on a previous occasion, where the same understanding was entered into, that the House at the evening session violated that agreement, holding it had authority to do so, and I was surprised that any gentleman here would consent to it; but, on the contrary, several urged that it be done.

The SPEAKER. The understanding being in connection with the request that no other business shall be transacted at the night session; and if the present occupant of the chair presides, he will see to it that it is not; and if he does not, he will instruct whoever he may appoint that he sees that it is not. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 22 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned to meet to-morrow, Sunday, December 13, 1914, at 10.30 o'clock a. m.

SENATE.

SUNDAY, December 13, 1914.

(Legislative day of Saturday, December 12, 1914.)

The Senate reassembled at 10 o'clock and 45 minutes a. m. on the expiration of the recess.

FUNERAL OF THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE SERENO E. PAYNE.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THORNTON in the chair). In conformity with the resolution of the Senate accepting the invitation of the House of Representatives to participate in the funeral services of the late Representative SERENO E. PAYNE, of New York, to take place to-day, the Senate will proceed in a body to the Hall of the House of Representatives. At the conclusion of the ceremonies there the Senate will return to its Chamber, when the proper motion for an adjournment will be made. The Sergeant at Arms will execute the order of the Senate.

The Senate returned to its Chamber at 11 o'clock and 46 minutes a. m. and Mr. THORNTON resumed the chair.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SUNDAY, December 13, 1914.

The House met at 10 o'clock and 30 minutes a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Thy blessing descend upon us, O God our Father, as the dews of Hermon as we thus gather in the solemn presence of the dead, that our hearts may be mellowed, our faith lifted up to a higher altitude, and our hopes strengthened for the service which is to follow; in the name and spirit of the Lord Christ, Amen.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the Journal of yesterday.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move that the reading of the Journal be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina moves that the reading of the Journal be dispensed with. If there be no objection it will be so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House recess until 10 o'clock and 50 minutes a. m.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the House stand in recess for 15 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Accordingly (at 10 o'clock and 35 minutes a. m.), the House took a recess.

FUNERAL OF THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE PAYNE.

The recess having expired, the House was again called to order by the Speaker.

The remains of the late Mr. PAYNE lay in state in the space in front of the Clerk's desk.

At 10 o'clock and 54 minutes a. m. the Doorkeeper announced the Senate, and they took the places assigned to them on the right of the Speaker, the President pro tempore [Mr. THORNTON] occupying a seat at the Speaker's desk.

The following were then announced and took the places assigned to them:

Ambassadors to the United States and members of the Diplomatic Corps.

The New York delegation in Congress.

The Chief Justice and the Associate Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Members of the President's Cabinet.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., recited selections from the Scriptures, as follows:

The heavens declare the glory of God; and the firmament showeth His handiwork.

Day unto day uttereth speech, and night unto night showeth knowledge.

There is no speech nor language where their voice is not heard.

Their line is gone out through all the earth and their words to the end of the world. In them hath He set a tabernacle for the sun.

Which is as a bridegroom coming out of his chamber, and rejoiceth as a strong man to run a race.

His going forth is from the end of the heaven, and his circuit unto the ends of it; and there is nothing hid from the heat thereof.

The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul; the testimony of the Lord is sure, making wise the simple.

The Lord is my shepherd; I shall not want.

He maketh me to lie down in green pastures: He leadeth me beside the still waters.

He restoreth my soul: He leadeth me in the path of righteousness for His name's sake.

Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil: for Thou art with me; Thy rod and Thy staff they comfort me.

Let not your heart be troubled: ye believe in God, believe also in me.

In my Father's house are many mansions: if it were not so, I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you.

And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also.

For none of us liveth to himself, and no man dieth to himself.

For whether we live, we live unto the Lord; and whether we die, we die unto the Lord: Whether we live therefore, or die, we are the Lord's.

For to this end Christ both died, and rose, and revived, that he might be Lord both of the dead and living.

But some man will say, How are the dead raised up? and with what body do they come?

Thou fool, that which thou sowest is not quickened, except it die.

And that which thou sowest, thou sowest not that body that shall be, but bare grain, it may chance of wheat, or of some other grain:

But God giveth it a body as it hath pleased Him, and to every seed His own body.

All flesh is not the same flesh: but there is one kind of flesh of men, another flesh of beasts, another of fishes, another of birds.

There are also celestial bodies, and bodies terrestrial: but the glory of the celestial is one, and the glory of the terrestrial is another.

There is one glory of the sun, and another glory of the moon, and another glory of the stars; for one star differeth from another star in glory.

So also is the resurrection of the dead. It is sown in corruption, it is raised in incorruption.

It is sown in dishonor, it is raised in glory: it is sown in weakness, it is raised in power:

It is sown a natural body, it is raised a spiritual body. There is a natural body, and there is a spiritual body.

For we know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle is dissolved, we have a building of God, a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens.

For in this we groan, earnestly desiring to be clothed upon with our house which is from heaven:

If so be that being clothed we shall not be found naked.

For we that are in this tabernacle do groan, being burdened: not for that we would be unclothed, but clothed upon, that mortality might be swallowed up of life.

Now he that hath wrought us for the selfsame thing is God, who also hath given unto us the earnest of the Spirit.

For I am persuaded, that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come,

Nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord.

The Chaplain then offered the following prayer:

"Lord, Thou hast been our dwelling place in all generations. Before the mountains were brought forth, or ever Thou hadst formed the earth and the world, even from everlasting to everlasting, Thou art God."

From time immemorial, amid the changing scenes and conflicts of life, the heart of man has ever turned to Thee, O God our Father, for light to guide, strength to sustain, and courage in every time of trouble. So we turn to Thee in this hour of sorrow. Open Thou our spiritual eyes, that we may see the glories round about us; our spiritual ears, "that we may hear the rustle of wings," the song of angels; our spiritual hearts, that we may feel the warm currents of Thy love and be reassured in our longings, hopes, and aspirations.

A friend, a colleague, a servant of the people, has passed from the scenes of the Now to the realms beyond. Time and space are nothing. Life in Thee alone is life. So we believe, so we aspire, so we pray. Our coming together to-day in memory of a great man is the earnest of that immortality which springs spontaneously from the soul and lifts us to the realms of high heaven, source of all good.

His deeds speak more eloquently than tongue or pen of his worth to State and Nation. It is well thus to commemorate them, that he may live again in those who shall come after him.

Comfort those who knew and loved him, especially his bereaved family, in the undying hope of the eternal and everlasting life in a risen and glorified Christ. For Thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory forever. Amen.

The quartet choir of Calvary Baptist Church, Washington, D. C., sang "Nearer, my God, to Thee."

Rev. Samuel H. Greene, D. D., pastor of Calvary Baptist Church, Washington, D. C., spoke as follows:

Men die, but sorrow never dies;
The crowding years divide in vain,
And the wide world is knit with ties
Of common brotherhood in pain.

This solemn sense of relationship is ours to-day as we come to pay our tribute to the memory of one whose long and distinguished service has made us all his debtors. It seems fitting that this manly form should be brought again within these walls where for nearly a third of a century he was a conspicuous figure in national legislation. Pausing tenderly and reverently beside our dead, let us pray—

So teach us to number our days that we may apply our hearts unto wisdom.

Consciously or unconsciously, we are recognizing God in hours like this, the Greater Life that must be behind our own, in whose favor alone we find peace and hope; the Source of all Authority, at whose summons we pass to the great beyond. This center fact of the universe finds emphasis in all the crucial hours of human life. Its call sounds when we grope helplessly in the darkness; it sounds when on the mountain top our vision is largest, and it sounds when at last our little boat puts out to sea.

Jesus, lover of my soul,
Let me to thy bosom fly,
While the nearer waters roll,
While the tempest still is high.
Hide me, O my Savior, hide,
Till the storm of life is past;
Safe into the haven guide,
Oh, receive my soul at last.

There are some hours when the sense of common loss is so great that we forget our little differences, and in that hallowed light stand face to face with our better selves. It is one of the compensations of sorrow. This remarkable gathering, the place, and the hour are a splendid tribute to the memory of a great and good man, and an equal tribute to the better qualities of American manhood as represented here to-day.

Mr. PAYNE seemed the natural product of the family whose name he bore. For generations they had been a sturdy, industrious, prosperous, religious people. He was born in the university town of Hamilton, N. Y. In its fine atmosphere of culture his early life was spent. Here he began a college course which was completed in Rochester University, from which he graduated in 1864. Two years later he commenced the practice of law in the city of Auburn. His thoroughness as a student, his rare good judgment, his unquestioned integrity and marked ability soon won for him wide and abiding popularity. His townsmen hastened to honor him with the evidences of their esteem and confidence. As city clerk, district attorney for Cayuga County, and as president of the board of education he served with distinction. In a city of wealth and culture he became one of its foremost citizens. His home life was ideal, his church life happy, the Sunday school he superintended prosperous, and his friends an ever-increasing multitude. Thus early in his young manhood he was crowned with the favor of God and men.

Out of such homes and such lives can a nation build strongly and securely. It is not strange that from such a place and such endeavors his fellow citizens should call him as their representative at the National Capital.

Mr. PAYNE'S long and conspicuous career here is a fine illustration of the worth of character in public life. Deep down in the American heart, whatever may be its own shortcomings, there is an abiding reverence for honesty, purity, and courage. It is not the wish of our people that promotions come shadowed by political dishonor or tricks of trade. When the people are persuaded that in the face of temptations a man is too honest to do wrong, too good to be untrue, too near to God to speak falsely, even for personal gain, then they mean to honor him with more than a temporary allegiance. It is an abiding witness to the high character of our departed friend that the people who knew him best were his stanchest friends and ardent admirers.

And here in the stress and storm of political debate and changing conditions this strong, fearless man, standing sometimes in the front of the fray, never ceased to be manly or stooped to conquer. For the purity and strength of his character he was honored and loved by all.

Around this casket all bitterness dies as we bear our tearful tribute to American manhood and American statesmanship.

Those who differed with him most were quick and glad to recognize his great learning, wide experience, splendid courage, and absolute honesty.

These high qualities of character commanded the admiration and loyalty of his constituency at home and an acknowledged position among his colleagues here. If from this sad place the message may go to the young men of our Nation that character and service are the conditions of place and permanency in public life, our friend and brother will have added yet another contribution to the life of the country he loved and served so long and well.

Mr. PAYNE was a man of deep religious convictions. Reared in a Christian home, uniting early with the church, called to its activities, he soon became recognized as a devoted and efficient leader. He gave generously of his time, his means, and his influence.

On coming to this city he immediately identified himself with a church of his own denomination, and few were more regular or loyal attendants on its public services. On many occasions he there bore tender and eloquent testimony to his Christian faith.

It was but natural that at last he should be found with the open Bible beside him. The noble and devoted wife had passed to her reward three years ago, the son was in another city, no kin were near when that last hour came on, but the One Book that had so long been a light to his pathway was beside him as he entered the valley and the shadow of death.

At the end of a long and honored career he rests from his labors in the blessed hope of the resurrection and the life everlasting. In this distinguished presence we pay this grateful tribute to his memory, and pray that the God of all grace may comfort this sorrowing family and the many whose hearts are heavy with sense of great and personal loss.

So live, that when thy summons comes to join
The innumerable caravan that moves
To that mysterious realm where each shall take
His chamber in the silent halls of death,
Thou go not, like the quarry slave at night,
Scourged to his dungeon, but sustained and soothed
By an unfaltering trust, approach thy grave
Like one that wraps the drapery of his couch
About him, and lies down to pleasant dreams.

The choir sang "Lead, Kindly Light."

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., pronounced the following benediction:

And now, Almighty God, our heavenly Father, sanctify our hearts by this service, and let the spirit which has come into them lead us all the journey of life, and at last bring us to Thee; in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, our Savior. Amen.

The members of the President's Cabinet, the Chief Justice and the Associate Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States, the Ambassadors to the United States and the Diplomatic Corps, the Senate, and the committee appointed on the part of the Senate and House to escort the remains withdrew from the Chamber in the order named.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly (at 11 o'clock and 45 minutes a. m.) the House adjourned until Monday, December 14, 1914, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE.

MONDAY, December 14, 1914.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We come before Thee, Almighty God, that we may enter into communion and fellowship with the Lord God Almighty. We remember that justice and judgment are the habitation of Thy throne. Thou hast set an exceeding high standard of life, but Thy grace is sufficient for every duty that confronts us. We pray Thee to speak to us. Speak through the precious memories of our own innocent childhood. Speak to us through the pressing call of the world about us and the various language of nature. Speak to us by Thy grace in our hearts and through Thy word, that we may know the divine will and may have the purpose of heart to execute all that Thou dost require at our hands. For Christ's sake. Amen.

WILLIAM E. CHILTON, a Senator from the State of West Virginia; MOSES E. CLAPP, a Senator from the State of Minnesota; LUKE LEA, a Senator from the State of Tennessee; CHARLES E. TOWNSEND, a Senator from the State of Michigan; and THOMAS B. CATRON, a Senator from the State of New Mexico, appeared in their seats to-day.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last was read and approved.

WAR SUPPLIES TO BELLIGERENT NATIONS.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, at this point I wish merely to call the attention of the Chair and of the Senate to the reference of the bill (S. 6862) to forbid the furnishing of war materials to belligerent nations, introduced by the Senator from California [Mr. WORKS] on the 10th instant. The bill was by the Chair referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. I am not going to ask that any change of reference be made at this moment when the Senator from California [Mr. WORKS] or the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN], who is chairman of the committee, are not present, both of whom seem to be absent now; but clearly the bill should have been referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

A similar bill, introduced by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK], relating to almost identically the same subject matter was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and properly so referred. The reference to the Committee on Military Affairs was evidently an oversight, or it was probably marked on the bill when it was introduced by the Senator from California.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It was a request on the part of the Senator from California that the bill be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and, there being no objection, it was so referred.

Mr. STONE. Then, of course, that reference naturally followed in the absence of objection, but now we have two bills relating to the same subject pending before two separate committees, and the matter covered by each of the bills relates to subjects that almost exclusively affect our relations with foreign countries. There is no more reason for sending such a bill to the Committee on Military Affairs than to the Committee on Naval Affairs or the Committee on Public Lands. It is a matter which belongs to the jurisdiction of the Committee on Foreign Relations. For that reason, as well as to prevent confusion in having the same subject matter considered by two committees, I am going to ask, when the Senators interested are present, that the reference be changed.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN subsequently said: Mr. President, some days ago the junior Senator from California [Mr. WORKS] introduced a bill (S. 6862) to forbid the furnishing of war materials to belligerent nations. It was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, although I think it ought to have been referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations. I therefore ask that the Committee on Military Affairs be discharged from the further consideration of the bill and that it be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

GOVERNMENT OF THE PHILIPPINES (H. DOC. NO. 1350).

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, which will be read.

The Secretary read the communication, as follows:

AMERICAN VESSELS AND WATCH OFFICERS (S. DOC. NO. 640).

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of Commerce, transmitting, in further response to a resolution of October 16, 1914, a list of foreign-built vessels admitted to American registry under the act of August 18, 1914, together with certain information relative to the construction, ownership, and licensed officers on such vessels, and also a partial list of licensed officers for ocean steamers now out of employment and which are available for employment.

Mr. REED. Will the communication just submitted be printed in the RECORD?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The communication referred to is as follows:

AMERICAN VESSELS AND WATCH OFFICERS.

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE,

Attest: JAMES M. BAKER, Secretary.

Supplementing the partial compliance with this request on October 20, I now transmit:

2. List of vessels admitted to American registry under the emergency act, with statement as to when and where built, by whom owned, and what flag heretofore flying.

The number of American vessels documented at customhouses on June 30, 1914, was 26,943, of 7,928,688 gross tons. The number of these which were employed on the date of the Senate resolution it has not been found practicable to ascertain.

The number of outstanding licenses to officers on June 30, 1914, was as follows:

	Year of issue.					Total.
	1910	1911	1912	1913	1914

Mates, sail, over 700 gross tons	62	47	23	14	18	164

Total	13,156	14,006	28,036	26,482	18,871	100,551

These figures do not cover the officers not required to be licensed on 11,452 sail vessels, barges, etc., who would amount to upward of 14,000.

The number of officers actually employed at the date of the passage of the Senate resolution the department is unable to determine.

EXPLANATORY NOTE.—The number of outstanding licenses exceeds, of course, the number of men. Licenses are valid for five years, and the feasible way to approximate the number of licensed men (short of writing letters to all) is to take the total licenses issued during the past five years. Licenses may be renewed on written application at the end of each five years. Many men thus keep up their licenses as a matter of pride long after they have ceased going to sea (e. g., the list of available men in New York is headed by a master 73 years old). Some, of course, have died in five years and others become disabled, while still others have found more satisfactory employment ashore. The total contains duplicates in cases where in the earlier years named a man has been licensed for a lower grade and subsequently licensed for higher grades.

Respectfully,

E. F. SWEET,
Acting Secretary.

Hon. WILLIAM C. REDFIELD,
Secretary of Commerce, Washington, D. C.:

Shipowners' Association of Pacific Coast, after such investigation and inquiry as time allowed, protest that number of masters unemployed having licenses for ocean-going steamers of 2,000 tons and upward is about 50; mates of all grades, about 250; engineers of all grades, about 200; some of mates have masters' licenses, but have never had commands. Some of masters, mates, and engineers are temporarily out of employment owing to coasting steamers being laid up during present business depression, but will soon be in former jobs as vessels resume coasting trade. Of these men holding licenses listed as unemployed some have voluntarily left the sea for shore occupations; others are unfit for sea duty by reason of age and other disabilities.

SIR: Complying with request in your telegram of August 7, 1914, concerning number of licensed officers for ocean steamers unemployed in this district, I have the honor to confirm telegram of even date as per copy inclosed.

I succeeded in getting this notice in the extra evening edition of the Duluth Evening Herald for August 7, and in the morning edition of the Duluth News-Tribune August 8, and in the Superior Telegram evening of August 8.

It is quite probable that additional names will be tendered from day to day, and if so, I will notify your department by letter or by telegram if you request it.

The one presenting himself at this office to-day is Henry S. Elliott, age 56, chief engineer for steamers of 750 tons. He has had 30 years of service as a sailor and is now out of employment and willing to accept a position on ocean steamers. His address is General Delivery, Duluth, Minn.

Services were also tendered by Stewart L. Woodford, of Lake City, Minn., who has recently been discharged from the Navy after four years of enlistment, holding the position of a noncommissioned officer with a good record. He is 22 years of age. During his four years of service he has been assigned to duty on the Tennessee, Washington, and Arkansas, and for some months engaged in the electrical department on the Washington, and was in the Paymaster's Department at the time of his discharge. He is consequently simply a common sailor.

Ben Alfthan, 512 West Superior Street, Duluth, Minn., a subject of Finland, with 10 years' experience as sailor on ocean vessels representing various nationalities and 5 years of service on American vessels. His position on American vessels has been that of a wheelsman.

These are all the names that have been presented to date.

Respectfully,

HARRIS BENNETT,
Collector of Customs.

SIR: Referring further to the matter of securing names of unemployed licensed officers willing to serve in the ocean traffic, concerning which this office wrote you on the 8th instant, I have the honor to submit the name of William T. Comerford, 27 years old, chief engineer, licensed for steamers up to 150 tons on the ocean, and third assistant engineer for ocean steamers of unlimited tonnage. His address is B–7 St. Regis, Duluth, Minn. He states that he would not accept position unless tendered him by next Saturday and he would want to have his expenses paid to port of service.

To the honorable the SECRETARY OF COMMERCE,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: Supplementing telegram of even date, "Press notified regarding licensed officers. Wide newspaper publicity secured. Responses show one second mate and one chief engineer out of employment and available. Letter follows," I have to say that in the opinion of this office a considerable number of well-trained commanding and supervisory officers would be readily available if offers of employment of an attractive character were definitely made. The department will understand that in a small district, such as ours is, the number of men out of employment is never large unless the circumstances are exceptional. In ordinarily prosperous times licensed shipping officers are pretty certain to be busy either in their own line or in some other lucrative employment.

Awaiting the further instructions of the department, I am,

Respectfully,

FRANK E. FITZSIMMONS, Collector.

I have a communication in the nature of a memorial from the Western Association of Short Line Railroads, remonstrating against the passage of certain bills affecting mail transportation. I ask that the communication may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

There being no objection, the memorial was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WESTERN ASSOCIATION OF SHORT LINE RAILROADS,
San Francisco, December 3, 1914.

Hon. MARCUS A. SMITH,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: At a meeting of the short-line railroads of the States of Arizona, California, Colorado, Idaho, Montana, Nevada, New Mexico, Oregon, Utah, Washington, and Wyoming, held in San Francisco on November 16 last, for the purpose of securing more equitable compensation for the handling of railway mail, and which resulted in the formation of a permanent organization known as the Western Association of Short Line Railroads, the following resolutions were adopted:

"Whereas there are two bills—H. R. 17042, known as the Moon bill, and S. 6405, known as the Bourne bill—now under consideration in the Senate Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads of the United States Senate, the former already having passed the House; and

"Whereas House bill 17042 changes the basis of mail transportation rates from a weight to practically a space basis and invests the Postmaster General with autocratic power in regulating the compensation, character of service, form of equipment, even to compelling the use of steel cars for mail carrying, and gives him the power to impose a fine of $5,000 per day for refusal of a railroad to carry the mail at the rates of compensation and in the manner specified by him; and

"Whereas Senate bill 6405 provides exclusively a space basis to determine the rate of payment for carrying the mail and leaves the designation of the limit of space and the character of equipment wholly to the Postmaster General to determine and gives him the power to impose a fine of $5,000 per day in the same manner and for the same reasons as in H. R. 17042: Now therefore be it

"Resolved, That the short-line railroads operating in the States of Arizona, California, Colorado, Idaho, Montana, Nevada, New Mexico, Oregon, Utah, Washington, and Wyoming most earnestly protest against the enactment of either H. R. 17042 or S. 6405 as being grossly unfair to such railroads, in that their mail revenue, which at present is entirely inadequate for the service rendered, will be arbitrarily reduced thereby in the face of an ever-increasing weight of postal matter.

"The rates of compensation provided for in these bills were based on data gathered all over the length and breadth of the United States and their rates fixed, according to their proponents, upon the averages so obtained.

"The short-line railroads of the States west of the Rocky Mountains, due to the sparsely settled condition of the country, the heavy mountain grades, and long hauls between stations, are operating under conditions far more expensive than those existing in other parts of the United States, and the majority of these railroads operate but one mixed train per day each way, so that it should be apparent that no such average can be fairly applied to the western roads, where all operating costs are excessive, as compared with those in the densely populated East.

"An exclusive 'space' or an exclusive 'weight' basis is unadapted to service which requires weight for the transportation of the mail itself and space for the distributing post-office service in cars as an incidental factor. The weight determines the actual mail carried; also determines what transportation service is rendered the Government. It is the very basis upon which the Government accepts mail from the public for transportation, even to a single letter; also that an exclusive space basis would give the employees of the Post Office Department absolute control over the amount of compensation to be paid railroads according to their opinions or inclinations, and might be used for personal advantage or political gain.

"The Bourne bill further provides that the Postmaster General shall not have authority to authorize the payment for more than 7 lineal feet of space for closed-pouch service in any one train. It is immaterial how much space the postal matter delivered to the railroad for transportation will occupy, be it 10, 15, or 20 feet. Only 7 feet will be paid for, and when such railroad operates but one train per day it has no opportunity to equalize this burden.

"Radiating from the termini and from points on the line of most of the short-line railroads of the States mentioned, numerous star routes carry the mail by wagon or motor to the small towns and ranches not reached by the railroad. These star routes are a continuation of the railroads in so far as the mail is concerned, and the retail merchants of the communities off the railroad are profiting by this fact, because the parcel-post rates, including wagon haul, are less in many instances even than the freight rates on the railroads; consequently the wagon haul from the railroad to destination is accomplished at no cost to the shipper. In this manner immense shipments of foodstuffs and other matter, in the aggregate running into tons and carloads in each consignment, and consisting of flour, bran, canned goods, cement, coal, pressed brick, etc., are sent by parcel post, the Government paying out for the team haul alone in many instances more than the total sum received by it for the entire haul by rail and team, and the railroad receives little or nothing for a tonnage that legitimately belongs to it and for the transportation of which it was formerly paid for as freight or express.

"Since the last quadrennial weighing of the mail in the West the packers have reduced the standard weight of merchandise packages to about 48 pounds. Mail contractors, builders, and merchants have been quick to take advantage of this, which has not benefited the consumer, and as a consequence the railroads are hauling a tonnage of postal matter for which they receive no pay whatever.

"It is a matter of common knowledge that most of the short-line railroads in the Western States are struggling for a mere existence, and if the carrying of the United States mail is to become a heavy burden it will mean that freight and passenger rates will have to be advanced, to the detriment of the public in the communities served, in order to make up the loss caused by the transportation of the mail for which the Government will not pay a just compensation.

"We are not condemning the parcel-post act in principle, but we object to a condition which permits these freak and unintended shipments as outlined, and if the same are permitted to continue we ask for a fair compensation for carrying them: Now, therefore, be it further

"Resolved, That the short-line railroads in the States mentioned urge as a solution to the mail-pay question, fair to both the Government and the railroads alike, that the present law regulating railroad mail pay be amended so as to provide for annual instead of quadrennial mail weights, pay for apartments in cars used as traveling post offices, and relief from carrying the mail between railroad stations and post offices.

"In the event that Congress shall not deem it advisable to amend the present law as suggested, we then urge most strongly against the passage of either Senate bill No. 6405 or House bill 17042 for the reasons stated and because they will make a serious situation still worse, and that the entire matter of fixing rates of compensation for the railroads for carrying United States mail be placed in the hands of the Interstate Commerce Commission with full power to act."

We respectfully request your careful consideration of the foregoing necessarily lengthy resolutions, and we will greatly appreciate an expression of your opinion in reference to the same.

Very truly, yours,

WESTERN ASSOCIATION OF SHORT LINE RAILROADS,
By D. M. SWOBE, President.
By CLARENCE M. ODDIE, Secretary.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE ON COMMERCE.

Mr. FLETCHER, from the Committee on Commerce, to which were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 6780) to authorize the Secretary of Commerce to transfer a portion of the lighthouse reservation, Tawas, Mich., to the Secretary of the Treasury (Rept. No. 836);

A bill (S. 6781) to provide for the appointment of 11 supervising inspectors, Steamboat-Inspection Service, in lieu of 10 (Rept. No. 837); and

A bill (S. 6782) to provide for the appointment of certain assistant inspectors, Steamboat-Inspection Service, at ports where they are actually performing duty but to which they are at present detailed (Rept. No. 838).

INTERNAL-REVENUE COLLECTIONS.

Mr. SIMMONS. From the Committee on Finance I report back favorably with an amendment the bill (S. 6686) to supplement an act entitled "An act to increase the internal revenue, and for other purposes," approved October 22, 1914, and I submit a report (No. 839) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. May I ask the Senator from North Carolina to explain briefly what is the proposed amendment of the act?

Mr. SIMMONS. It is the bill introduced by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] a few days ago, and it provides that if the returns are made on the taxes paid on or before the 1st day of January instead of on or before the 1st day of December, as required in the act, the penalty shall not be imposed.

Mr. SMOOT. From the reading of the title of the bill I did not understand what the bill proposes, but with that explanation I have no objection to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment was, beginning on page 1, line 6, after the words "so as to provide as follows," to strike out the remainder of the bill and insert:

That no penalty or additional tax shall be collected on account of the failure of any person, firm, or company to make return or to pay any tax imposed by said act on or before the 1st day of December, 1914, provided such return and payment shall be made on or before the 1st day of January, 1915; and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall, upon the filing of such return and upon the payment of such tax on or before the said 1st day of January, 1915, abate or refund any penalty or additional tax assessed or collected on account of failure to file such return or to pay such tax prior to the said 1st day of December, 1914.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

On behalf of that committee I report the following order and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The order was read and agreed to, as follows:

REPORT OF ISTHMIAN CANAL COMMISSION.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying papers and illustrations, referred to the Committee on Printing:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith, for the information of the Congress, the annual report of the Isthmian Canal Commission and the Panama Canal for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1914.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, December 14, 1914.

FOOT-AND-MOUTH DISEASE.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 6689) making appropriation for the arrest and eradication of the foot-and-mouth disease, and for other purposes.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Oklahoma will not attempt to have that done at this time. It is very important that we should proceed with the consideration of the safety-at-sea convention, and I feel constrained to make a motion to go into executive session.

Mr. GORE. I should like to say to the Senator from Missouri that if the consideration of the bill leads to any extended debate I shall consent that it be laid aside. It is a bill to make an appropriation for the suppression of the foot-and-mouth disease. The Agricultural Department will have exhausted within this week all the money available for the use of the Bureau of Animal Industry. It is a matter of the highest urgency that this appropriation shall be made at once. I repeat, if the bill occasions any extended debate, I shall not insist upon its consideration.

Mr. STONE. Very well, Mr. President. On the statement of the Senator from Oklahoma that if the bill leads to debate he will not press it I shall not object; but I wish to say in yielding for the consideration of this one bill that it shall not be taken as a precedent for the consideration of other measures, and I desire to give notice that I intend, after this bill is disposed of, to press the motion for an executive session.

Mr. GORE. I sympathize with the purpose and plan of the Senator from Missouri.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $2,500,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and it is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended by the Secretary of Agriculture in the arrest and eradication of the foot-and-mouth disease, and to supply a deficiency in the appropriation "General expenses, Bureau of Animal Industry," of $1,597,996 in the "Act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915," approved June 30, 1914.

Mr. STONE. I desire to ask the Senator from Oklahoma whether such an appropriation bill as this seems to be can properly originate in the Senate?

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I would not undertake to give a definite answer to that question. Within the last few days I have read the Senate document printed at the request of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], which reviews this subject generally. The weight of opinion evidently is that general supply bills can not originate in the Senate, while other appropriation bills can. This is to meet a deficiency, and I confess I can not answer the Senator's query; it is a mooted question.

Mr. STONE. I make no point against the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, it seems to me this is rather a strange way to pass a deficiency appropriation bill. The bill has never been referred to the Appropriations Committee; it was introduced in the Senate and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. This is the first time in my experience that I have ever seen a deficiency of a million and a half dollars appropriated for by the action of the Senate without the bill having been referred to the Appropriations Committee.

I will also say to the Senator from Oklahoma that such bills have always first passed the House of Representatives, have come to the Senate, been referred to the Committee on Appropriations, reported, and then acted upon by the Senate.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, there is no doubt that general deficiency bills and urgent deficiency bills, considered as supply measures, originate in the other House; that is the uniform procedure. This bill is in part a deficiency bill and in part it is not so. In part it anticipates future expenses, and as the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry is the committee to consider appropriations for the expenditures of the Department of Agriculture, I assume that there is no impropriety in the bill having been referred to that committee, since it applies to anticipated expenses.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the amount of appropriation provided in the bill other than the deficiency is only about a million dollars.

Mr. GORE. Yes, sir.

Mr. SMOOT. I think, if we are going to pass this bill at all, we ought to make it apply to the foot-and-mouth disease and not include a deficiency appropriation. We should let the House deal with that subject and then pass the appropriation in its regular order in the Senate.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, it is the extreme urgency and need of this appropriation that constitutes my reason and my excuse for pressing the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that if he will amend the bill so that it will provide for the appropriation of a million dollars, and have it so framed that the sum will be expended by the Secretary of Agriculture in the arrest and eradication of the foot-and-mouth disease, and stop there, I shall have no objection at all to the passage of the bill; but I certainly do object to passing a bill here to take care of a deficiency.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Utah will not object to the passage of this bill. It is intended to meet an extreme urgency. It is a bill for the passage of which people have been sending telegrams here in large numbers. The necessity for the passage of the bill is extremely urgent, and it ought to be promptly passed.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Senator from Colorado need not tell me that; I know it; but I say that the $1,597,996 proposed to be appropriated in the bill has already been expended; there is no particular hurry in having a bill passed to cover that deficiency; but there is an urgency in appropriating a million dollars now to continue this work. To that I have no objection. I will agree that the bill shall now be passed with an amendment providing for the appropriation of a million dollars.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The sum which has been expended in excess of the appropriation has been spent at the urgent solicitation of the agricultural departments of the various States which have been affected by the foot-and-mouth disease. This is unquestionably a good measure in the sense of the expenditure having been proper and necessary, and it seems to me, and so the committee thought, that one bill ought to cover the entire matter.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, that may be the opinion of the Senator from Colorado, but it is not my opinion. I am perfectly willing, as I have said, that the bill shall be amended carrying the sum of a million dollars to be expended for this purpose, and stop there; but I do not believe that there ought to be added to the bill a deficiency appropriation, because that is not the way such deficiencies are provided for.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. GORE. I do.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I wish to supplement what the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] has just said by this, that it has not only been the uniform practice of the Government for the other House to originate all general supply bills, but it is unconstitutional for the Senate to originate one. All deficiency bills are general supply bills, and, in so far as this is a deficiency bill, it falls within that rule; in so far as it is a specific appropriation for a specific purpose it does not, and I express the hope that the Senator from Oklahoma will accept the suggestion made by the Senator from Utah.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. GORE. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, under the circumstances I wish to add my request to that of the Senator from Utah, that for the present the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry accept the proposition which has been made. I feel sure that the deficiency which has already been incurred will be provided for—and it ought to be provided for—by the Committee on Appropriations; but it is true that the Committee on Agriculture in the main always controls its own appropriations; and there is no question that it ought to control the amount proposed to be appropriated for the eradication of the foot-and-mouth disease. Of course, there is some question as to whether this measure should originate in the House, but I feel sure that that will be overlooked. I hope the Senator will accept this proposition, and we will take care of the deficiency very soon.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the suggestion I make to the Senator is this: Strike out "$2,500,000," in line 3, and insert "$1,000,000"; and strike out all after the word "disease," in line 7, so that the bill will simply provide $1,000,000 for the arrest and eradication of the foot-and-mouth disease.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, may I make an inquiry of the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. SHERMAN. Does the Senator know whether the deficiency that is mentioned was caused in large part by the expenditure of money for the emergency that had to be met by the breaking out of this disease?

Mr. SMOOT. There is no doubt, Mr. President, that the money was expended for that very purpose; but it is a deficiency, and the Constitution of the United States plainly provides how such deficiencies shall be provided for. There is not any doubt, I will say to the Senator, that the deficiency will be provided for, but it should be provided for in the proper way.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to inquire, further, if there would be any objection to increasing the amount of the appropriation so as to make it two and a half million dollars instead of a million dollars, and make no reference whatever to the deficiency?

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that the department say a million dollars is all they want. There would be objection to having the appropriation increased to $2,000,000 with the idea that a part of that appropriation should be applied to pay the deficiency, because the Secretary of Agriculture would not have any authority to do that.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I wish to state, with the consent of the Senator from Oklahoma——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oklahoma has the floor. There are several Senators on the floor, and the Chair does not know to whom the Senator from Oklahoma yields.

Mr. GORE. I will yield for a moment to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, in view of the amendment which has been proposed by the Senator from Utah, I desire to make a suggestion. As I recall, the Agricultural appropriation bill of a year ago authorized the department to direct the killing of animals which might have been exposed to the disease and to reimburse the owners to a certain amount. Now, it would seem that, as the Senator has sought to limit the appropriation to $1,000,000 and to strike out the latter part of the pending bill referring to the deficiency in the appropriation for "General expenses" under the act of 1915, approved June 30, 1914, the authority conferred by the bill as it is proposed to amend it would not be broad enough; in other words, I believe the bill, if it is to be amended, should further be changed so as to authorize the payment of a part of this money to the owners of animals which the Bureau of Animal Industry may order killed.

Mr. GORE. I have an amendment which I think will meet that suggestion.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that that is part of the law now, and so it would not be necessary.

Mr. POMERENE. Well, Mr. President, I understand that to be the law now, but, under the phraseology which the Senator from Utah has suggested, the expenditure of this $1,000,000 would be limited simply to the arrest and eradication of the disease. I doubt whether the language would be broad enough to authorize payments from this particular appropriation for animals killed.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that that is exactly what the Secretary of Agriculture has asked for. He wants a million dollars, to be expended hereafter, for the eradication of the foot-and-mouth disease. The bill, if amended as I have suggested, will appropriate a million dollars for that purpose.

Mr. POMERENE. But the Senator does not provide that it shall be expended under the existing law; he simply provides that it shall be expended in the arrest and eradication of the foot-and-mouth disease. There should be some reference to the existing law, so as to permit of the payment of any portion of this sum which the department might find necessary to the owners of cattle which may be killed.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I am not going to object to having the bill read "under the act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, approved June 30, 1914."

Mr. POMERENE. That would avoid any question.

Mr. SMOOT. I am perfectly willing that those words should remain in the bill, though I do not believe they are necessary.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah, which the Secretary will state.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 3, after the words "sum of," it is proposed to strike out "$2,500,000" and in lieu thereof to insert "$1,000,000," and in line 7, after the word "disease," to strike out the comma and the words "and to supply a deficiency in the appropriation 'General expenses, Bureau of Animal Industry,' of $1,597,996 in," and insert the word "under," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $1,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and it is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended by the Secretary of Agriculture in the arrest and eradication of the foot-and-mouth disease, under the "Act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915," approved June 30, 1914.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GORE. I send to the desk an amendment which I desire to offer.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "disease," in line 7, it is proposed to insert "and in the payment of claims arising out of past and future purchases and destruction of animals affected by or exposed to the foot-and-mouth disease."

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. GORE. That may require an amendment, in view of the amendment adopted at the suggestion of the Senator from Utah. I should like to ask the Senator from Utah if that conforms to his amendment, or does it require a change?

Mr. SMOOT. I do not think the amendment of the Senator as just offered is necessary, since we have retained the language in the latter part of the bill.

Mr. GORE. This amendment was suggested by the department, but I rather think it is unnecessary in view of the change made in the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that I included in the amendment offered by myself the words "under the act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, approved June 30, 1914," which cover virtually the same matter that the Senator proposes to cover by his amendment.

Mr. GORE. Very well. Then I withdraw the amendment.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill making appropriation for the arrest and eradication of the foot-and-mouth disease."

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. STONE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 4 hours and 40 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

REGULATION OF IMMIGRATION.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 6060, the unfinished business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WHITE in the chair). The Senator from South Carolina moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 6060. The question is on agreeing to the motion.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6060) to regulate the immigration of aliens to and the residence of aliens in the United States.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I ask that the bill be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the bill will be laid aside temporarily.

Mr. STONE. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 22 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, December 15, 1914, at 12 o'clock meridian.

O Thou eternal One, by whom and through whom are all things, we thank Thee for life and its attendant blessings. "As the rain cometh down and the snow from heaven, and returneth not thither, but watereth the earth and maketh it bring forth and bud, that it may give seed to the sower and bread to the eater," so let Thy spirit descend in full measure upon us, that the sunshine of Thy love may fill our hearts and quicken our lives, that they may bring forth abundantly of rich fruits, that the world may be a little better that we have lived and wrought, and Thine be the praise through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. MOON, chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, by direction of that committee, reported the bill (H. Mr. MOON. Well, this is a pretty big report, and the chairman of the committee had 18 hours in which to make it.

Mr. STAFFORD. When does the gentleman intend to take the bill up?

Mr. MOON. At the first opportunity that I can call it up.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the minority may have two days in which to file its views. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

Sundry messages, in writing, from the President of the United States were communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of further considering the bill H. R. 19422, the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. GARNER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill of which the Clerk will read the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 19422) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and for other purposes.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

For the condemnation of small park areas at the intersection of streets outside of the limits of the original city of Washington, from such areas shown on the map on file in the office of the engineer commissioner, in the discretion of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, to be acquired in accordance with the provisions relating to small parks contained in the act approved July 21, 1914, entitled "An act making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes," $25,000.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 75 strike out lines 2 to 12, inclusive, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "For the condemnation of small park areas to be acquired in accordance with the provisions relating to small parks in the District of Columbia, contained in the sundry civil appropriation act approved August 1, 1914, $25,000."

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I feel that I had better say a word in relation to this amendment. It is offered in order that the language may conform with the law in the last sundry civil appropriation act.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk completed the reading of the bill.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee rise and report the bill to the House, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GARNER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 19422) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same back with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to its final passage.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I demand a separate vote on the first amendment to the bill.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the other amendments be adopted.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any other amendment? If not, the Chair will submit the balance in gross.

There was no demand for a separate vote on any other amendment, and all the amendments except the first were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the first amendment.

Mr. MANN. And on that, Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BURKE of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment may be again reported.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

There was no objection, and the Clerk read as follows:

Amend, on page 1, by striking out the words "one half of," in line 3; and the words "out of the money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and the other half out of the revenues of the District of Columbia," in lines 4, 5, and 6; and the word "namely," in line 9, all on page 1, and insert the following as an amendment thereto: "That all moneys appropriated for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia shall be paid out of the revenues of said District to the extent that they are available, and the balance shall be paid out of money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, but the amount to be paid from the Treasury of the United States shall in no event be as much as one-half of said expenses, and all laws in conflict herewith are hereby repealed."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 186, nays 100, answered "present" 4, not voting 138, as follows:

On the vote:

Mr. PROUTY (for amendment) with Mr. BURKE of South Dakota (against).

Mr. BROWNE of Wisconsin (for amendment) with Mr. FESS (against).

Mr. AVIS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to vote "no."

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman in the Hall listening?

Mr. AVIS. No; I was out in the lobby.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not qualify.

Mr. ANSBERRY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to vote.

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman in the Hall listening?

Mr. ANSBERRY. I was right on the edge of the gallery, Mr. Speaker; I do not know whether that is considered in the Hall or not.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not bring himself within the rule.

Mr. ANSBERRY. Mr. Speaker, if I were permitted to vote, I would vote "no."

The SPEAKER. It does not make any difference how the gentleman would vote; he can not vote.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. PAGE of North Carolina, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina, by direction of the Committee on Appropriations, reported the bill (H. R. 19909) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government (H. Rept. 1221), which was read the first and second times and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order on the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa reserves all points of order on the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for general debate on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, and pending that I would like to see if we can agree upon a time for general debate.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky objects.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Then, Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina moves, notwithstanding the rule that requires a day for printing, that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union——

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. And pending that, I would like to see if we can agree upon a time for general debate.

Mr. GOOD. How much time would the gentleman from South Carolina suggest?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Would the gentleman be satisfied with an hour and a quarter on a side?

Mr. GOOD. No; I have requests for more time than that, but I would suggest that we take up the bill and agree upon four hours' general debate—that would consume the day—as we can not take up the reading of the bill under the five-minute rule, anyway, to-day.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, very well; I will agree upon four hours, two hours to be controlled by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] and two hours by myself. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that, pending the motion to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, general debate be confined to four hours, two hours to a side, two hours to be controlled by the gentleman from Iowa and two hours by myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina moves, notwithstanding the rule that requires a bill be printed one day in advance——

Mr. MANN. There is no such rule.

The SPEAKER. But the bill has never been printed. The gentleman from South Carolina moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, and pending that he asks unanimous consent that general debate be limited to four hours, two hours to be controlled by himself and two hours by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD]. Is there objection to the request? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on going into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider this bill.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 19909, the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, with Mr. FOSTER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 19909) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and for other purposes.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT].

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, to-day all over the world individuals, institutions, and Governments are endeavoring to curtail their expenditures and reduce their obligations, because they recognize it as a period of stringency and reduced income. As I listened to the President's message I thought that he felt the spirit of the time and was inculcating upon us the economy which everyone else is practicing. I have since read several times that portion of his message, and while it has the charm which invariably characterizes his speeches to Congress, I find it has also a quality of vagueness and indefiniteness which is almost as invariable, and while he introduces this subject by saying that "it is highly important that our judgments should be clear, definite, and steadfast," yet I think the most extreme advocate of a huge pork-barrel appropriation bill or the strictest economist could with equal effect quote in their support the President's attractive phrases. It seems to me that the times demand not simply a vague intention to avoid increased extravagance but an immediate reduction of expenses, a pruning of all nonessentials, a postponement of whatever is not indispensable. We were told at the last session that our revenues were so precarious that special taxes must be imposed. Such emergency taxes should be used for emergencies, and the Government should not in such times of stress continue living on the same scale as in times of ease and prosperity and a full Treasury. Perhaps one reason the Democratic platforms have always preached economy and tried to make that seem a Democratic principle is because they realized that economy was more necessary and imperative in Democratic times than in Republican times. I assent to that theory, and I believe in the typical Democratic time of to-day a strict and unsparing economy is necessary.

But in studying the estimate I see little indication of any such purpose in this administration. You would think we were in the midst of plenty. Instead of economizing and reducing expenses the administration asks for more money than we ever spent up to last year, and as you study the figures you find that some of the reductions are not real ones and that the estimates really call for more than last year, which was the high tide of national expenditure, and this at a time when everyone else in the world is lopping off expenses and when we are paying most onerous and vexatious emergency taxes.

The regular estimates last year were $1,108,000,000; this year they are $1,090,000,000, an apparent reduction of $18,000,000. But the Secretary of the Treasury tells us—page 58 of his report—that the estimate for the Postal Service under existing laws is $320,000,000, but if the legislation recommended by the department is enacted the cost will be only $297,000,000, a saving of $23,000,000. He refers, I suppose, to the change from rural carriers to star-route service, and accordingly, in the Book of Estimates, he figures the cost of the Postal Service as $297,000,000. Under existing law, which is the basis on which the estimates should be figured, that should be $23,000,000 larger, and the apparent reduction of $18,000,000 over last year is wiped out, and these estimates supplant those of last year as the largest sum any administration has ever asked any Congress to appropriate. That seems to be the interpretation in administration figures of the meaning of the paragraph about economy in the President's message. That means that in this time of depression and suffering the administration recommends that the Government be run on a more lavish and expensive scale than ever before in its history. I think that, on the contrary, now is a time to pare close to the lowest possible limit.

You gentlemen know probably better than the administration whether that legislation reducing the Post Office appropriations $23,000,000 will go through or not.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. GILLETT. Certainly.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that the Post Office Committee has reported a bill negativing the recommendation of the department and appropriates a total of $322,000,000?

Mr. GILLETT. I was not aware of that fact, but I was perfectly confident that that would be the fact. If the gentleman says it is $322,000,000, there is $25,000,000 already reported larger on the Post Office bill than it is estimated for. So that the estimates, instead of being $18,000,000 less than last year, are really $7,000,000 larger, and that in this period of stress and depression.

Mr. MANN. Would it divert the gentleman if he yielded to me for a question?

Mr. GILLETT. Certainly not.

Mr. MANN. What are the total estimates of appropriations and the total estimates of receipts for the next fiscal year?

Mr. GILLETT. The total estimates of appropriations are $1,080,000,000, calling the Post Office bill $297,000,000.

Mr. MANN. What is the total estimate of receipts made by the Secretary of the Treasury?

Mr. GILLETT. There are about seven hundred and odd millions without the Post Office bill. They are about the same as the expenditures.

Mr. MANN. I have not examined the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury, but I saw a newspaper statement the other day that the estimates of receipts were about $60,000,000 less than the estimates submitted of expenditures. If so, of course the administration has not complied with the law as carried in the Smith amendment.

Mr. GILLETT. I think they make the receipts equal the expenditures by this unjustified reduction of the $25,000,000 in Post Office expenses and by deducting the $60,000,000 of the sinking fund, and they also subtract the $18,000,000 for Panama, which I assume they expect to pay out of bonds instead of paying it out of current receipts, as we have been doing for many years.

Mr. MANN. They do not comply with the law that requires the President, when he makes estimates of receipts and expenditures, if the expenditures exceed the receipts, to make recommendation as to the methods of raising additional money. That is the law. Possibly they have not discovered it up there yet.

Mr. GILLETT. It seems to me, as I study the figures and the Secretary of the Treasury's report, that there is staring us in the face a tremendous deficit not only in 1916 but in this very fiscal year, and that the narrowest economy is our plain duty.

The Secretary says in his report:

The European war seriously and adversely affected the revenues of the Government from imports. The revenue from customs for the month of October, 1914, was $16,000,000 and for the month of October, 1913, it was $30,000,000, showing a decrease in one month of $13,000,000. I have taken the month of October for the purpose of comparison, as the new tariff went into effect October, 1913, and duties were therefore the same. The reduction in revenues is due solely to the falling off in importations.

But if you look at the statement of the Department of Commerce for the month which the Secretary selects for his comparison you find that the importations in October did not fall off at all, but increased. For October, 1913, they were $133,000,000 and for the month of October, 1914, they were $138,000,000. And yet the Secretary of the Treasury says:

The reduction in revenues is due solely to the falling off in importations.

How can he make a statement which the figures of his fellow Cabinet officer so absolutely contradict? If he is so wrong in his reasoning there it increases one's suspicion that he is wrong when he attributes our diminished revenues to the European war rather than to the Democratic tariff.

He goes on to say:

To keep the Treasury in strong condition in these abnormal times was obviously the first duty of the hour. Upon it largely depended the safety of business and finance in this country. If the emergency revenue act had not been passed, the surplus in the Treasury would have constantly diminished and might have disappeared altogether.

Inasmuch as that surplus has shrunk from $145,000,000 on the 1st of last July to $74,000,000 to-day, the danger which the Secretary points out is a very real one, and inasmuch as the emergency revenue is only estimated at $54,000,000 for the rest of this year, an apprehension is not unreasonable that even with the emergency revenues our Treasury may be dangerously empty before the end of this fiscal year.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will it embarrass the gentleman to ask him a question right there?

Mr. GILLETT. It will not embarrass me. I only hate to take so much time.

Mr. STAFFORD. Can the gentleman inform the committee whether the revenues returned under the emergency act passed two months ago have been brought into the Treasury and added in the daily returns?

Mr. GILLETT. I can not tell the gentleman; but we have this fact—which should be considered and which makes us even more concerned about the Treasury—that during this administration the expenditures have always run in excess of the estimates made by the administration and the revenue has always been below their estimates; so that it seems to me the outlook for this fiscal year is very blue, even under the statement of the Secretary of the Treasury himself. He says:

As long as the expenditures of the Government exceed its income there is always danger. To maintain such a condition is both unsound and imprudent. The corollary of a weak Treasury is impaired confidence.

I heartily indorse these sentiments, and it seems to me they should naturally have led to a cutting down of the estimates, and that instead of recommending expenditures on a vaster scale than ever before suggestions of a reduction should have been made.

He says:

It is, I think, unfortunate that this emergency measure is made to expire December, 1915. I venture to suggest that this limitation should be removed and the act amended so as to provide that it shall remain in force until peace is restored in Europe.

A more logical suggestion would have been that it remain in force until the Democratic tariff is repealed. In times of depression the people do not submit cheerfully to unusual and vexatious taxation, and it seems to me it would have been more natural and satisfactory for the administration to have recommended that this Government do what the rest of us are doing—cut down expenses—and even then, and with the emergency revenues, I do not believe the Treasury would be any too strong.

I understand that the revenues of the Post Office Department are falling off, and, as the Secretary has pointed out, in such times we should run no risks. That there is no disposition even now to stint is shown by the fact that on the very first day of the session four different recommendations, in addition to the regular estimates, amounting to over $4,000,000, were made, besides deficiency estimates of several millions.

It is always difficult to decide what is extravagance, what is economy, what is parsimony—men's minds will differ—but it seems to me clear that in times like these, as depicted by the Secretary of the Treasury, with the revenues decreasing, the surplus diminishing, importations uncertain, and when a full Treasury is indispensable, it is extravagant to send in estimates which show no serious attempt at retrenchment.

And now, Mr. Chairman, I wish to avail myself of the latitude of general debate to make a few observations not germane to this bill.

During the last campaign a member of the Cabinet came to my home city to address a Democratic rally, and in language too caustic for me to care to advertise it by repeating it denounced me because of my partisanship. I had a great regard and respect for the gentleman, and though it was naturally somewhat diminished by his uncomplimentary remarks and poor judgment of me, it was not extinguished; and it has occurred to me that it would be a fair retaliation to his criticism to show by a few specimens that the administration of which he is a distinguished and ornamental part had committed acts of partisanship beside which anything I had done would look like austere and judicial impartiality.

Partisanship is not a crime, but there are degrees of it—some commendable, some pardonable, some inexcusable. My partisanship I naturally think belongs to the first class, for I understand it consists in criticizing the Democratic administration, and inasmuch as Republicans in this Congress have been deprived of all effectual participation in legislation by the secret caucus system of the Democrats, it would be hard if they could not indulge in the only weapon left them—debate. But I think I can cite plenty of instances of partisanship by this administration which clearly belong to the third degree—inexcusable.

The very appearance of the gentleman so far from the scene of his duty for the purpose of belaboring and defeating Republicans was hardly the act of a nonpartisan, and he added to the partisanship of it by taking along with him from his duties another official, the collector of customs in New York, who did not know me, but who spent an hour in criticizing me in what I was told was a very entertaining and eloquent and effective speech.

The collector of the port of New York receives the largest salary of any United States official in the country outside of Washington. Formerly the collector was looked upon as the head of a New York machine, and his thousands of subordinates were considered an organized army for the party in power; but of late years that abominable system has been abolished, the force has been put under civil service, and the last collector found sufficient scope for his great abilities in watching and administering the interests of the Government. When the present collector was installed by this administration I noticed that he published in the papers that while in office hours he should attend to public business, his other hours would be devoted to politics—a broad hint to his subordinates and an apparent effort to again establish the collector as a party boss.

I do not believe the Government would get any more than its money's worth if the collector devoted all his time to the duties of the office instead of going out of the State in vain attempts to defeat Republicans; but apparently this was no unusual incident, for I remember a Democratic Congressman from the President's own State felt obliged to introduce a resolution in Congress asking the Secretary of the Treasury to tell how he could secure a reply to letters from the collector and where his office was located and what were his hours for conducting public business, and the health officer of New York—another good Democrat—retorting upon the collector, cruelly said:

The health officer of the State of New York wishes to state that he is not running his department from a summer resort or in the newspapers.

Now, I am perfectly willing that a member of the Cabinet and the collector of the port of New York should abandon their official duties and go up to my district to defeat me—particularly in view of the result—but I must be excused for thinking that it does not make a good introduction to a speech denouncing me for partisanship.

Let me refer to a few acts of this administration which I think are not commendable or excusable, but are unpardonable acts of partisanship, and which I think ought to estop members of the administration from criticizing others for that disposition.

By the new banking act the Reserve Board was given enormous power over the financial interests of the country. It would not seem reasonable that all seven of the members of that board should belong to one party, and if any administration—particularly one which represented a minority of the voters—should select the whole seven from its own followers, I think it might be defined as an act of narrow and inexcusable partisanship. All of the seven originally selected for the present board were Democrats. One of them, you remember, was not confirmed by the Senate because he had the manliness to repudiate the special plea made for him by the President that he became a director of an indicted trust in order to reform it. That left a vacancy, to which another Democrat was promptly nominated. So the administration made eight selections for the board, and every one of them was a Democrat. As far as we can judge, it would have made no difference how many the board contained, they would all be Democrats. The duties and power of the board make it particularly desirable and natural that it should be nonpartisan—that all appearance of partisanship should be avoided. I am told that at the bankers' convention, when considering the proposed law, the suggestion was made that it should contain a provision that the minority party should always have representation on the board, but they all thought that no administration would ever show such bigoted partisanship as not to recognize its opponents on the board, and so the motion was withdrawn as superfluous. And yet this administration selected eight members for this board at the most crucial formative period of its existence, and every one of them was a Democrat. Should such an administration denounce others for partisanship?

One member of the Reserve Board has already given an instance both of his power and of his partisanship. A Democratic Senator of a Southern State, whose record for paying its obligations was not stainless, complained to the Secretary of the Treasury that his State was not able to borrow $1,000,000 in New York on satisfactory terms. A borrower with a bad record often finds terms unsatisfactory, especially in periods of financial disturbance. But the Secretary of the Treasury issued a public statement that if the Senator could not raise the loan on satisfactory terms, "I will myself see if banks can not be found to take up this loan." With that threat and by an inducement in the shape of a deposit of United States funds it was not strange that he quickly found an accommodating bank. The Democratic national platform said:

> We condemn the present methods of depositing Government funds in a few favored banks, and we pledge our party to provide by law for their deposit by competitive bidding.

The Secretary of the Treasury not only deposits in a favored bank, but he favors the bank in order to induce it to lend money to his political friends. Is such an administration in a position to criticize partisanship? When their party is the beneficary their national platform is but a scrap of paper.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I want to say to the gentleman that the loan to which he refers was granted for the purpose of helping out a Republican administration in the State of Tennessee rather than a political friend.

Mr. GILLETT. It was a Democratic Senator who came and asked for it. I believe temporarily the State of Tennessee did happen to have a Republican governor, but he was not the agent who went to the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. There are many others in the State of Tennessee who think the fact that the loan was needed was because Tennessee had a Republican governor.

Mr. GILLETT. I know nothing about the local conditions. Did you have a Republican legislature, too?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Oh, yes; we had what was called a fusion legislature.

Mr. GILLETT. I do not know anything about your local politics. I only know what I saw in the paper—that it was a Democratic Senator, and that it was at his urgent insistency that it was granted.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GILLETT. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Is it not quite probable that this bribe which was given by the Secretary of the Treasury to a Democratic Senator was one of the reasons for the State of Tennessee recently going Democratic?

Mr. GILLETT. Another specimen of the nonpartisanship of this administration is furnished by its conduct toward fourth-class postmasters. An Executive order was issued by the President setting aside the orders of Presidents Roosevelt and Taft which had covered all fourth-class postmasters into the civil service, and this new order provided that the postmasters already holding office must submit to a competitive examination. This order was accepted by Congress as a satisfactory substitute for its proposition to return all fourth-class postmasters into the old patronage system, and apparently they have not been disappointed in their expectations of its practical workings. Suspiciously contemporaneous with this order came a reorganization of the Civil Service Commission by whom this new examination of the postmasters was to be made.

In the 20 years that I have been here appointments to that commission have been singularly free from any taint or charge of partisanship. The law provides that the commission shall consist of three persons, not more than two of whom shall be adherents of the same political party. As the main purpose of the commission was to eliminate partisanship from appointments, care was taken that the commission itself should not be partisan. That spirit was so recognized and obeyed throughout the administrations of Presidents Roosevelt and Taft that two of the three commissioners, including the president of the board, were Democrats, although the administrations that appointed them and retained them and had full power of removal were Republican. Ever since Theodore Roosevelt resigned from the commission in 1895 the president of the commission has been a Democrat, and during these administrations no changes occurred in the board except by the voluntary resignation of a commissioner. But although two of the three commissioners were Democrats, this administration in its eagerness for patronage at once removed two of them, one Republican and one Democrat. It is not often that an administration can dispose for a useful partisan purpose of an office which must be filled by a member of the opposite party, but the Republican commissioner, whom I had always found an exceptionally able and efficient official, was removed and his place filled by a constituent of a Progressive Senator, and that Senator's vote has supported administration measures more reliably than many Democrats. Gratitude has been defined as a lively appreciation of favors to come, and I presume the Senator secured the appointment of his constituent by appealing to the gratitude of the administration.

The place of the Democrat who was removed was given to the secretary of a Senator from South Carolina, whose training as the political representative of his employer one would not expect to fit him preeminently for this nonpartisan position.

This reorganized commission proceeded with its appointed task of examining fourth-class postmasters, and then the administration made the appointments. The law forbids that in the selection political faith shall be even considered. It is a violation of the law to select a man or be influenced in the selection by his politics. Do you think that either the letter or spirit of the law has been observed? To be legal here the administration must be nonpartisan. Do you think it has been either nonpartisan or legal? Let me cite two cases from my own district which recently came to my notice. In one town two men took the examination for postmaster. One was a Republican who had held the office for many years; who had the respect and confidence of the whole town; who had a long petition signed by many Democrats as well as Republicans. The rival candidate was a Democrat backed by no petition of his fellow citizens. I was told that only one man in the town besides himself wanted his appointment, but that may have been an exaggeration. The Republican was marked 90 on his examination and the Democrat 83. Did the Republican, who had the highest mark, in addition to his experience and his petition, receive the office? Oh, no; it was given to the Democrat. And yet the law demands that partisan considerations shall be ignored.

Mr. BARTLETT. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. GILLETT. Yes.

Mr. BARTLETT. Does not the law in reference to the civil service require that the three highest on the eligible list shall be certified, and from those three highest the Postmaster General, or the head of the department, shall select one of the three?

Mr. GILLETT. Yes; but the law forbids in making that selection the consideration of politics.

Mr. BARTLETT. Probably politics were not considered in the gentleman's case.

Mr. GILLETT. That is where I differ from the gentleman from Georgia. I do not believe that politics were not considered, and neither do I believe the gentleman believes it.

Mr. BARTLETT. The fact that he was a Democrat ought to give him a majority in this administration.

Mr. GILLETT. Probably it does; and that is where I say that the Democratic administration is not only partisan but illegal, because the law makes it illegal to take into consideration the politics of the candidate.

In another neighboring place the Republican, who had held the office for a dozen years, ranked three points higher than his opponent in the examination, but he was turned down and his Democratic rival given the place.

That process is going on in all our districts, and yet they criticize us for being partisan, when they are showing their bigoted partisanship not only in ignoring the rank in examination, but in violating the law, which forbids considering a man's politics. I can at least assert that my partisanship has never prevented me from advocating every extension of the merit system and every lessening of Congressional patronage, much less has it led me to flagrant disregard of the law.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILLETT. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. How does the gentleman explain the fact that under the Republican administration 97 per cent of all the civil-service appointees were Republicans?

Mr. GILLETT. It was not so. That is the way I explain that. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARKLEY. One question more, if the gentleman will yield.

Mr. GILLETT. I will yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. How does the gentleman explain away the fact that out of 400 post-office inspectors only 32 were Democrats?

Mr. GILLETT. I do not believe that is true.

Mr. BARKLEY. It was so.

Mr. MANN. That was not so.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILLETT. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Is it not true that most of the post-office inspectors are now Democrats, or claim to be?

Mr. GILLETT. I do not know, but that is aside from the point I am making. What I am saying is that under this civil-service law all over the country the same sort of thing is going on—not only is the administration partisan, but its partisanship leads them to perform acts that are illegal. I do not think it lies in the mouth of this administration to condemn for partisanship men who criticize it.

The selection of ambassadors has always been partisan and personal. Although I have always favored putting our whole Diplomatic Service on a merit basis and promoting as a reward for efficiency, yet I have never thought it was vital, because it seemed to me that in these days of cables and wireless an ambassador was only the mouthpiece of an administration, and his personal ability was of no great moment if he creditably upheld the dignity of his country. The present war has led me to revise my opinion in this as in some other matters. It teaches me how valuable it might be to a country to have an ambassador who had friendly and intimate personal relations with the leading men of the country to which he was accredited, and who could analyze accurately their prevalent opinions and purposes. How invaluable to Germany, for instance, last summer to know exactly the purposes and probable action of England and Italy. But ordinarily an ambassador's duties and opportunities are less important. During the trying times of this war our foreign representatives have met with ability and wisdom the unusual emergencies. I do not think, however, it is partisanship which makes me feel that one above all the others has distinguished himself and won the unlimited admiration and gratitude both of the people among whom he was stationed and of his own fellow countrymen. With no desire to disparage anyone, I think Ambassador Herrick won for himself a unique position, and we all in this country may take pride in the fact that when the French Government fled from Paris it was to our representative that President Poincaré said: "I commit to your charge the people of Paris." [Applause on the Republican side.] He had won a position of distinction and usefulness which fortune seldom permits to any man, and it was with great regret that I learned of his recall. I have the warmest regard and respect for his successor. We learned in this House to appreciate his ability, his refinement, his courtesy. But Gov. Herrick has attained such an unusual prestige that I felt he might well have been retained until the emergency was over, and this feeling was vastly intensified when the current rumor reached me that he was withdrawn not in the ordinary routine, but because of selfish partisanship, because Ohio politicians demanded it, because Gov. Herrick was rendering too splendid service, was making America and himself too useful, was making himself a too popular and dangerous opponent, and so the very glory of his service was the secret and vital reason of his recall. And yet an administration which can stoop to this rebukes others for being partisan.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILLETT. Yes.

Mr. SHERLEY. What basis has the gentleman for that statement?

Mr. GILLETT. That is current report; I have it on very good basis, and I thoroughly believe it.

Mr. SHERLEY. Does not the gentleman think that, making a charge of that kind, in view of the fact that the present ambassador had been appointed months before and was over in France, he ought to give something more than rumor as the basis for his statement?

Mr. GILLETT. It has something more than rumor for its basis.

Mr. SHERLEY. Then let us have it.

Mr. GILLETT. I can not give it, and will not give it; but I believe it is true, and I do not believe it will be contradicted by those who know about it.

That heroic old Democrat whose birthday is still celebrated by his degenerate party descendants, Andrew Jackson, is said to have asked a friend who was urging him to give an office to an editor in New York, "Does he loyally support me?" To which the friend replied, "He always supports you when he thinks you are right." The prototype of Democracy responded, "That's just when I can get along without him. What I want is a friend who will support me when he knows I am wrong." I presume that orthodox Democratic doctrine is held by this administration. Of course its friends will be kept very busy if they support it whenever they know it is wrong, but I have no doubt the rewards will be convincing and sufficient. But I do not think the text for its speeches should be the offensive partisanship of its opponents. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 45 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR].

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I believe it is very proper that I should follow the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] who has just spoken, because I, too, was selected for the attention of a distinguished member of the Cabinet, who traveled not 300 miles, as he did to Massachusetts, but over 1,300 miles, up into my own district, in order to tell my people whom they ought to support. It is needless to say it was not a Republican candidate whose candidacy he urged. I may further suggest that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] who has just spoken did what he could for this administration prior to adjournment by holding up to public gaze the extravagant appropriations which had been made and suggesting that public economy ought to be practiced at this time. In a smaller and in an humble way I, too, endeavored to do what I could to save an extravagant appropriation by this administration.

In the river and harbor bill which passed the House at forty-three million, some of you may remember I endeavored to point out imperfections and defects which, in my judgment, ought to have defeated it. But that bill went over to the Senate and there had added to it $10,000,000 more, making a total of $53,000,000. After a long period the bill was defeated, and a substitute bill carrying $20,000,000 was passed, which with the $6,990,000 carried by the sundry civil appropriation bill made $27,000,000 appropriated for waterways at the last session. We were criticized at that time for being niggardly over waterways, when, as a matter of fact, that amount was almost equal to the total appropriations 10 years ago, for the years 1904 and 1905. But I had no expectation of discussing that phase of the subject at this time. The argument which was raised when that bill was before the House, in response to every criticism of every project, was that the Army engineers had approved the project, that they had passed upon it, and that therefore Congress was supposed to accept it without any further questioning. I realize that when the new bill comes before the House time will be extremely limited, and for that reason I do not desire to encroach upon the time of the committee, excepting under the five-minute rule, if I may then be permitted; but I desire at this time to briefly point out to the House why the judgment of Army engineers ought not to be taken at its reported value. I believe that they have indorsed, within the past year, one of the most objectionable propositions ever brought before the American people so far as Government support is concerned, and that it is not the only one with which they have been connected, in my judgment. In order that I may not misstate any of the facts in regard to their position I desire to present one or more projects which they have approved, giving reasons for their approval, and I ask your attention to those reasons.

Before doing so, however, I desire to refer to another matter connected with river and harbor appropriations.

No public-spirited man questions the policy of extending Government aid to legitimate waterway improvements. No well-informed man can also close his eyes to scores of scandalous projects that receive many millions of dollars annually from Government waterway appropriations. No thinking man should support a miserable, wasteful pork barrel because of some legitimate project it contains.

At the lobby carnival held in this city last week, I am informed, opponents to the lobby's wasteful policy were severely criticized. The same expression of indignation came from the railway lobby of my own State 10 years ago, when the State legislature demanded to know what returns the people were getting for their money. There we were met with the same denunciation and misrepresentation, the weapons of the lobby.

I have shown to the House by RECORD evidence that dredgers, railways, and contractors are contributing to the support of the $50,000,000 river and harbor lobby. All these facts were set forth in the RECORD for October 8. Why will not men occupying conspicuous positions in both Congress and the river and harbor lobby insist upon an investigation? Let it be thorough and include the opposition as well. Why do we investigate Mulhall and not the river and harbor lobby? Why do we investigate conditions in West Virginia, Michigan, and Colorado mines and yet ignore national scandal at our doors? Why do we investigate the promotion of a gold mine in North Carolina and yet refuse to dig into the looting of a Federal Treasury that is annually worked by water-power interests, land reclamationists, railways, dredgers, and contractors who demand an annual $50,000,000 "barrel."

Good-intentioned people who are inveigled into this greedy combination may well inquire into the character of the organization.

A yellow-colored circular was mailed to every Member of Congress last week, on both sides of which appeared the sensational statement:

War has been declared against the waterways of the United States.

This foolish and barefaced misstatement, an insult to the intelligence of every Representative, was sent to all of us over the signature of the river and harbor lobby's president and secretary.

The yellow document contained a pathetic appeal for the largest convention ever held by the lobby, and in bold, black type was an announcement that "the President of the United States has been invited to speak." That brought the crowd. But the President did not appear, neither did the Kaiser nor the Sultan of Sulu, for good and sufficient reasons. But the virtues of several lame-duck projects that had been repudiated by Congress were extolled by fervid orators to willing ears, and it was unanimously resolved to support an annual $50,000,000 Treasury raid.

Think of the proposal: In the presence of a huge war tax, of a President's plea for economy, of a defeated infamous "pork barrel," and of the lobby's exposed efforts to roll it through Congress this $50,000,000 lobby demands $50,000,000 more, to include scores of projects, shown to be "humbug and steals," masquerading as navigable waters.

On December 8 the fearless Chicago Tribune, one of the world's great newspapers, in a comprehensive editorial answered the lobby's declaration of war on the Treasury as follows:

[From the Chicago Tribune, Dec. 8, 1914.]

IMPROVING NAVIGATION V. STEALING PUBLIC MONEY.

Throughout the United States navigation improvements are in danger of being prevented by their undisciplined advocates just as they were prevented in Illinois.

No informed person doubts that the reasonable waterway program of the State administration would have been put into effect before now but for the intemperate demands of an active clique, who disgusted the people of the State with the entire waterway propaganda.

At one time the Lakes to the Gulf Deep Waterway Association was an influential body. It included in its membership a large number of highly disinterested men, but it fell under the control of the fanatics, the "pork" hunters, the salaried secretaries, and disappeared into oblivion.

The National Rivers and Harbors Congress is in serious danger of traveling the same road.

An organization formed for the purpose of fostering healthy public sentiment and legitimate financial support for water navigation will find a ready response throughout the Nation. But an organization conducted for the purpose of lending nonpartisan and nonpolitical support to "pork-barrel" schemes in which water transportation has the least part and in which a raid upon the National Treasury is the leading motive will soon atrophy.

The National Rivers and Harbors Congress, which meets in Washington to-morrow, will meet a hard test. Its president is an out-and-out "porker." Its salaried secretary is a hired demagogue, who has attempted to deceive the members of the congress to their own and the Nation's injury.

The "pork" representatives in the United States, in Congress, and before the Rivers and Harbors Congress have two planks in their platform.

Plank No. 1 is affirmative. There shall be dishonest river and harbor appropriations.

Plank No. 2 is negative. There shall be no honest appropriations without dishonest appropriations.

It has two battle cries.

In support of dishonest appropriation it attacks all critics as opposed to waterway improvements.

If defeated in its attempts to rob the Treasury, it attacks all legitimate improvements as extravagances.

It did both of these things to Illinois. It will do both of these things throughout the Nation.

The "porkers," fortunately, call attention to the navigation improvements of Europe.

In Europe great improvements have been obtained for water transportation at a minimum of cost. Taxes upon the transportation companies benefited defray the greater part of the expenses.

The river and harbor policy of the United States has been to obtain a minimum of benefit to navigation at a maximum of public expense. Where navigation has been benefited the navigation companies have been given the benefit free. They have become the beneficiaries of special privilege and discrimination. They take an active part in legislation and politics.

There are two main questions before the National Rivers and Harbors Congress. First, will it be used as an instrument to pass the infamous "pork-barrel" bill rejected at the last session of Congress?

Second, can it organize itself into a body conducted for the benefit of navigation instead of being a body conducted to obtain Federal appropriations?

Its unorganized members may expect a hard drive from the gang who believe that the present Congress offers the last chance for large stealing and who are willing to sacrifice all future claims on public sympathy in waterway improvements for this one great prize.

A great part of the sincere workers for improved navigation are entirely taken in by the suave manners of the spoilsmen. They are in danger of being led to their own undoing.

If they participate in the deliberations of the Rivers and Harbors Congress, let them bear in mind that a large element of the Nation is already disgusted with anything going under the name of "river and harbor improvement."

There is another large element which is thoroughly disgusted with the extravagance of Congress, especially this Congress.

A little more greed, a little more "pork," and the Nation will turn away from navigation improvement for a generation to come.

The sincere and systematic workers for navigation improvement must discover that the way to obtain the results they are seeking is by a rigid elimination of "pork" in appropriation bills. This should be done through the medium of the existing organizations if possible. But if the existing organizations remain in control of the Treasury raiders, the sooner they are destroyed the sooner honest river and harbor improvements will come.

The Tribune speaks to over 300,000 daily readers. Its advice is valuable.

From New York comes this editorial utterance, which went to nearly a million subscribers of another high-class educational medium that in like manner hits hard at fakes and frauds:

[From Collier's, December 5, 1914.]

STILL HUNGRY FOR "PORK."

The staves and hoops are ready for the new river and harbor "pork barrel" which the backers of the discredited old method of appropriating Government money for waterways hope to shove through Congress this winter. Undismayed by the smashing a few weeks ago of the $53,000,000 barrel—for which a lump sum of $20,000,000, to be used at the discretion of the War Department's engineers, was substituted—distinguished "pork" getters and their friends are determined to obtain an appropriation of approximately $45,000,000. They are going into the fight with the same arguments that have been used ever since the barrel was the size of a tomato can. For instance, the officials of the National River and Harbor Congress, in their call for an annual meeting to be held in Washington next week, characterize the condemnation heaped upon the present system as "a declaration of war on the whole policy of waterway improvement." Some of the members of the River and Harbor Congress may believe that statement; nobody else will. The people are more than willing to spend their money to facilitate water transportation, but are tired of seeing millions wasted on unusuable creeks, rivers, and inlets. And the sooner the advocates of the pork-barrel system abandon it and insist upon the enactment of a law placing the river and harbor problem in the hands of a national commission, thereby removing it as far as possible from the reach of bartering politicians, the better it will be for all of us.

I could quote from other high-standard publications to the same effect, but now desire to present facts that every Member of Congress should examine for himself before voting away Government moneys for another scandalous measure.

On December 8 President Wilson said to Congress and to the country:

PRESIDENT WILSON ON NATIONAL ECONOMY.

It is not expenditure, but extravagance, that we should care being criticized for; not paying for the legitimate enterprises and undertakings of a great Government, whose people command what it should do, but adding what will benefit only a few or pouring money out for what need not have been undertaken at all or might have been postponed or better and more economically conceived and carried out. The Nation is not niggardly; it is very generous. It will chide us only if we forget for whom we pay money out and whose money it is we pay. These are large and general standards, but they are not very difficult of application to particular cases.

If a business man found his expenses in any branch of the business increasing out of all proportion to the returns, he would drive from his employ those who persist in wasteful extravagance.

No record of inefficiency in the entire Government service can equal that which greets us from a casual study of appropriations for rivers and harbors. In private business a general house cleaning would follow such an exposition. Why, then, should we as public servants, representing the interests of the people who pay the tax, adopt any different rule?

The history of a phenomenal decrease in navigation on inland waters, apart from traffic on the Great Lakes, is startling in character, but that decrease has been accompanied by reckless, wasteful expenditures that in recent years are being diverted into land reclamation, water power, and other schemes for private interests, as I have attempted to show in the past, and shall continue to present to those who make the appropriations.

The following statement, taken from Army engineers' reports, contains food for thought when we realize that a war tax in times of peace is not caused by European troubles but by inexcusable waste and inefficient management of our own affairs.

River and harbor appropriations, 1875–1914.

1875	$5,218,000.00
1876	6,643,517.50
1877	5,015,000.00
1878	None made.

1881	8,951,500.00
1882	11,441,300.00
1883	18,738,875.00
1884	None made.
1885	13,949,200.00
1886	None made.
1887	14,473,900.00
1888	None made.

1894	14,166,153.00
1895	20,043,180.00
1896	11,462,115.00
1897	16,244,147.00
1898	20,832,412.91
1899	14,627,449.56

1903	32,540,199.50
1904	20,233,150.00
1905	10,872,200.00
1906	28,726,007.21
1907	17,252,052.04
1908	43,500,813.00
1909	18,092,945.00
1910	29,196,264.00
1911	49,380,541.50
1912	40,558,620.50
1913	51,115,889.00
1914	26,990,000.00

The force of the above table will be gained by comparisons. Taking biennial appropriations, in order to meet the former practice, we find—

1883, 1884	$18,738,875
1893, 1894	36,134,371
1903, 1904	52,773,349
1913, 1914	78,105,889

A diminishing river traffic and a 400 per cent increase in appropriations in 30 years are facts that deserve serious consideration.

We should remember also that a reduction in the 1914 appropriation was brought about after widespread public protest had been dinned into the ears of Congress, coming as it did from the press throughout the country. The river and harbor bill of 1914, including new projects and sundry civil items, reached the astounding sum of $93,000,000, a great part of which was waste. Notwithstanding the strenuous fight and secret back fire conducted by the rivers and harbors lobby during last session the barrel was smashed in the Senate and a $20,000,000 fund was placed in the hands of the Army engineers for emergency work in addition to $6,990,000 appropriated by the sundry civil bill.

THE LOBBY DEMANDS ANOTHER $50,000,000.

Again the lobby has met and by resolution last week arrogantly demands of Congress another $50,000,000. War taxes, national financial embarrassment, nothing weighs with the Treasury raiders, and I desire to show briefly on what projects a great part of the last $53,000,000 barrel, and presumably the new bill, would be wasted.

Senator TILLMAN called the bill a "humbug and steal" many years ago, when the principle was the same but the amount of loot was far less. Yet never before has the lobby audaciously demanded a $50,000,000 direct tax in order to float its barrel. That remained for the present administration to face. Avoided during the last session it devolved upon a handful of high-minded, courageous men in the Senate to save the country $66,000,000 by their defeat of that waterway fraud. All honor to them and to a fearless press that became aroused and supported the fight.

I desire to discuss some projects frankly and impersonally, and for those who care to pursue their own investigation on the subject I ask attention to speeches relating to different phases of the 1914 bill, found in the RECORD for April 10, June 3, June 8, June 19, and October 8, together with many illuminating discussions in the Senate last session. It is a large subject to try and cover, but the enormous amount of annual loot taken from the Treasury, together with the acknowledged stultifying influences of the barrel, justifies a careful scrutiny by every Representative into scores of indefensible items that have made up the larger part of annual waterway bills.

I desire to particularly discuss one project that has been recommended by Army engineers for immediate construction and received a preliminary appropriation in the last bill, a project so vicious and scandalous in character that the country has reason to demand a full explanation for such recommendation. Possibly an attempt will be made to railroad the project through Congress at this session or commit us to a vicious policy, and as only a few minutes will be given by the committee to the discussion of any one item when the bill is before us the present time affords my only means of setting forth the true character of this project in advance of the bill's passage.

WHAT THE BILL MEANS.

Vote for such bills if you will, but vote understanding they are spurious waterway bills largely devoted to private water-power, land-reclamation, and other schemes, behind which are grouped dredgers, contractors, land interests, certain railways, and the Water Power Trust. I have shown the direct connection of many interests in my remarks in the RECORD for October 8, but desire to present other irrefutable evidence to show additional influences behind this proposed barrel and to point out a few vicious projects it has contained in the past and is expected to contain before it passes both Houses.

Army engineers have been quoted to us repeatedly in support of vicious, worthless projects. They are required to approve every project in order to prevent the cupidity of Congressmen from walking off with too large loot barrels. We have been repeatedly informed that Army engineers are the watchdogs of the Treasury, and their sensibilities have been injured, according to common report, because of criticism leveled against the "barrel." I believe the engineers, as a class, are honorable and able men, and do not wish to do any of them injustice; but am convinced, I am about to discuss one of the worst cases of Government loot ever attempted under the guise of "navigation"—with the engineers' indorsement.

ENGINEERS URGE A PARTICULARLY BAD PROJECT.

If this project is once begun it will open the door immediately to Government expenditures running into hundreds of millions of dollars to be expended for private special interests. Never before has the disguise been completely thrown off nor have Army engineers surrendered unconditionally to powerful political interests, so far as my knowledge goes. Heretofore they have made a pretense of opposing "humbugs and steals," but they now recommend immediate allowance of a gigantic fraud—war taxes or no war taxes. This is vigorous language, but I hope it may arouse Members to the true character of vicious waterway legislation which the people are called upon to pay for by a direct war tax.

The careful attention of every Member is invited to Document No. 20 of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, Sixty-third Congress, relating to the Tennessee River between Browns Island and the railroad bridge below the city of Florence, Ala.—Muscle Shoals. The document contains 84 pages and several maps that should be carefully examined by those who are being urged to vote for waterway projects on the ground that they have received the approval of Army engineers.

Mr. NELSON. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. FREAR. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. What river is this?

Mr. FREAR. The Tennessee River, in the State of Alabama.

WHAT IS BEHIND AN EIGHTEEN MILLION FRAUD?

The 1914 bill contained a preliminary $150,000 appropriation for this item. On Saturday, December 12, another hearing before the House committee was held on this same project, and I quote a paragraph from the press account of that hearing:

Members of the Rivers and Harbors Committee queried the witnesses as to whether they believed the railroads were back of the movement to oppose the development of navigation at Muscle Shoals. The witnesses said they felt that the railroads were strongly opposed to such development.

What was the purpose of asking such foolish questions concerning a proposed filching from the Treasury of $18,701,000 with which to finance a water-power company? Did any member of the committee demand the names of the powerful interests that are forcing this high-handed proposal through Congress?

AN $18,000,000 PRESENT TO THE TRUST.

Heretofore projects, however wasteful or ridiculous in character they may appear to be, have offered some pretense of being intended for navigation. Muscle Shoals, new project recommended by the Army engineers, to be begun by January 1, 1915, and to be completed by 1920, calls for $18,701,000 to finance a water-power proposition for the Alabama Power Co. that already controls all the power along the Tennessee and Coosa Rivers.

Pursuant to the proposal of Army engineers, this $18,701,000 is to be expended at once, and the money is to be spent in building dams, locks, and power plant for the Muscle Shoals Hydroelectric Power Co., a branch of the Alabama Power Trust. This Government, with the approval and recommendation of its own Army engineers, according to their report, is about to help build a water-power plant for the Alabama Power Co. at a cost of $18,701,000, and to give a lease for 100 years to this Water Power Trust. Holding the bag, financially speaking, the Government tries to get back $8,376,000 of the amount, during the course of a hundred years. The remaining $10,325,000, however, is to be given over as a Christmas present.

To be fair in the statements of facts, I will say that $8,575,000 is ostensibly for navigation, but through a pretense is as hypocritical in character as the offer for public bids between a straw man and a Water Power Trust.

As Document No. 20, throughout its whole astonishing text of 84 pages, does not give a solitary fact from which to determine why $8,575,000 is to be spent for navigation, I have undertaken some investigation of the subject.

Army engineers, who were educated by the Government and have ever since been its confidential paid advisers, have determined that of the $18,701,000 to be expended for water power mathematical exactness requires that a contract with the Water Power Trust should be so apportioned that our Government will pay $8,575,000 of the amount and charge it up to a profit and loss account of "navigation," and $1,750,000 additional for "easements."

FARCICAL RIVER TRAFFIC.

In a published statement Senator BURTON mercilessly dissects scores of projects contained in the 1914 "pork barrel." Turning his attention to Muscle Shoals, Senator BURTON's article says:

For the Muscle Shoals improvements on the Tennessee River, about 150 miles below the Chattanooga, the appropriations to-day have been $3,191,726. Commerce through this canal in 1912 was 5,520 tons of all types. Each year shows a decrease in traffic. The commerce through this canal in 1906 amounted to 26,878 tons, in 1909 it was 17,353 tons, and in 1911 it was 8,962 tons. For the last fiscal year it cost $48,292 to operate and maintain this canal. Interest on the investment at 3 per cent was $95,751.78. Including interest and cost of maintenance the Government last year spent $26.09 for every ton of freight of all classes going through the Muscle Shoals Canal.

Mr. NELSON. Will the gentleman permit an inquiry?

Mr. FREAR. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. What is the cause of the decline after the expenditure of these funds?

Mr. FREAR. Competition due to railroads that have gone into that country very largely, according to the reports.

Mr. NELSON. Will the gentleman permit another question?

Mr. FREAR. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. Do they expect in some way to reverse that competition? How do they expect to get it back?

Mr. FREAR. If the gentleman will listen to me for a moment, I will give him a statement of the condition of affairs that is in reply to that very question. It is interesting, if not instructive.

The Army engineers have recommended an expenditure of $3,191,726 to secure 5,520 tons of freight. But it does not tell the whole story. On page 2510 of the Engineer's Report for 1913 appears the character of the 5,520 tons, which cost the Government over $140,000 for 1912. Therein it appears 2,473 tons were fertilizer, floatable logs, or timber, leaving a balance of 3,047 tons of miscellaneous freight, including coal, grain, and hay.

A GOVERNMENT EXPENSE OF $26 PER TON FOR FERTILIZER.

These figures are taken from the Army Engineers' Report, which report the same Army engineers prepared prior to making their recommendations contained in Document No. 20. Yet with facts staring them in the face from their own reports, proving that after an expenditure of $3,191,726 commerce of Muscle Shoals diminished from 26,878 tons in 1906 to 5,520 tons in 1912, with further facts disclosed by their own reports showing that practically half of this insignificant traffic is composed of fertilizer or floatable material and the balance of miscellaneous freight, with all this array of facts to condemn incompetence responsible for a waste of $3,191,726 and an annual Government cost of $26 a ton for putting fertilizer through the Muscle Shoals locks—I say, with all this record of its own poor judgment spread before its gaze from its own official records, the Army board now recommends an immediate expenditure by the Government of $8,575,000 more for the accommodation of this 5,520 tons of fertilizer and other cheap freight.

SCANDALOUS WATER-POWER PROJECTS.

More scandalous, it recommends immediate enactment into law of an additional advancement of over $10,000,000 more with which the Government is directed to build a water-power plant for the Water Power Trust, extending a trust franchise for 100 years and giving exclusive grasp to a monopoly that already controls all other water powers in Alabama.

Have I made this much plain? If so, it is not the whole case, because the report demonstrates this Government has been persuaded by its engineers to dump millions into the Coosa River, ostensibly for navigation, but for the Alabama Power Co. monopoly as is shown by pages 82, 83, and 84 of the report contained in Document No. 20.

Mr. MOON. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. FREAR. Certainly.

Mr. MOON. I would like for the gentleman to state his figures as to the traffic in tons on the Tennessee River.

Mr. FREAR. At Muscle Shoals it is 5,520 tons.

Mr. MOON. What was the tonnage of the entire river last year; does the gentleman know?

Mr. FREAR. That is all that is given by the engineers for that place.

Mr. MOON. I want to inform the gentleman the tonnage was about 1,300,000 tons, to the value of about $13,000,000.

Mr. FREAR. In reply to that let me say to the gentleman I have given a great deal of attention to the method of preparation of engineers' statistics. I can convince him or any other man, I believe, in a short time that but very little reliance is sometimes to be placed upon the estimate received from them and from their own admission at times.

Mr. MOON. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him this: If there is no reliance to be placed upon the reports of engineers gathered over the United States along the rivers as to the traffic, where can we look and to whom for such facts?

Mr. FREAR. I wish the gentleman would listen to me for a few moments, and I will endeavor to enlighten him as to my own views of that and say that they have arrived at this exact measurement because the freight was carried through the lock and an exact determination made. I am not criticizing their efforts, but traffic statistics should be carefully examined from their own admissions.

Mr. MOON. The gentleman does not include, then, any tonnage that passes along other parts of the river that does not go through Muscle Shoals?

Mr. FREAR. I will say this, the Army engineers show that 5,500 tons have gone through this lock. That is all they show at this point.

Mr. MOON. Does the gentleman know a commission on waterways of the United States, composed of six Senators and six Representatives, have reported that the Tennessee River had maintained its tonnage as the fourth river in the United States?

Mr. FREAR. I am glad the gentleman said that, because if he had been listening to me he would have learned that inside the period of six years, according to the Army engineers themselves, the traffic on that river has decreased from 26,000 tons to 5,500 tons. Beyond that, the chairman of that great waterways committee, the best acknowledged expert in the United States, is the gentleman from whom I have been quoting.

Mr. MOON. The report was signed by that gentleman and shows for itself. As a matter of fact, it does not show any such figures, because in a hearing before the Rivers and Harbors Committee only a few days ago they are shown to be thoroughly erroneous.

Mr. BRYAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. Yes.

My BRYAN. The gentleman spoke a while ago about the Alabama water-power trust.

Mr. FREAR. Yes.

Mr. BRYAN. Has the gentleman investigated, and is it not a fact that the Alabama corporation is principally foreign owned?

Mr. FREAR. It is part of the General Electric. It is in the general trust.

Mr. BRYAN. And owned by Canadian owners, very largely, is it not?

Mr. FREAR. I am not sure, but it is part of the General Electric Trust.

A GOVERNMENT EXPENSE OF $100 PER TON FOR FERTILIZER—SAME STREAM.

We learn that after an investment of $3,191,726 only 5,520 tons of fertilizer is shipped annualy at a cost to the Government of $26 per ton. It is equally illuminating to learn that after spending $8,575,000 more on Muscle Shoals, or $11,766,726 in all "for navigation," the average cost to the Government for conveying this fertilizer through Muscle Shoals will be approximately $100 per ton, based on a 5 per cent charge for interest, maintenance, and depreciation.

By a singular coincidence this water traffic rate is estimated to be the approximate cost to the Government per ton on the Missouri when present expenditures of $27,000,000 shall have been completed.

By a further coincidence decrease in traffic quoted on the Muscle Shoals, Missouri, and lower Mississippi Rivers, after all this prodigious shower of gold into these trafficless streams, has been an approximate 80 per cent loss in every case, according to the engineers' reports.

So much for Army engineers who control Government purse strings for statesmen who are expected to approve indefensible recommendations.

Is this statement a slander on the judgment or reliability of Army engineers? We have been given repeated shocks when discussing the 25 projects for North Carolina; streams dry eight months in the year in Florida; of artesian well proposals for the $10,000,000 Trinity River; of the $20,000,000 future expenditures for a bankrupt 13-mile canal. All of these schemes have weakened public confidence in recommendations of Army engineers. Let us study the Muscle Shoals $18,701,000 project.

CHIEF KINGMAN SAYS IT IS A GOOD THING.

Quoting briefly from the report on Muscle Shoals, signed by Dan C. Kingman, Chief of Engineers, Document No. 20, pages 1 and 2, we find:

The cost of providing 6-foot navigation under a plan contemplating a water-power development satisfactory to this company is estimated by the special board at $18,701,000. Of this approximately $8,575,000 may properly represent the value of the proposed improvement to navigation, the remainder being chargeable to power development and to be reimbursed to the United States with interest under a definite schedule of payments, the first to be a cash payment of $3,000,000 upon the completion of the structures at site No. 2, to be followed by 99 annual cash payments in amounts which, with the first payment, will return the entire part of the cost chargeable to power development with compound interest at 3 per cent. In addition the company proposes to pay each year an amount equivalent to 35 cents per horsepower of installed capacity, beginning as soon as this exceeds 200,000 horsepower, and in any case not later than 20 years after first power is developed. The lease period proposed is 100 years.

THE $18,701,000 GIFT SHOULD NOT BE DELAYED.

The Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors has carefully considered this plan and is in general accord with the views and recommendations of the special board, though believing that a due regard of public interests requires that some equitable provision should be made whereby the United States may terminate the lease at any time after the end of 50 years in case it should become apparent that such action is desirable. With this provision the board is of opinion that it is advisable for the United States to adopt the project outlined by the special board for combined navigation improvement and power development on the Tennessee River at Muscle Shoals, Ala., in cooperation with the Muscle Shoals Hydroelectric Power Co., at a total estimated cost of $18,701,000 under the conditions specified by the special board. The first appropriation should provide at least $1,000,000 in cash and contract authorization for the balance, with a view to completion of the work in five years. In case Congress does not adopt the project at once the board recommends an appropriation of $150,000 to provide for completion of the detailed surveys, foundation borings, and preparation of plans, so that there need be no unnecessary delay in active prosecution of the work whenever it is authorized.

THE FIRST VERY LARGE PRIVATE JOB RECOMMENDED.

After due consideration of the above-mentioned reports I concur with the views of the special board and the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors. Attention is particularly invited to the general comments made by the latter board in the final paragraph of its report relative to the economic questions involved in the financing of joint navigation and water-power developments, of which the one herein proposed is the first to be recommended on a very large scale.

DAN C. KINGMAN,
Chief of Engineers, United States Army.

Hon. S. M. SPARKMAN,
Chairman Committee on Rivers and Harbors,
House of Representatives.

Possibly it may be said the Chief Engineer does not reflect the views of the Army board, to which fulsome praise has been awarded by those who have projects awaiting favorable action by this supreme court of Army engineers. That the court appears to be of one mind is apparent from Document 20, which is signed by several distinguished officials.

FINANCING A MONOPOLY.

On page 5, paragraph 12, the board justifies its efforts to create a water-power monopoly at the expense of Uncle Sam, instead of permitting independent plants to supply legitimate demands, as follows:

The Muscle Shoals Hydroelectric Power Co. has interests in other power developments on the Tallapoosa, the Coosa, and the Little River. Connecting these developments with the proposed Muscle Shoals development will make up deficiency in power at the latter place during seasons of low water. This fact alone enables the power company to plan for an ultimate installation at Muscle Shoals of 680,000 horsepower measured at the switchboard. The special board states that such a combination of power plants, if suitably regulated by State or Nation, will be of far greater public benefit than a number of independent power plants with incomplete development of each plant.

The cat is out of the bag, and the straw-man bidder exists gracefully.

On page 6, paragraph 18, occurs an X-ray view into the peculiar understanding of official responsibility possessed by this board and the complete dominance of judgment by interests antagonistic to the public welfare and helpless millions who are paying a war tax to cover past extravagance. I quote:

The Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors has carefully considered this plan and is in general accord with the views and recommendations of the special board. The project contemplates primarily the conservation of one of the great natural resources of the Nation by the development of power in large amount and incidentally the improvement for navigation throughout the year of a reach of about 82 miles of the Tennessee River. An expenditure by the United States of $18,701,000 within a period of five years is contemplated. Of this total, $8,575,000 is estimated as the cost of the portion of the work which properly may be considered as an improvement of navigation.

To this should be added another gift of $1,750,000 for power purposes, as I shall later show.

Eight million five hundred and seventy-five thousand dollars is to be added to the $3,191,000 already spent on this project, which has lost 80 per cent of its traffic within eight years, and amounts to a grand total at this point of 5,520 tons, largely of fertilizer. What is this vast amount of money to be spent for?

Mr. MOON. The gentleman understands we are not agreeing that is true?

Mr. FREAR. Of course the gentleman has the privilege of answering in his own time. Besides that $8,575,000 spent for navigation, $1,750,000 is recommended by the Army engineers for water easements for this water-power company, and that is after a minority report of protest was filed by one engineer. I must read it in order to give you the facts to show how even an Army engineer felt it improper to throw away Government money in this way, notwithstanding he consented to the $8,750,000 for navigation for this insignificant tonnage.

Mr. MOON. May I ask the gentleman how much money it would take to put in repair the United States canal that now runs along Muscle Shoals and through which the tonnage must now go?

Mr. FREAR. I am going to read from the report the conditions given in the documents, and the gentleman will understand that my time is limited, unless I can be yielded more time.

Mr. MOON. I want to suggest to the gentleman the cost of repairs there will amount to nearly as much money as it will take to put locks and dams in that place, and the power company proposes to turn back to the Government any money expended except that expended for navigation purposes.

Mr. FREAR. We will discuss what the power company proposes to do before we get through, because I have the official document in which they make the proposal and the cause of the straw bid at that time.

Here is the minority report of the engineer.

Let me point out explicitly one or more features of this remarkable report, the first of the kind, according to its own statement, ever presented, by calling attention to a dissenting report of Lieut. Col. Riché, who says, on page 57, paragraph 24:

In conclusion, I recommend that all lands and easements needed for this improvement be required to be donated to the United States, and do not fear that such delay as this may cause will result in loss to the United States or will prevent the combined improvement of Muscle Shoals for adequate navigation and maximum power developments, even if the loss of the present offer of the Muscle Shoals Hydro-Electric Power Co. should result. In other respects, except where herein stated to the contrary, I concur in the report signed by the other members of the board.

He refuses to consent to an expenditure of $1,750,000 for easements for the water-power company, because he can find no justification. That is an Army engineer.

Mr. MOON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. If the gentleman will give me further time, I will do so.

Mr. MOON. I shall be glad to see you get all the time you want. I ask you if that is the minority and not the majority report?

Mr. FREAR. I will give you the majority report now, reading from page 6. This is a report of the board. Just listen to this, please:

THE BOARD REPUDIATES AN "INNOVATION."

Riché dissented from buying up lands and easements for the purpose of creating this water power. The whole purpose is disclosed by the Board of Engineers when, on page 6, paragraph 16, the minority report of Lieut. Col. Riché is overruled, as follows:

One member of the special board submitted a minority report, advocating the view that by reason of special benefits enjoyed by local interests they should be required to furnish to the United States free of cost all necessary lands and flowage rights, estimated to cost about $1,750,000. The majority of the special board, while in general sympathy with the adoption of such a policy on river and harbor work, considered it inadvisable to make the innovation in this case, as it would doubtless lead to considerable delay and would be apt to defeat the present opportunity to make this improvement on favorable terms."

This is signed by the board.

For whom? For the water-power company.

And would be apt to defeat the present opportunity to make this improvement on favorable terms.

To whom? To the water-power company, with only a straw man to bid against it.

Mr. MOON. That is your statement about it.

Mr. FREAR. Can a man come to any different conclusion after reading the engineer's report?

Mr. MOON. You ask a question and answer it, and put it in the mouth of the engineers. They do not make it at all.

Mr. FREAR. I say that this is a most novel report. The engineers themselves say so.

Mr. MOON. You should not put it in the mouths of the engineers to say that it is a scandalous report.

Mr. FREAR. No; I do not wish to be so understood. The gentleman can interrupt. I have admiration for his ability and interest in this project. I realize it comes home. I am not speaking from any personal feeling except I do not like to see $18,000,000 thrown away by the Government for a water-power company. [Applause.]

FLOATING SCHEMES, NOT BOATS.

What must be the logical conclusions drawn from such proposals by our guardians of creeks and rivulets and of our collective legislative conscience. The Alabama Power Trust is about to take over Muscle Shoals and the Government is about to spend $18,701,000 to float the scheme. That is the only thing that can ever be floated at Muscle Shoals, and that is the only kind of commerce involved in the tremendous expenditure proposed by the Army board.

Returning to document 20, we find this recommendation by the Board of Engineers, on page 8, paragraph 24:

The board therefore reports that in its opinion it is advisable for the United States to adopt the project recommended by the special board for combined navigation improvement and power development on the Tennessee River at Muscle Shoals, Ala., in cooperation with the Muscle Shoals Hydroelectric Power Co., at total estimated cost of $18,701,000, under the conditions specified by the special board and with the additional provisions suggested above for possible recall of the franchise after the lapse of 50 years. The first appropriation should provide at least $1,000,000 in cash and contract authorization for the balance, with a view to completion of the work in five years.

When the 1914 river and harbor bill of $76,000,000—counting new projects—was presented to the House, the distinguished chairman of the Rivers and Harbors Committee made use of this remarkable language:

BILLIONS OF DOLLARS DEMANDED BY WHOM?

But what of the cost? That is another pertinent question.

If we enter upon other works having no direct or necessary relation to navigation there is no telling where we will land. Why, there are propositions advanced, some of them now before Congress, advocated and supported by men of national repute, the adoption and carrying out of which would cost billions of dollars.

We have on the books to-day, including those taken on in this bill, about $300,000,000 of projects, $150,000,000, in round figures, or half of it, being for four rivers—the Mississippi, the Ohio, the Missouri, and the East River in New York, the last named, however, only requiring about $13,000,000 to complete. The work on these four streams, if the plans laid down by the engineers are followed, is to extend over a period ranging from 8 to 25 years; perhaps a little beyond that. The other $150,000,000 will likely be required during the next 8 years; that is, if the plans of the engineers are carried out. Of course there will be other projects; but we must remember that there are yet other projects still on hand and yet to be considered. There were before our committee about $50,000,000 of projects submitted within the past two years besides the $38,000,000 we have adopted in this bill. I do not know that all of those will meet with favorable consideration in the future; the chances are they will not; but if they should all be adopted, the amount, including those adopted or recommended in this bill, will reach $350,000,000.

In that connection I call special attention to the following sentence I have quoted from Chairman SPARKMAN's speech:

Why, there are propositions advanced, some of them now before Congress, advocated and supported by men of national repute, the adoption and carrying out of which would cost billions of dollars.

What projects did he refer to? Can any project for waterways come before Congress without the approval of Army engineers? The chairman should give to the House all particulars regarding water-power projects which in the aggregate, presumably, will take billions of dollars to finance. We further ask, Who are the men of national repute standing behind these extravagant projects? Are they standing behind the Muscle Shoals project? If so, who are they?

BILLIONS OF DOLLARS FOR WATER-POWER INTERESTS.

No intelligent man will question the proposition that if our Government is to finance all the water-power propositions that have been optioned by the General Electric Power Trust, including its subsidiary, the Alabama Power Light & Water Co., and innumerable deputy subsidiaries like the Muscle Shoals Hydroelectric Co., that billions of dollars may be abstracted from the Federal Treasury to finance these projects.

Aside from political pull exercised by men behind the Muscle Shoals proposition, as suggested by the remark of the chairman of the Rivers and Harbors Committee, why should not the Government, with equal propriety, finance every water-power project from New England to the Pacific coast?

And why not extend the field of Government gifts to all corporate bodies, great and small, that have some place in our industrial system?

Let the people who pay the income tax and the war tax and other taxes, directly or indirectly, understand that this is proposed to be a Government to support privilege and they will then awaken to the danger of this pretended waterway improvement recommended by Army engineers.

It hardly seems necessary to quote further from this illuminating 84-page water-project report, and in ascertaining responsibility I do not overlook letters of instruction from the Rivers and Harbors Committee dated June 14, 1910, and February 24, 1914, respectively. The character of the Engineers' report and its effort to give to a water-power trust $8,575,000 for fake navigation can not be explained by any action of the Rivers and Harbors Committee, however objectionable such action of that committee may appear to many Members.

Mr. COX. How much is that dam going to cost?

Mr. FREAR. Eighteen million seven hundred and one thousand dollars is the project. I have forgotten how many there were.

Mr. MOON. There are two of them. The gentleman does not recollect about it.

Mr. FREAR. Only $18,701,000 for two dams. Read the document. I do not ask you to take my interpretation as to what it contains.

HIGH FINANCING BY THE GOVERNMENT.

In order that Congress may have some further light on the way it has been hoodwinked into throwing away money on Alabama water-power projects I quote extracts from pages 82, 83, and 84 of this same document 20:

While it can not be said at this time whether the operation of the proposed plants on the Coosa River will or will not increase the amount of power which can be commercially generated at Muscle Shoals, these plants will be considered here in a general way to show the ultimate relation between the Coosa system and the Muscle Shoals-Tallapoosa system.

The following plants are proposed on the Coosa: Lock 12 (now under construction), Lock 7, Lock 14, Lock 15, and Lock 18. In the place of Lock 14 and Lock 15 we proposed to raise the Lock 18 dam to a height which will back the water up to Duncans Riffle and to build a dam at Duncans Riffle which will back the water up to Lock 12. The total amount of fall between the pool level of Lock 12 and the tail-water of Lock 18 is 230 feet; the distance between them is 32.8 miles. Diagrams Nos. A–3457, A–3458, and A–3459 show the amount of power available at these sites. The pools above these dams are of no great extent, being 5,200, 3,500, and 3,600 acres in extent above Lock 12, Duncans Riffle, and Lock 18, respectively. These pools are of sufficient area for storage of water during fluctuations covering several days, but will be of little benefit in storing water for extended periods.

The Lock 18 site has been studied in detail and subsurface conditions have been investigated by diamond drilling. It is an admirable site, foundations are good, quantities of masonry required being comparatively low, and construction materials being near at hand.

No study has been made of the Lock 7 site.

Here is where the engineers do a stroke for navigation when they demand a 150-foot dam at Cartersville. Think of this proposal for Etowah Creek when they say:

150-FOOT HIGH FINANCING.

The Army engineers propose to build a dam and reservoir on the Etowah River at Cartersville, Ga., which will add an immense amount to the primary power of the plants on the Coosa. The project will consist of a dam 150 feet high, impounding 30,000,000,000 cubic feet of water. The object of this reservoir is primarily to increase the flow of water in Alabama River below Montgomery for the aid of navigation, the available draft to be used to amplify the low flow being variously estimated from 4,000 to 5,000 second-feet. The dam site is 3 miles above Cartersville and the entire reservoir is in Georgia. Surveys of reservoir have been made by the Army engineers, and their findings are in a report on the Coosa River prepared by Maj. Ferguson, which has not been published. The dam site is now owned by the Georgia Railway, Light & Power Co., who own an amount of land within the reservoir.

A MYSTERY EXPLAINED.

I quote from my remarks on the Coosa River proposition, appearing on page 7073 of the RECORD, made at the time the last rivers and harbors bill was before this House. Some of the mystery surrounding that project which was incomprehensible six months ago is as clear as the noonday sun when the X-ray of Document 20 is placed in proper position.

CANALIZATION NIGHTMARES.

Another mythical scheme is the Coosa River, Ga., which only gets $65,000, page 23 of the bill. Nothing startling appears in this item until we read the engineer's report and learn that a project for the canalization of this river started in 1890, 24 years ago, was modified in 1892, and provides for 23 locks and dams of the Coosa River, Ga., at an estimated cost of $5,106,422. By June 30, 1909, the intelligent engineers' office had expended $401,372 and had only 4 per cent of the project completed. This was doing fairly well for the engineers' office, which had been so many years on the job. Like a thrifty storekeeper, the engineer took an accounting of 19 years' progress, and in 1909 the waiting public was informed by his report:

"On account of the numerous rapids, this part of the river has never been navigable. As yet (after 19 years) no benefit has been derived from this improvement, and its value is entirely dependent on the completion of the entire system."

Amount required for the completion of the existing project is $6,059,913. This statement, issued 19 years after the project had been started, shows an expenditure of $401,372 and a jump in estimates of $953,481. And after 19 years the stream was as worthless as ever. Taking up the intelligent Engineers' Report for 1913 I find, on page 2134, that—

"a small commerce in the rafting of logs and square timber can only be carried on when the river is about 12 feet above low water, and no reliable estimate of its value can be ascertained."

And this is the progress made in 24 years with a worthless project. Congress appropriates $65,000 in 1914, although the engineer says, page 2133:

"No appropriation is recommended for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915."

At the rate of progress made on the Coosa River we may reasonably expect navigation will be opened up by the year 2014, provided the engineers do not disgust Congress with this stupid, reckless, senseless, wasteful proposition. It will take a century to complete, and it will be as valuable as a toy balloon when the $6,000,000—or, possibly, $10,000,000—has been sunk in the Coosa River. In addressing ourselves to the indictment of criminal incompetence in the handling of this project we may well ask, Who is to blame?

At that time it was strenuously contended this enormous expenditure was for future navigation. The hypocritical mask has been torn off by Document 20, from which I have quoted. Private water powers and not public navigation appear to be involved in this project.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Is it not a fact that many of these engineers that have this infallible judgment have time and time again turned them down and then finally recommended them?

Mr. FREAR. The gentleman has just struck what I am going into.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Has the gentleman ever looked into why these Army engineers change their mind as to the commercial importance of navigability of these rivers after years of opposition to them?

Mr. FREAR. I have prepared an answer for the gentleman. He understands the value, the persuasive value, as it commercially bears on the Trinity River, better than anybody else who spoke on the bill at the last session, and his judgment agrees with mine on the general proposition.

ELEVEN HEAVY GUNS TURN THE ENGINEERS' FLANK.

A bare statement of the Muscle Shoals and other water-power cases may not do exact justice to Army engineers. I have been much impressed with their efforts to do right, and the apparent reason sometimes offered for their surrender to constant pounding by powerful interests.

Take, for instance, the Cumberland River project above Nashville, found in Document No. 10, River and Harbor Committee, Sixty-third Congress, second session. The report covers 140 pages and is worthy of careful study.

In 1882 an experimental canalization scheme to cost $8,500,000 was authorized. It provides for 28 locks and dams, but after building a few locks and spending about $3,000,000, without aid to traffic, the rest of the project was abandoned on the report of the Army Board of Engineers in 1906. Persistent hammering brought a second adverse report from Maj. Harts in 1910, and a third refusal, in response to local demands, was filed by Maj. Burgess on October 29, 1912. All of these reports disapproved of further expenditures on a bad investment.

Then came to notice a "booster" club of Nashville, which proceeded to furnish rainbow statistics of possibilities, as glittering in character as the inconsiderable and rapidly decreasing river traffic would permit the booster conscience to present. Thereupon Maj. Burgess cogitated, modified his report, but while falling in this one-sided battle, the major declared that $4,500,000 must not be expended by the Government unless local communities contributed one-half of that amount. In view of the small and decreasing river traffic shown by the report, after deducting floatable timber, this report is significant of a sudden and inexplainable change of heart. By a surprising coincidence the division engineer adopted the new Burgess report of 1913, conditional upon the localities contributing one-half of the $4,500,000.

THE MILITARY ADVANTAGE OF MASSED FORMATIONS.

After following this interesting reversal of action through the report, it becomes doubly instructive to watch a siege campaign prosecuted against the Army engineers. Two United States Senators and nine Congressmen, with some lesser lights, confronted the Army board on both flank and center, from pages 5 to 38, in an assault to determine why this project, so frequently disapproved, should not be given an official O. K. and $4,500,000 surrendered unconditionally.

The struggle of Col. Black to save his hospital corps before surrendering is related on page 9, when he faces heavy artillery with the remark, "This money belongs to all the people of the United States, and it is perfectly well known that there are many more improvements urgently asked for than there is money to pay for." To clinch his argument he declares:

Now, on the basis of the return by the distribution of fair costs to the whole people of the United States there does not seem to be a return commensurate with an investment of $4,500,000.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. Let me suggest before I answer the gentleman from Tennessee that my proposal is not original with me. It is the proposal of many who see the wickedness of the present system—that a high-grade commission should pass upon this question. We all believe in waterway improvement, and we all believe in improvements for proper navigation. We want to see it done properly. But under the present condition of affairs it is wasteful, as I have shown in other cases, where after an expenditure of $3,000,000 it costs $26 a ton to ship 5,000 tons through the locks, and now they are asking $8,575,000 more for those two locks. Now I will yield.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman stated a moment ago that the change in the report of the engineers in regard to the upper Cumberland was due to the activities of a certain booster club of Nashville. I want to ask the gentleman what authority he has for that statement?

Mr. FREAR. The report of the engineer himself. He says he first formed his judgment—that is, Maj. Burgess—upon the character of the traffic upon that stream, but that he had received the report of the 'Nashville Booster Club'—and he gives the title of the club—and they furnished additional data in regard to the traffic. Based upon that, I understand, he changes his report, but with this modification, that he asks that the local community shall contribute at least one-half. That was the form of the question when the 11 Members of Congress went before the Army engineers to have removed that provision for $2,250,000 conditional local aid.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I want to say to the gentleman, with all respect, that I hope the other statements he has made in the course of his address have been founded more upon fact than his statement that the change of the district engineer with reference to the upper Cumberland was due to the activities of any booster club, or any club, of the city of Nashville. If the gentleman will pardon me for just a moment, I happen to know personally——

Mr. FREAR. I hope the gentleman, if he is going to make a statement, will make it in his own time and not in mine.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I think the gentleman has done the engineers a very gross and grave injustice, and I am sure the gentleman does not want to do that. Mr. Myers, accompanied by the gentleman from Tennessee, Judge HULL, and myself appeared before the board here in Washington, and succeeded in convincing them that a grave injustice had been done to the upper Cumberland River in the report as to the amount of commerce that was carried on from year to year upon that river. Thereupon the matter was referred to the district engineer. He made a careful investigation and later made a report.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I can not yield further.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. FREAR. I feel that I can not yield any further. I have not the time.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin two minutes?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Now will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. Surely.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman made a remark a few minutes ago to the effect that the district engineer had reported a proposition that the States of Tennessee and Kentucky should contribute one-half to the improvement of the upper river. I want to ask the gentleman if in all the history of former projects any project was ever put through Congress where any States were required to pay half of the cost of the improvements?

Mr. FREAR. I do not know what the experience has been except in the last bill. In the case of Taniger Island and other communities that could not do the work themselves, that was done.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. My question was whether or not, with respect to any other river, other States had ever been required to contribute any portion of the expense of improving rivers within their borders?

Mr. FREAR. I can not enumerate them.

Mr. STAFFORD. If my colleague will yield, I could enlighten my good friend from Tennessee. The State of Pennsylvania, for example, was obliged to contribute to the improvement of the Delaware River. The city of Milwaukee was required to contribute to the improvement of the inner harbor.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. In what amount?

Mr. STAFFORD. Something like half a million dollars.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Does the gentleman know that the $500,000 contributed by the city of Milwaukee to the improvement was anything like one-half of the whole amount required?

Mr. STAFFORD. I know that formerly it was frequently the case with regard to rivers and harbors, but that policy has apparently been abandoned by the present leaders.

Mr. BRYAN. The State of Washington, I may say, contributed a very large sum in the improvement of the Washington Canal.

Mr. FREAR. The people of Massachusetts have appropriated more than $9,000,000 for the improvement of Boston Harbor.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That may be true with regard to a river or harbor located in one State, but not in the case of a river flowing through two or more States.

Mr. FREAR. I would be glad to have members of the committee spend the time to take up this report, No. 10, of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors of the Sixty-third Congress, and read on page 55 the report of the Nashville Booster Club, and notice the exhibits they filed and presented to the engineer before he changed his opinion. I am not criticizing him. I do not see how he could have done differently. Think of it. Nine Congressmen and two Senators. And I may say among them are some of the ablest men in this House and some of the ablest men on the other side.

Both the district and division engineers had so declared after a thorough investigation.

That is what Col. Black said on January 28, 1914, before 11 able lawyers, incidentally all United States Senators and Congressmen, who made their convincing argument for $4,500,000.

On February 4, just one week later, the board and Chief of Engineers saw light, pulled down the flag, and all contributions were waived. I do not venture to criticize the right of any delegation or of any number of delegations to boost any project, irrespective of past deliberate and repeated rejections by the engineers. But in exposition of a bad system, let me ask, when 11 able lawyers and concededly influential statesmen appear before the Army board in favor of a local project, bearing the record found in this case, can any reasonable man doubt the necessity of having the Government represented at such hearings or that a high-class independent board should be substituted for the supreme court of Army engineers?

I speak of this case because it is one of many that illustrates a demonstrated weakness of the present system.

Army engineers, however high minded they may be, are subordinates and human, and they have no more chance before an onslaught from 11 heavy howitzer political guns than the proverbial bovine has in fly time.

What a formidable battery for any force of green recruits to face in either House after the project has passed engineers, and what a big stake to fight for, $4,500,000. It is beyond belief that such a miserable makeshift system as we now practice is either legisaltively or economically safe for any nation.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FREAR. Yes; certainly.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Do you understand how nine Congressmen and two Senators could furnish an engineer with the technical information that would give him light on a great proposition like that?

Mr. FREAR. Unquestionably, yes. It is technical information of the same character that was suggested by the gentleman who preceded me [Mr. GILLETT], who was explaining how a person makes a choice from three names that are placed before him on a civil-service certification, and possibly for the same reason.

Mr. CALLAWAY. If he was really making an investigation, and basing his report, as an engineer should, on the commercial importance and navigability of the stream, the information that 9 Congressmen or 90 Congressmen could give him would not be worth anything.

Mr. FREAR. That is a question which the gentleman can answer as well as I can.

A MEMBER. Might they not give some political information?

Mr. FREAR. I assume that such an able body of men—11 of them—and others there present gave all the information they could; and if you will examine the document you will see that practically all of them took part in the discussion, and an able discussion it was.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Has not the gentleman already stated that they went up there on the one proposition—whether the States of Tennessee and Kentucky should contribute?

Mr. FREAR. Yes; that is my understanding of the record.

EIGHTY MILLIONS LARGELY WASTED.

One of the most convincing testimonials to political power relating to waterways is afforded by the Mississippi River land reclamation project.

Over $80,000,000 has been appropriated to date for the lower reach of the Mississippi River below the mouth of the Ohio River. This is a pet project with the organizers of the $50,000,000 lobby, as a brief investigation will show. The traffic on the lower Mississippi River has decreased over 80 per cent in recent years, notwithstanding a steady stream of golden oxygen which we have patiently poured into this waterway cadaver in an endeavor to resuscitate a lost river commerce.

DENUNCIATION FROM THOSE WHO KNOW.

The RECORD of April 10 contains Government statistics on which this traffic loss is based. In the RECORD of October 8 will be found statements of engineers and other corroboration of wasteful expenditures now being made on the Mississippi. The New Orleans Item of September 28, 1914, says definitely:

> We told you a year ago that the feeling of the Nation against the abuses of the "pork barrel" was approaching a climax. We warned you that the country would not allow many more pork barrels to be opened.

Of equal significance is its editorial declaration that—

> The National Rivers and Harbors Congress conducts a national lobby for the "pork-barrel" bill.

Also this piece of interesting information:

> The Mississippi River Levee Association was organized by some railway interests who do not want genuine and permanent stream control, because it threatens competition; by levee board politicians and levee contractors whose jobs and profits depend upon the perpetuation of the stupid and vicious old system.

The river lobby is known from New Orleans to Washington.

In a clean-cut editorial from the Memphis Scimitar this statement occurs:

> The old brutal logic that we must "get some of that Yankee money down here" is no longer appealing. The Mississippi River Commission has been discredited by the people. We must have a new deal and a square deal.

That message comes to Congress from Memphis, and the old plea that they are to get some of that "Yankee money" no longer appeals. It is needless to say such conscientious scruples have no part in the sessions of the rivers and harbors lobby.

"TRAITORS TO THE REPUBLIC."

An extract from the Memphis Press of September 12, 1914, is as hot and sizzling as anything handed out by the rivers and harbors lobby. In part the editorial says:

> We have told our readers on many occasions that the conscience of the Nation was revolting against the "pork barrel." The method of the rivers and harbors bill is indefensible, and the results of that method, pursued through generations, are its own damnation. The would-be perpetrators of the "pork barrel" are the enemies of a comprehensive program, the enemies of real safety, the enemies of revised navigation. It is not going too far to say they are, in effect, "traitors to the Republic."

The foregoing sentiment of able editorial writers of the lower Mississippi Valley, who have seen $80,000,000 of "Yankee money" wasted on the lower Mississippi, is respectfully referred to those distinguished Members of Congress who fail to find any "pork" in the rivers and harbors bill and to the river and harbor $50,000,000 lobby, "the enemy of a comprehensive program."

For detailed appropriations for the Mississippi prior to 1914 I cite page 3391 of the Engineers' Report for 1913, wherein the amount at that time appropriated for the lower Mississippi had reached $77,265,851.

PRESENT RIVER TRAFFIC UNIMPORTANT.

Navigation on the Mississippi River is almost a joke, notwithstanding the Government has spent $80,000,000 on the lower stretch of the river alone. This is evidenced by official reports. In an extract from a resolution passed by the New Orleans delegates to the international conference at Memphis on November 18, 1914, less than a month ago, it is stated:

New Orleans has no rail and water rates available between New Orleans and a single available point of consumption or production, and no water rates, and thus no cooperation of railroads and river and literally no use of the rivers.

After an expenditure of $80,000,000 on the lower Mississippi, is it not a matter of widespread concern to learn that at the only large port on the lower river "literally no use of the river" is to be had?

The following editorial extract from a Memphis paper might naturally be attributed to the Trinity of Texas, the Kissimmee of Florida, or Northeast Creek of North Carolina, where similar conditions exist:

The News-Scimitar printed a story the other day about steamboats that walk. They will soon have to learn to fly to enable them to get over the Memphis Harbor.

That does not seem to afford large dividends for an $80,000,000 outlay. A letter from a man who has studied the Mississippi problem for many years has this to say of the present plan:

MEMPHIS, TENN., October 9, 1914.

Formerly, up to the years 1875 to 1880, there was deep water and no trouble in the whole of our harbor on the river front of Memphis. Now, since the War Department and the United States River Commission has "monkeyed" with our river here, large "cavings off" of the high red clay bluffs on the eastern side of the river, right on the valuable city front, have occurred. Our Riverside Park, losing 62 acres valued at $4,000 per acre, equals $248,000. In addition, now, a large sand-bar island, a very short distance off of the small remainder of our wharf, is about to "choke out" steamer navigation altogether.

L. S. LAKE.

Of equal significance is the following statement of the Commissioner of Corporations as to shipments down the river from St. Louis when he says:

Shipments (in 1906) to the lower Mississippi have fallen to less than 7 per cent of the shipments in 1890.

I can not do better than offer a brief statement from a comprehensive article written by Senator BURTON concerning the 200-mile section of the Mississippi River between the mouth of the Missouri and the mouth of the Ohio, wherein he says of this 200-mile stretch:

We have expended approximately $16,894,000. * * * After $12,000,000 had been expended some eight years ago another board made an official estimate and declared it would cost $20,000,000, or $4,000,000 more than was originally estimated. Now, after $16,894,000 have been spent there, it is estimated that $17,250,000 more will be required to complete the work.

The Government has spent $84,470 per mile on this stretch, and the engineers ask under present estimates $170,970 per mile. Continuing, he says:

In 1887, before expensive improvements were installed, the traffic on this stretch of the river, as measured by shipments entering and leaving St. Louis, was 1,537,562 tons. In 1912 it was 265,720 tons, or one-sixth of the amount in 1887. * * * In 1871, 44 per cent of the freight shipped out of St. Louis went by river. In 1909 that proportion had dropped from 44 to one-half of 1 per cent.

We have expended more money on this stretch of the Mississippi River than the Prussian Government has spent on the whole Rhine, where they carry an average of 45,000,000 tons a year, one hundred and eighty times the traffic of the Mississippi.

Where is the Representative who, outside of a river and harbor lobby, will defend such inexcusable waste of public funds?

Can any criticism of traffic conditions on the lower Mississippi compare with the bare statement of facts?

APPROPRIATIONS JUMP 80 PER CENT IN TWO YEARS.

To show the Mississippi's growth in appropriations I call attention to the fact that the annual lower Mississippi appropriations reached $4,500,000 in 1912. In 1913 the land reclamation lobby's pressure was too great to resist and the appropriation was jumped to $6,000,000. On page 1433 of the Engineers' Report for 1913 it appears that the Mississippi River Commission, so roundly denounced by the southern press, went after Government money in real earnest by asking $7,000,000 in the 1914 bill. Engineers refused to recommend over $6,000,000, but before the bill was pushed through the House committee by the rivers and harbors lobby the amount had been increased to $7,000,000 for the lower Mississippi River, and in order to not be outdone in generous giving the Senate committee added another $1,000,000 just for luck, or $2,000,000 more than was recommended by the Army engineers. This is all a matter of record—an increase of about 80 per cent in wasteful appropriations in two years for a traffic that has fallen 80 per cent. The total appropriations carried for the Mississippi River in the 1914 bill was $10,500,000, of which $9,000,000 was for the Mississippi River below St. Louis. What powerful influences are behind this extravagant project? When questioned on the subject by other Senators the president of the Rivers and Harbors Congress stated in another legislative body on September 14, 1914:

RAILROADS DEMANDING APPROPRIATIONS.

I beg to say that the railroads of the Mississippi have aided materially in a propaganda for the protection of the land of that valley from overflow. In the congressional district in Mississippi represented by Mr. HUMPHREYS there are upward of 1,000 miles of railroad belonging to one system—the Illinois Central. It costs money to carry on that kind of a campaign, showing the people of the United States the facts, and the railroads, being as great sufferers as any persons or corporations in the valley, have contributed in proportion to their property interests to carry on that educational propaganda.

How much?

RAILROAD CONTRIBUTIONS.

On June 3, on pages 10591 to 10599 of the RECORD, appear my remarks before the House wherein I pointed out secret efforts to influence Congress on rivers and harbors bills from subscriptions of money to the use of threats against business men. At that time I presented the following subscriptions, running for five years, taken from what purported to be a photographic copy of a typewritten statement made by Col. John A. Fox, secretary and manager of the Mississippi Levee Association:

It has been estimated that a minimum fund of $30,000 per annum is necessary for this organization to do its work in a complete and thorough manner, and already a considerable portion of this sum has been pledged annually for five years (of $150,000 in all). The subscriptions are as follows:

Southern Railway Co	$1,000
Mobile & Ohio R. R	1,000
Frisco R. R	1,000
Missouri Pacific R. R	1,000
Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Ry	1,000
St. Louis Southwestern Ry	1,000
Illinois Central	1,000
Yazoo & Mississippi Valley R. R	1,000
Chicago Mill & Lumber Co	1,000
Caldwell & Smith, Memphis	1,000
International Harvester Co	1,000

Assurance has been given of other substantial amounts.

As I have before stated, on June 3 I called the attention of the House to contributions made by eight railways for the purpose of aiding in the passage of a river "pork barrel." It will be remembered that contributions approximating $150,000 for the five-year period were given in the RECORD, and it was further shown that $40,000 of this amount was guaranteed by eight railroads for the purpose of influencing Congress to pass the bill. At that time I asked why an investigation was not had of this remarkable situation, and I further demanded in my resolution that all interests engaged in lobbying through such bills should be compelled to come out in the open.

THE LOBBY'S EDUCATIONAL PROPAGANDA.

The country is informed that the railways of the Mississippi Valley are engaged in an "educational propaganda" in order that their interests may be protected by what the Memphis News-Scimitar frankly says is "Yankee money." But the Scimitar refuses to be a party to the looting proposition, and demands a new and a square deal. If that be brought about, what will be the necessity of longer continuing the Rivers and Harbors Congress which the New Orleans Item declares is a national lobby for the "pork-barrel" bill? Will the owners of 20,000,000 acres of land to be reclaimed by the Mississippi River project submit to this sudden conclusion of the "educational propaganda" now being financed in part by the railway interests along the river? What a theme for discussion is afforded by this one Mississippi River item that, due to political pull, jumped engineers' estimates $2,000,000 in the 1914 "barrel." Condemned by leading journals in the Mississippi River Valley as a "scheme of railroad interests that do not want genuine and permanent stream control."

What can be said in answer to the Memphis Press, which declares—the would-be perpetrators of the "pork barrel" are the enemies of the comprehensive program, the enemies of real safety, the enemies of revived navigation—they are, in effect, traitors to the Republic.

These are matters which were not discussed by the lobby that has now adjourned. Do the gentlemen who orated before the rivers and harbors lobby find fault with the judgment of the Memphis Press? To charge a public servant or public official with "treason" is to charge he is an enemy of his country. To betray a public trust is to invite the scorn of right-thinking men.

I do not desire to question the motives of any man nor to impute improper influences, but the country is jealous of its strong box and more jealous of the honor standards of its trustees. We will not invite public confidence by training with a lobby that declares it demands an annual $50,000,000 appropriation for a policy not a project. No man is big enough to link himself with such a brazen proposal or with the secret practices of that lobby without suffering some degree of self-reproach for the contact.

A THOROUGH INVESTIGATION IS DEMANDED.

What will the Mississippi River get in the new bill for land reclamation? The lobby is particularly interested in this project, and so are the railways which have been generously contributing from railway treasuries to the "educational propaganda" that has for its object an annual grab of millions of Government money. How much is going into the new bill for the Mississippi River land reclamation scheme? More to the point, how much is coming out of the committee for the Mississippi River land reclamation when the "pork barrel" rolls its way through congressional committees and through both Houses, if it does?

The committees increased the 1914 reclamation fund $2,000,000 over engineers' recommendation during the short period it was in their hands. What will be done with the new bill?

Last session I was charged with failing to object to any large slices of "pork" contained in the barrel. Has my objection to the $9,000,000 for land reclamation along the Mississippi River been made sufficiently definite? A further discussion of this project occurred in the October 8 RECORD.

In my humble judgment, not one dollar of Government money should be expended for land-reclamation purposes, either along the Mississippi River or elsewhere, nor should more money be expended on the Mississippi River until we have the opinion of an expert board on charges filed that the present plan is unscientific, wasteful, and of no value.

I have offered a resolution asking that a high-class engineering board investigate and report on the Mississippi River problem and have presented evidence of engineers and influential journals in the valley calling for the appointment of such board. Nearly 100 letters received on this subject from some of the highest authorities in the country approve my proposal. These letters are subject to examination by the committee whenever it considers my resolution. Many plans are proposed. I am not concerned with any of them, whether they refer to the Newlands $600,000,000 plan, the Riker spillway plan, the present project, or any of the others. Let the President appoint a high-class board to consider the whole question and have the board advise Congress before another dollar is wasted on the present plan. Genuine progress in meeting this river problem can be had by passing a resolution concerning the Mississippi River which is now awaiting action from the Rivers and Harbors Committee:

[H. Con. Res. 50. Sixty-third Congress, second session. In the House of Representatives. September 21, 1914. Mr. FREAR submitted the following concurrent resolution, which was referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed.]

Whereas about $200,000,000 have been expended in attempt to control the Mississippi River below Cairo, principally by the use of levees and revetments, which as a means for that purpose are deemed by many to be impracticable and futile; and

Whereas by the present rivers and harbors bill further great sums of money are proposed to be appropriated to continue this questionable attempt by the same means: Therefore be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That no appropriation made by the present rivers and harbors bill shall be available for use upon the Mississippi River below Cairo until the feasibility and advisability of plans which depend upon levees and revetments for control of the Mississippi River below Cairo have been approved, or other plans substituted by an advisory board of consulting engineers, in accordance with the provisions of H. R. 18169, now before the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Resolved further, That the members of such advisory board of consulting engineers, appointed by the President in conformity with the provisions of said bill, shall require to be confirmed by the Senate.

THE MISSOURI RIVER PROJECT.

We may confidently look for $2,000,000 in the new bill to help contractors on the Missouri River from Kansas City to its mouth, a distance of some 400 miles. This is part of a $20,000,000 project, although the Missouri River has lost 80 per cent of its traffic within the past two decades. It has been calculated that every ton of actual freight shipped on the Missouri River, after this wasteful appropriation has been completed, will cost the Government over $100 per ton.

Distinguished men, defenders of uncertain projects, declare trafficless river expenditures are "freight regulators." Few people will be misled by such specious arguments. Railroad rates are controlled by commissions to-day, and no rate heretofore lowered by water competition can be raised without State or Federal authority. Rivers carrying insignificant traffic are not freight regulators, but commercial jokes.

Facing the fact that 80 per cent of the Missouri River traffic is gone, after an expenditure on the river of over $7,000,000, we find, after deducting sand, gravel, and revetment material, that the actual commerce on this river between Kansas City and the mouth is trivial. Does it not seem monstrous folly to dump $2,000,000 annually into this part of the stream? The traffic is now carried by railways on both sides of the river and it will continue to be carried by the railways unless we subsidize and build a line of steamboats to run the river. The facts regarding this river were considered in the discussion of April 10, and Government statistics were presented to show the character of the Missouri River project.

I quote briefly from one of the statements there submitted after the lower Mississippi appropriations have reached approximately $80,000,000.

BILLS THE GOVERNMENT HAS PAID.

No weather barometer more accurately measures the pressure of air than does St. Louis the falling off of navigation in the Mississippi Valley. Assuming that navigation has held its own since 1906, a violent assumption, an interesting story is related by the table quoted, which reads as follows:

St. Louis River traffic.

	Missouri.	Upper Mississippi.	Lower Mississippi.	Total river.	Total rail.
	Tons.	Tons.	Tons.	Tons.	Tons.
1890	31,385	151,507	765,880	1,265,855	15,240,141
1906	6,050	67,140	141,575	416,855	44,964,623
Approximate loss for 16 years.	80%	55%	81%	66%	.....

This table shows that after all the tremendous artificial stimulation by Government appropriations, amounting to $1 for every man, woman, and child in the country, on the average, during that period the Missouri traffic shows 80 per cent loss, the upper Mississippi 55 per cent loss, the lower Mississippi 81 per cent loss, and the total river tonnage a loss of two-thirds within 16 years.

Is Missouri concerned in the annual expenditure of $2,000,000 of Government money to keep river dredges and river contractors busy? What portion of the $9,000,000 to be given by the last river bill for land reclamation purposes on the Mississippi River was to go to Missouri land-reclamation interests? Would Missouri appropriate in one year $1,750,000 for a 200-mile stretch of the Mississippi and $2,000,000 for a defunct river traffic on the Missouri and one million more for its private land-reclamation interests on the Mississippi River? That is what Missouri gets out of their annual bills. If Missouri is not contributing, why should the Government embark in such wasteful, unbusinesslike proposals?

THE OHIO $64,000,000 CANALIZATION PROJECT.

The Ohio River received $4,176,000 in the sundry civil bill and asked for $5,000,000 more in the defeated 1914 river bill, or $9,176,000 in one year for its $64,000,000 canalization scheme.

Statistics affecting this project were offered in the RECORD for April 10 and June 8. It is unnecessary to repeat the statements there shown, but from Government reports the Ohio River traffic amounted to 13,163,656 tons in 1905 and in 1912 it fell to 8,618,396, or 34 per cent loss in seven years. The most significant fact shown by its lockages is that only 2 per cent of lockage traffic is of high-class freight, while 90 per cent of the total river traffic goes by the open river, as it has done for the past hundred years, and for the reason given by practical river men, that through traffic will never permit barge tows to use or wait for 60 locks, or 10 per cent of that number. Allowing full railway freight charges for the coal locked through the canal, it indicates an eventual cost to the Government for the remaining 2 per cent freight of from $34 to $45 per ton, depending upon the lock where measurements are made. As a business venture, Missouri River commerce at $100 per ton cost to the Government on an investment of only $27,227,935 looks like a better proposition than Ohio River freight at $45 per ton cost to the Government on an investment of $64,000,000. However, this is a matter for the expert opinion of Army engineers, who have approved both projects, each of which will confront us in the new bill about to be presented by the Rivers and Harbors Committee.

After spending a dozen millions on the Ohio, with more than fifty millions more in prospect, the importance of securing an opinion of a high-class board as to the value of present plans is emphasized by the following clipping under date of October 7, 1914:

[1] Fall. [2] Rise.

Traffic on the lower part of the Ohio River has been entirely suspended, owing to the lowest water ever known. There is not enough water on Sharps Bar, between Paducah and Cairo, to float a skiff, according to reports, and the steamer Rapids, running in the Paducah and Cairo trade, has been withdrawn until a rise comes.

REAL WATERWAY TRAFFIC.

The Ohio River still carries on important river traffic, although far less than before the present $64,000,000 canalization project was first proposed, at a time when the commerce was all carried by the open river. Nine-tenths of it is now carried by the open river, and will be so carried. After many millions of dollars have been expended, we now learn that the Ohio will not float a skiff—not because the channel is absent, but water is non est.

Nature, and not Army engineers, controls the amount of water in the Ohio, for while men may dig ditches and build dams the Creator determines the fall and flow of water.

REAL TRAFFIC.

I have before me several letters on the Ohio project, including one from Madison, Ind., in which the writer says:

There is no business on the Ohio River to justify the building of locks and dams, and new dams will make no change in shipping or passenger travel. Dredge boats would be sufficient to keep the channel of the Ohio River open for all commerce. We have two boats running between Cincinnati and Louisville that belong to the Louisville & Nashville Railroad.

The Muskingum River and the Kanawha and the Kentucky Rivers all have locks from the mouth to the headwaters, but no boats nor business can be found on these rivers. That river and harbor bill is certainly a "pork barrel."

During the debate on the last river bill a distinguished member of the Rivers and Harbors Committee from Missouri [Mr. BOOHER], amid applause from his colleagues on the committee, suggested that I came from a country where waterways are unknown. When the curriculum of Missouri schools which graduated Representatives in Congress is complete it will include a short course in geography, so inquiring Missouri Members may learn that the Father of Waters, which gets $9,000,000 on its lower stretch and only $1,500,000 on the equally long and important upper stretch, forms the western boundary of Wisconsin and over 100 miles of my own district, as it does the eastern boundary of Missouri. The upper river has shown less loss in traffic than the lower river, and its commerce is of far more importance than the 13,016 tons of actual traffic carried by the Missouri in 1912. This latter traffic, it has been demonstrated, will probably cost the Government over $100 per ton when $20,000,000 more has been poured into the Missouri, in addition to the $7,227,935 previously spent. But while kicking the Missouri "houn' dawg" around it may properly be stated that Wisconsin has many harbors on Lake Michigan, including one that annually handles 500 tons of actual commerce for every 1 of the 13,000 tons carried on the lower Missouri River. To extend the comparison further, a Lake Superior harbor on our northwestern border handles 41,474,776 tons annually, or approximately 3,000 tons of actual commerce for every 1 of the 13,000 tons of actual freight carried on the Missouri.

RIVERS GET LIBERAL "PORK" ALLOWANCE.

The Duluth-Superior harbor tonnage for 1912 was several times as large as the combined traffic of the Mississippi, Missouri, and Ohio Rivers, yet the sundry civil bill waterway items and 1914 river bill carried $21,676,000 for these three rivers, or more than one-third of the total amount of proposed waterway expenditures.

With this fact before us, it is passing strange to read a statement of the president of the Rivers and Harbors Congress made in another legislative body on September 14, as follows:

It does seem strange to me, and I have been thinking about it, not only now but for 16 years—ever since I entered Congress—that harbors could get all the money they needed while rivers had to struggle along and could get very little.

With approximately $80,000,000 spent by the Government on the lower Mississippi and $21,676,000 for three rivers in the 1914 bills, we may well weigh such utterances, because $21,676,000 is more than the amount carried for all river and harbor appropriations in 1904, or more than double the total appropriations of 1905, when TILLMAN declared the "pork barrel" was a "humbug and steal."

OTHER RIVER PROJECTS.

While I have briefly alluded to the enormous expense to the Government because of nominal traffic on certain rivers, it must not be supposed that I have attempted to discuss many of the scandalous projects that have received the approval of Army engineers. Let me mention several others to keep them company:

THE ARKANSAS RIVER.

The Arkansas River has received over $3,000,000 and an annual maintenance of $30,000 is also paid by the Government. Deducting floatable timber it took $95 of Government money in 1912 to convey every ton of miscellaneous freight an average distance of 34 miles. This computation allows only 3 per cent on the original investment. Compared with $100 per ton on the Missouri and an equal amount on the Tennessee when the Muscle Shoals water power is completed, it will be observed that the Arkansas River is a better proposition, because the Arkansas has stood the test of time and saves $5 per ton on the $100 per ton estimates offered on the Missouri and Tennessee. But what a travesty!

THE RED RIVER.

The Red River below Fulton carries an appropriation every year for part of a stream that, according to the Engineers' Report, has received $2,768,377 of Government money. Apart from floatable timber this river floated 1,227 tons of general merchandise during the year 1912—page 2314, report 1913—or an average of $68 per ton cost to the Government, figuring interest on the investment at 3 per cent.

Another project appears in the Red River above Fulton that carried 236 tons of freight in 1913, aside from floatable timber, at a cost to the Government of $59.50 per ton on an appropriation of $465,729.

"The Red River above Fulton, Ark., is not navigable at ordinary low water for floating craft," says page 835, Engineers' Report 1913. Where did the $465,729 go? Echo answers, Where?

THE BLACK WARRIOR.

In the RECORD, of June 19, page 11720, I gave a brief statement of the Black Warrior's absorption of $9,151,295 of Government money. A computation was offered showing that approximately 5,450 tons average traffic through the various locks cost the Government $396,546 in 1912, or a tidy sum of $73 per ton. The Ouchita, Coosa, and many other streams tell the same tale.

I will only offer one more that comes in every bill:

THE BIG SANDY INVESTMENT.

Big Sandy River is one of the shining marks of waterway frauds that has received the approval of the engineering department. Deducting floatable timber, its 465 tons of miscellaneous freight in 1912 cost the Government in good Government money for interest and maintenance $89,000, or a trifle over $191 per ton.

I will not repeat facts surrounding many of the 26 North Carolina projects or of the twenty-odd Florida projects, including the Kissimmee and Oklawaha, or of Matawan Creek, Shoal Harbor, and other projects, including the never-to-be-forgotten Trinity and Brazos, that are found in every "pork barrel"—wasteful, indefensible projects, discredited by the engineers' reports that are offered in their support.

Newark Bay terminals, Jamaica Bay, and other real estate projects in the North evidence the fact that all of the successful promoters do not live in the South. Human nature appears to be much the same, and the protest against these projects and exposure of their character comes from people of high standing familiar with the different propositions.

WASTEFUL CANALIZATION COMPARED TO PANAMA.

We are constantly reminded by the optimist waterway enthusiast that the Panama Canal shows possibilities of modern waterway extension, and we are invited to keep our eyes on the Panama Canal. The promoter of fake gold mines never fails to compare his projects with one having merit, and thousands of abandoned projects are ignored by gullible investors.

It may be said that while opinions differ as to the ultimate value of the Panama Canal to this country, it is now built, and between three and four hundred million dollars have been appropriated, because the American people were persuaded freight rates would be materially reduced by competing coastwise traffic.

After building the canal we have suddenly throttled all promised relief by repudiating our legislative pledge to the people and taxing the tonnage of our coastwise vessels. I am not here concerned with the political question, nor with charges of railway influences behind the repeal, but I am considering the Panama argument when applied to our inland waterways.

A reduction of freight rates is the premium held out to-day by dredgers and contractors, expressed through the lobby in return for waterway expenditures. What would these worthies say if we placed a tonnage tax on every steamboat or vessel that uses our waterways? And these waterways have cost more than double the amount expended on the Panama Canal, and all have been improved in expectation that the benefit, if any, would extend to the general public that pays the bills.

Great Lakes and ocean traffic grow, but rivers and creeks that absorb most of the barrel have lost their traffic and are no more feared by the railways than a seasoned veteran fears a child's toy whistle. Both are equally harmless and of equal value under present conditions. Notwithstanding our unsystematic, wasteful, political-pull methods, we are constantly referred to the possibilities of the Panama Canal and European canals, and when we question the infallibility of Army engineers, we are directed to Goethals. If he indorses the Muscle Shoals or other wasteful proposals, then we may well inquire what kind of an engineering school of instruction our Government supports.

I do not believe Goethals would approve such projects; but, if so, it adds nothing to the merit of the proposals.

ARGUMENTS FAVORING THE "PULL" SYSTEM.

My attention has been called to an article in the bulletin of the Atlantic Deeper Waterways Association charging that a Government report issued in 1909 has been discredited by changed conditions during the present year and says:

> This is the sort of stuff the American people are expected to swallow about their priceless inheritance of waterways.

And the writer conclusively adds:

> To put it plainly, most of the case against the Government river and harbor work that has appeared in print is reducible to one word—piffle.

Do the people who pay the tax believe the Muscle Shoals $18,701,000 water-power proposition or the Coosa River $6,000,000 water-power project or the Chattanooga water power or the Black Warrior water-power projects, which are being largely financed by the Government, are "piffle"?

Do the American people believe the president of the waterways congress, who admits on the floor of the Senate that a railway with 1,000 miles along the Mississippi is a contributor to the waterway lobby seeking to advance the "educational propaganda" for a land reclamation scheme along that river? If so, do they say "piffle" to the contributions of eight railway companies toward the same lobby for the same purpose?

BILLIONS PROPOSED IN WASTEFUL PROJECTS.

A writer complains in the same waterway magazine because of attacks on the pork barrel "just at a time when the restoration of traffic to our waterways is on the verge of accomplishment." Such defenders of the barrel should study Army engineers' reports and other records before asserting that waterway traffic on rivers is about to be restored. River traffic has steadily decreased, notwithstanding expenditures have amounted to $80,000,000 on the lower Mississippi and proportionate expenditures on practically every other river and creek in the country.

It was proposed to appropriate $21,676,000 in 1914 for three rivers that have been rapidly losing their commerce, as I have shown from the official reports. About $80,000,000 more will be required for the Ohio and Missouri Rivers for a decreasing traffic, to be thereafter increased for new projects on the same rivers, while an unlimited amount will be required for the Mississippi land-reclamation project. Countless millions of dollars are required for hundreds of other streams that have hopeful new projects knocking at the Treasury doors with estimates reaching into hundreds of millions of dollars. The restoration of river traffic is indefinitely removed from "the verge of accomplishment," and if a halt is to be called in the present reckless haphazard, wasteful lack of system now is an opportune time when people who pay war taxes are scrutinizing appropriations.

INVESTIGATE THE WHOLE SUBJECT.

I am inclined to offer a further suggestion regarding arguments made in defense of such bad bills. Champions of the bill in the recent lobby session professed to find improper purposes behind those who fight against this annual waste. They object to a careful, systematic investigation of the subject by a competent board for fear some local project may not get past the board. Special interests whisper their suspicions and they are embraced by those who should know better. Ignoring the fact that every State now has or should have a railway commission which, in conjunction with the Interstate Commerce Commission, regulates freight rates and prevents unreasonable earnings, we continue to hear of the railway bugaboo and are told that opposition to a wasteful pork barrel probably springs from railway influences. Blind to the fact or ignorant of the fact that railways own or control many of the waterway lines on river and sea and practically all terminals at many points, these critics profess to believe that such improvements by the Government, primarily for railways, are in some unaccountable way for the benefit of the public.

With equal disregard for the logic of the situation such critics profess to believe that railways are opposed to wasteful river projects, notwithstanding subscription lists showing amounts subscribed by different railways are published showing railways and other special interests are among the most generous contributors to the lobby.

Dredgers, contractors, land reclamationists, water-power interests, and railway companies all join in pushing the lobby, yet their aid is accepted by highly respectable people in this copartnership carnival for Government money.

High-class journals are advised that some local project may be imperiled by a defeat of the "pork barrel" or by opening up the subject, and so heavy editorials from distinguished writers are aimed at opponents of the bill. What matters it if the $21,000,000 and over contained in the 1914 bill for the Mississippi, Missouri, and Ohio is largely wasted? What matters it if the Alabama Water Power Co. has received millions for the Coosa and Black Warrior and other streams, and is about to get $18,701,000 more for Muscle Shoals? What matters it that real estate, water-power, and reclamation projects jostle each other throughout the $50,000,000 "humbug and steal," providing the local project is kept in?

And these same highly respectable journals that denounce Congress for acts of omission or commission are found criticizing opposition to the "pork barrel" because some local project is in the barrel or some day is to be placed there.

Personally, I am not disturbed over charges of railway influence behind the opposition. For many years I aided in a small way to secure the passage of laws which gave my own State complete control of public carriers, and laws which also broke up a disgraceful secret lobby that had haunted the State capitol for years, as bad and vicious as the "pork-barrel" lobby which haunts the National Capitol to-day.

No railway official in my own State nor anyone familiar with that legislation will question the motives that prompt me now.

The railways of that State are now free from sandbagging and unjust legislative treatment and find in the very laws which control their activities the protection to which they are entitled. And what applies to railways in that State applies with equal force to the proposal to place waterway improvements of the country in the hands of a high-class board that shall be substituted for political pull.

WHO ARE THE RAILROADS HIDING BEHIND?

When Colliers, Harpers, La Follettes, Piersons, Saturday Evening Post, National, World's Work, Outlook, and other journals of recognized high public purpose open their columns to the truth about "pork barrels" or editorially condemn the present system we may fairly question the character of men who charge unworthy motives lie behind opposition to a scandalous diversion of public funds.

When the Chicago Tribune in the West, the Christian Science Monitor in the East, and scores of journals of equally high character throughout the country lambast that same infamous bill and the legislative easy conscience that finds apology for its existence, what are the standards of $50,000,000 lobby orators who question the motives of the opposition? Misrepresentation by those ignorant of the facts or by men convicted of a perversion of truth are not calculated to deceive thinking people. In order that no one may be misled by this patent attempt to distract attention from the real issue I have tried to secure an investigation of the lobby's influence. A resolution to that end has been referred to the committee. In my remarks appearing in the October RECORD of the 8th abundant evidence was offered of improper influences from dredgers, contractors, railways, and other interests to put through the 1914 barrel.

FIND OUT WHAT THE RAILROADS ARE SUPPORTING.

Now, let us get together and demand that the resolution be reported and that investigators further be instructed to ascertain what influences, if any, other than a sense of legislative responsibility, exists behind the opposition. Let us have no more hypocritical cant about improper influences alleged to actuate men and journals now engaged in this warfare against a gigantic waste of public funds. To use a common homely expression, the $50,000,000 champions should lay their cards on the table and demand an investigation that will include themselves and the opponents of the barrel. If they refuse, how can they avoid the legitimate conclusion?

The country is entitled to facts, and facts may easily be had through an investigation. I have shown that special interests are largely responsible for the lobby and have presented irrefutable evidence on the subject. Why answer direct testimony with idle talk that it is "piffle," when an investigation will disclose the facts and influences surrounding both the supporters and opponents of this bad bill?

A THANKLESS JOB.

Many people believe the Rivers and Harbors Committee has made mistakes in judgment, and I feel sure that such is the opinion of the general public that pays the wasteful $50,000 000 bills; but the fault is not individual. It is due to a pernicious system fastened on to Congress by years of placid acquiescence. I further realize that the committee is made up of a hard-worked body of men who try to do justice between different clamoring interests, and that it is composed of able men who are responsible to the House and who perform a difficult and unenviable task to the best of their ability. It is equally unquestioned that the chairman of the Rivers and Harbors Committee is filling an arduous position with great skill and fairness, and further, that Congress, and not the committee, is responsible for the system. I make this acknowledgment because criticism of the system and of projects is intended to be impersonal. Possibly the high opinion I have of the chairman and members of the committee is not reciprocated because of my attacks on the result of their labors. If not, it is a matter of personal regret, but can not affect my desire to expose waste, as I view it, nor my efforts, however feeble, to try and urge a better legislative system.

CHANGE THE LEGISLATIVE SYSTEM.

No difficulty ought to be experienced in finding a better plan than the present one, but before Congress will consent to a change it is necessary to make the present system so odious that Members will be anxious to repudiate it. Human nature is selfish, and as long as the insistence of getting something for nothing prevails it will be useless to look for a thorough reform. With safety locks on vault doors and carefully guarded plates from which Government money is printed, the burglar and the counterfeiter are constantly engaged, seeking to avoid law and the protection afforded by public servants. The system of compelling Army engineers to approve projects was once of some value in staying the greed of local communities, but it has illy served its purpose when in recent years so many notoriously bad projects receive the approval of the Army board. Admitting, for argument's sake, that the board is only carrying out the demands of Members or Senators for allowance of unworthy projects, the situation is not helped by present conditions. How can political pull, vicious schemes, and special interests be blocked? Evils can be reduced by having the Engineer Department perform its proper function of reporting upon and constructing engineering projects. An administration which is responsible for governmental expenditures, including those for the post office, Army, and Navy, for instance, makes recommendations from the heads of departments. The President is held responsible for wasted Government money, for improper Government expenditures, and properly so, because, through his Secretaries or heads of departments, he can control the amounts to be expended and to be submitted to Congress by his subordinates.

A HIGH-CLASS WATERWAY BOARD.

Such recommendations are largely followed by Congress, and, although Philadelphia, Brooklyn, and Podunk Creek may squabble over local shipyards and gnaw over bones thrown into bills calling for local improvements, as a whole bills are accepted largely as recommended. In order to give the administration a right to have a voice in such expenditures and an intelligent part in the national budget system, we might authorize the appointment of a board of waterways by the President, to which board all proposed projects should be submitted before being placed on the bill. Such board might properly include the Secretary of Labor and two other Cabinet officers, possibly the Secretary of Commerce and the Secretary of the Interior. This board should be supplemented by two or more engineers, preferably from both civil and Army life. A board of this character would invite confidence, and its approval of a project could reasonably be credited to public service and not to special interests. All projects should thereafter be passed upon by Congress as in other appropriation bills.

CONTRIBUTION SHOULD BE COMPELLED.

Pressure now brought to bear on the engineering department and upon Congress will be minimized by insisting that communities, with rare exceptions, be compelled to contribute their share to any improvement. Why should the Dakotas, Wyoming, and many other States contribute to a waterway calculated only to benefit a particular locality or possibly some transportation company? More specifically stated, why should not the people of Missouri be asked to pay their part of a $20,000,000 burden for a Missouri River project?

In suggesting this illustration I am engaged in a violent assumption that there is merit in a project that will cost $100 per ton to accommodate traffic. That question having been determined in the affirmative, why should not Kansas City, which is expecting particular local benefits, pay for that benefit? The dredgers, contractors, and special interests now behind different projects would then use their activities toward convincing the good people of Kansas City that there is genuine merit in such a project. If Missouri contributed $5,000,000 to the project and Kansas City and communities along the river contributed an additional $5,000,000, the Government would be saved half of the project cost, and improvements would be for actual waterways. The principle of contribution applied to road highways should govern Federal aid to waterways.

A high-class board would seek to aid any community that had a project of value. Where a public use is had that is of national importance the proposition of contribution could be modified, but taking the largest harbor and most generally recognized public waterway of international importance—New York Harbor—and we find the city of New York received $4,500,000 annually from its terminal privileges and could presumably fairly make some contribution to that part of the public work which is primarily of local benefit. To-day it contributes liberally to all wasteful projects contained in "pork barrels" and fights to secure appropriations for the greatest harbor in the world.

ECONOMY AND EFFICIENCY.

These are suggestions to indicate how the vicious system can be avoided and how every legitimate waterway improvement may receive aid from the Government. A saving in the amount of vicious waterway improvements reaching from $20,000,000 to $30,000,000 could probably be brought about, most of the present waste eliminated, and we may well believe no legitimate waterway would suffer because of the change.

Every existing project ought to be critically examined by this expert board. Projects that are of no commercial or actual value, like the Hennepin Canal, Muscle Shoals, Trinity River, and scores of other wasteful Government investments, would be subjected to business instead of political considerations.

The Appropriations Committee could presumably handle the whole budget system far better than a number of committees working without coordination or a common purpose. However, I would not complicate the proposal by suggesting changes that every business man realizes should be made in a wasteful system. Any action along the line I have suggested will improve present conditions, and until such action is had we will be constantly menaced by a "pork barrel" and a "pork-barrel" lobby. These few remarks have been offered to call attention particularly to a few of the bad projects that have been approved by Army engineers and to urge upon Members generally the desirability of demanding a thorough investigation of the merit of every item before the measure is again railroaded through the House. Let us not admit that the Senate is more careful in its legislative methods than ourselves. Whatever the facts may be, let us not be prevented from doing our full duty either through the influence of a $50,000,000 annual lobby or through any mistaken sense of legislative courtesy for bad projects or their supporters.

I have monopolized more time than I expected to take on this subject, but I desire to say that I am not opposed, nor is any Member whom I have heard, who has criticized items or criticized the bill—we are not opposed to waterway projects. We are not opposed to Government aid to waterway projects. We believe a high-class commission should be appointed, so as to do away with the present system, which brings 11 high-grade Members of Congress before a board of Army engineers. I could give other illustrations where engineers' decisions have been changed, necessarily so, and we as men all know it. I am not criticizing the men who go there, because they are all anxious about particular projects; but I criticize the system, and trust that with these expositions we may at some time get a different system. And I am offering it with that idea; and while personalities have been directed at me, and unfairly so when I could not reply, I will not engage in them at this time nor at any other time, because there is no personal feeling with me on this matter. I believe the system is wrong. I know it is wrong, and every Member in this House knows it is wrong. Whether we can correct it I do not know. I believe we may improve it, and that is the purpose of the suggestions which have been made here at different times by myself. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON].

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I was not surprised to hear the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR] close his remarks by protesting his innocence of any feeling against any portion of the people or section of country in any of these matters. It always happens that when the virus is in a man's heart, he protests its absence.

I have been a Member of this House a number of years, and I have never in all my life heard the discussion of a bill from so purely a sectional standpoint as the gentleman has discussed this measure here to-day. I have never heard a statement attempted upon this floor in reference to the situation as to certain rivers and harbors in the country so thoroughly erroneous in all my life as this. I have never heard in all my life such an unjust, such an unfair arraignment of the rivers and harbors as we have just heard upon this floor, and of the Army engineers of the United States.

Mr. NELSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOON. Not now. I was once a member of the Rivers and Harbors Committee. I have voted on every bill that has been in the House for 17 or 18 years. I am sure it has always afforded me pleasure to vote for the improvement of the rivers in the North and of the West. The South has had but little of this improvement through all of the Republican Congresses, and but little since. I do not believe this is "Yankee money" that has been referred to. It is the money of the people of the United States that we are to expend.

Mr. FREAR. That was not my expression; it was in a southern editorial.

Mr. MOON. It is the money of the United States. The people of the United States have a right and ought to place it wherever it will do the most good. I have long since grown weary and tired of either the direct or the inferential sectionalism displayed on the floor of this House. If this was not an Alabama or a Tennessee proposition we would not have heard from the gentleman in regard to it.

Mr. FREAR. I spoke about the Ohio River.

Mr. MOON. I am coming to the Ohio River. The gentleman spoke of the Ohio River, when he knew, if he knew anything, that of a $60,000,000 project for the Ohio every dollar is practically secured under a continuing contract, and nothing that he could do or say would alter it. The gentleman did not tell this House that the objections he makes against the improvement of the southern rivers was not made against the Monongahela, the Allegheny, the Delaware, or the Ohio, or the upper part of the Mississippi River which lies in the Western and Northern States. But whenever we ask something, after his section has gotten all it wants, after it has gotten all that it needs, then he is obsessed of that infernal idea that has always cursed this country—that nothing good can come out of the Treasury for anything south of Mason and Dixon's line. That is the attitude that the gentleman puts himself in.

Now, I am not going to discuss all these matters, but I am going to take up one. The gentleman talks about the Tennessee River not being worthy of improvement.

Mr. FREAR. I did not say so.

Mr. MOON. You oppose it. We have many obstructions in that river which destroy its commerce and navigation and which ought to be removed. But the gentleman speaks against the judgment and the sentiment of Congresses for 50 years, against the judgment of engineers of the United States, and the gentleman assumes a wonderful superiority of knowledge of commercial statistics, and a wonderful knowledge of engineering and navigation superior to every engineer of the United States. The whole trend of his argument is that way, and it means nothing else. He sets up his judgment against these men of experience, these men of judgment, these men of ability, these men of business—men who know more about these great questions in 1 minute than he could in 10 years—and he asks this House to follow his judgment along these lines.

Now let us see about the Tennessee River for a moment. There was a stretch below Chattanooga of this river of some 40 miles that was navigable, but very dangerous, only a few months in the year. The cooperative plan, similar to that proposed for the Muscle Shoals, was invoked, and this Congress, when Mr. BURTON was chairman, passed a bill for the improvement of that section of the river. The Government made a slight contribution, and the power company made possible the navigation that could not have existed without it; and that company spent $10,000,000, which under the law of this country the Government ought to have expended in the interest of navigation.

The gentleman makes the absurd and ridiculous proposition that only 5,500 tons of phosphate passes through the canal, assuming that this is all the commerce of that river or on that stretch of the river. How utterly nonsensical a suggestion that is is shown by the fact that the tonnage is 1,300,000 tons annually, worth more than $13,000,000 of money, that passes over the river. The river is cut in two by obstruction that must be removed. The gentleman says that Mr. BURTON agrees with him about this, but I do not think he does. But Mr. BURTON was the chairman of the committee that recommended the river improvement. What do you expect, gentlemen? Do you expect the river to be already improved before you offer any contributions to it? If that were true, it would not be necessary to make the appropriation. Here is a river upon which commerce is practicable between given points, but it has obstructions that must be removed to make it all available. Why, on that river there are coal fields of seven States. There is enough coal, according to the geological report, along this river and States tributary to it that if you could market the whole of it would support a population of a hundred million people in the lavish use of it for a thousand years. What are you going to do with the agricultural products along the river? What are you going to do with the immense marble interests, the immense timber interests, the great ore and manufacturing interests all along the river? If it is not improved, they can not get to the world. Mankind can not have the benefit of them. We have a short period in the year when you can pass through the whole river two boats running to St. Louis. You know that the reduction on account of those boats during that brief period in the railroad freight rates is about one-third.

When the river is not open the railroad puts up its rates, and when the river is open so that a partial commerce can pass through, it puts down its rates. And what sort of a river is this that I am talking about? It is a river which with main stem and tributaries would benefit and put into navigation, with the improvements asked for, 2,260 miles of navigable water—a river that empties more water by 60,000 gallons per minute into the Ohio River than the Ohio and the Cumberland Rivers both have together. Then talk about it not being worthy of improvement!

Now, let us talk of the Muscle Shoals matter. I am not willing to see any unfair arrangement made in reference to the Muscle Shoals proposition, one in which the Government can not possibly lose anything; but that is an obstruction that must be gotten rid of. The United States canal, a long and tortuous canal, is inefficient, ineffective in its work, and has to be replaced either by locks and dams or by a new canal.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes more to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, it will take $9,000,000 of money to put that canal in shape. Is the gentleman willing to have $9,000,000 of money thrown away on that river? That is the proposition, not for the benefit of Tennessee alone, but for the benefit of the commerce of the world. Are you going to throw it away? I think not. Is it better to put $9,000,000 into the restoration of an ineffective system than to put $9,000,000—$8,000,000 the engineers say—into the construction of locks and dams? Is it unwise if the power plant must be constructed to the extent of twenty-odd millions of dollars, for the Government, when it gets the full benefit of the navigation, to contribute $8,000,000? Is it not best that the Government do that rather than restore this old canal? The gentleman says that $3,000,000 will be advanced for the construction of this project outside of the $8,000,000. Grant that that is true. It is to be returned, and the interest upon the whole project paid to the Government of the United States.

I think that in view of the fact that on a project at Hales Bar the Government of the United States was given by the people who constructed it $10,000,000, it comes with poor grace for any man to say that a people who are willing to make such contributions to the Government, when you in the North were getting it all without any contribution, should not have the benefit of appropriations that are necessary for that interest there. Of course, the details of the bill in reference to this matter can not be discussed at this time. The proposition ought to be carried through as the engineers have said, in my judgment, at the Muscle Shoals. The Government ought to be protected in every respect as it is at Hales Bar. If you want to do it, you can take over the whole of the project at Hales Bar either upon its valuation at the present time or upon its cost. It is useless for gentlemen to be obsessed of an idea in opposition to a policy and to see nothing except that which is in the line of vision they want to see. If there is a river in these United States that is to be improved, if there is one that is worthy of improvement, it is the Tennessee River. All of the reports and the statistics show it, and the idle suggestion that Muscle Shoals is intended for nothing, and has accomplished no other purpose than the carrying through of a few thousand tons of phosphate, must be apparent when lying along the banks of that great river in seven States tributary to it, are the greatest resources in all this great Republic. The gentleman must not go to the engineers' reports and garble statements from them and put his interpretation upon those statements. He must not put into the mouths of the engineers of the United States that which would falsify their written reports. It is neither just to them nor is it just to this House. Truly there could be no higher board, one more efficient or competent, to pass upon the great questions involved here than the engineers of the United States.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOON. Yes.

Mr. FREAR. I was going to ask is not this the first case, according to the report of the engineers, where they have ever made such a proposition to the Government?

Mr. MOON. As what?

Mr. FREAR. That they would enter into partnership with a water-power company for the promotion of this enterprise.

Mr. MOON. No; the water-power proposition is only incidental.

Mr. FREAR. I am asking if that is not the first case?

Mr. MOON. No; the Hales Bar case was one.

Mr. FREAR. That is what they say in their report.

Mr. MOON. I drew the bill for the Hales Bar proposition, and it passed this House and I know what was in it, and the record there shows the Government's participation—small, it is true.

Mr. FREAR. I accept the gentleman's statement in preference to that of the report.

Mr. MOON. It is almost impossible, to get down to practical questions, to get great projects of this sort through without the cooperation of these motor-power companies. I am not in favor of the Government making any bad contract with anybody. I am in favor of a provision in this bill which would turn over all this water power to the Government, if the Government wants to use it, and I am in favor of a proposition that would secure to the people protection against exorbitant rates. You speak of conservation. The greatest conservation proposition on the face of the earth is the Muscle Shoals proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has again expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, that is the greatest conservation proposition in the world—560,000 horsepower. Not only to light, but to operate the machinery in thousands of factories in all that great Tennessee Valley, and you say it ought not to be conserved, do you, because the Government itself has not the power nor the interest at this time to promote it? You would let it run to waste as it has for centuries, when these power companies ask us to conserve it in order that they may give rates 40 to 50 per cent cheaper than power generated by coal would give to the people in the great manufacturing centers of that section. Are you unwilling to have that great power developed and promoted?

Mr. FREAR. Is it not true that in the statement made before the committee by gentlemen behind this proposition they admitted there is no demand at this time for the use of this power? That is the statement made, according to the press account. It is simply preliminary?

Mr. MOON. I heard the gentleman make the statement. He said there would be a demand; that there was in part a demand now. Just like the improvement of rivers, you can not tell what the commerce of a river is going to be until you open it up to navigation. You can not tell what the electric power will be until you are in a position to develop it. He believes, and I believe, and I have heard Mr. Worthington say time and again the benefits that would come from it would be incalculable. If they are willing to put in twenty-odd millions of money in cooperation with the Government, it surely argues that they believe there is an outcome to it. Do you suppose private persons would put twenty-odd millions of dollars in cooperation with the Government without power rights when the Government is to put in nothing more finally than necessary for the purpose of navigation?

Mr. NELSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOON. I do.

Mr. NELSON. Does the gentleman believe that is a good policy for the Government, to go into partnership with corporations and extend it throughout the country?

Mr. MOON. I believe, as President Roosevelt said when the lock-and-dam bill passed, that it is the best possible means for conservation of these powers in the whole country. You have got it to-day. Under the Hales Bar law the Government not only controls the plant, but inspects it regularly, has its men over the locks to be operated for the purpose of navigation free to the Government, with the provision that the Government may, if it sees fit, take over the whole thing, auxiliaries and all, That is the only way you are going to develop this country. You can not get this Government to put thirty millions of money in a plant of that sort, but if the Government needs an expenditure of $8,000,000 of money for the purpose of creating navigation where it will make proper return to the people, it is wise that you take in connection with it a power plant or any others that will serve the great public interest there and prevent it from being destroyed, because it all rests in the Government hands at last. I agree very readily with those ideas that we should separate our Government from all individual or corporate interest everywhere. I do not agree, however, that the Government is not capable of taking care of itself if in the legislation it enacts it gives an advantage and benefit to the Government that it ought to have. We can not keep ourselves as a government and an institution here at Washington, the Congress and the Executive, aloof and away from the people. We have to go down to the people and help in these matters, that benefit may come to the country. It is not a benefit that is to come to one State only, nor to the seven States that are tributary to that river. It is a benefit that is to come to your whole country. Where you bring from the West to the South small grain and other crops over this river, now in part open for a short time, an immense tide might flow from the West of your crops for distribution to the South, and might carry back some of the products of the South if this waterway was open the year around. You can not justify yourselves under any circumstances in a parsimonious or narrow view of a great public question like this. I do not care if it is in one section; our whole country will get the full benefit of the result of the improvement. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the engineers in the Army, in my opinion, constitute the most select body of professional men of ability that can be found anywhere in the world. They are appointed as cadets at West Point and go through services there. The poorest in the class are not selected as engineers, and their training, when they become engineers, is to act upon the merits of a proposition, wholly disregarding pressure and political influence. It may be and probably is the fact that sometimes they yield to the pressure of circumstances, but when they do it is entirely from having their opinions changed by facts which are brought before them. It is a great mistake, in my judgment, for anyone opposed to a river and harbor bill to base the opposition to it upon the lack either of ability, integrity, or knowledge of affairs on the part of the engineers. I have been up against them on a number of occasions when I thought I had a perfect case, and I was not able to convince the engineers; and I simply wish to express my opinion, in connection with the remarks which have been made here to-day, that the Engineer Corps of the United States Army, among the professional bodies which I know of, in my judgment stands the highest. But I hope there will be no river and harbor bill this year. There was not very much of a one last year. On computations which I have recently made, and which I think are fairly accurate, it seems to me almost a certainty that the Government is likely to issue bonds before the 1st of next July to pay the current expenses. I presume the Government would be able to sell 3 per cent Panama bonds by threatening the banks with destruction in some form if they did not buy them. They can not sell them on the market as a matter of purchase of securities, because the 3 per cent bonds without the circulation privilege are not worth par. Would not it be the part of wisdom in Congress, with the threat and almost certainty of a deficit before it, to postpone the consideration of propositions which can, at least, wait without injury? That it may be desirable to make public improvements in places can be granted without at the same time assuming that there will be any special injury to the public by the postponement of such public works. There are many public improvements desirable; there are many public buildings desirable; there are many harbor improvements and river improvements desirable; but we have gotten along fairly well up to date without those which have not yet been started.

I think we will find it better, and probably more popular, to postpone these improvements than to a year from now continue the war-tax law and increase the taxes at the same time. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Does the gentleman from Iowa wish to use any more of his time now?

Mr. GOOD. May I inquire how much time I have remaining.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa has 10 minutes remaining.

Mr. GOOD. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN].

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I am not sure I ought to impose myself on the committee, and I will do so only for a short space of five minutes, in order to say that I am opposed to reckless and extravagant expenditure of public funds. But wherever there is a meritorious project, or where navigation can be created by Government expenditure, and sufficient evidence can be adduced to show that the improvement is one which will enhance the facilities for the movement of the products of the field and the farm and the mine and the factory, the Government ought not to hesitate to make that improvement; and if, perchance, while the Government is creating means for transporting the commodities of the country, it can at the same time create by the expenditure of private capital hydroelectric energy which will encourage the investment of capital in new enterprises on account of the cheapness of the electrical energy that can be supplied for the operation of factories, there ought not to be any reason why the Government should not expend its contribution in connection with the expenditure of money by private individuals; for, after all, it seems to me the best way to conserve the resources of the country is to develop these resources so that they may be placed at the disposal of the people of the country.

We have a great waterfall here and an abundant quantity of water running down to the sea every day unharnessed which might well be utilized for the operation of the factories between here and Baltimore and the lighting of this great city as well as the lighting of the city of Baltimore. And it can not well be said that the resources that are embraced in this waterfall, while they are being allowed to run to the sea, are being conserved. I believe it should be the policy of the Government, including the Congress, to utilize, and by utilizing thus conserve our resources in order to create hydroelectric energy everywhere that can be sold at a low price, giving the Government officials the right to regulate the price, and that if this hydroelectric energy can not be created in any other way than by the expenditure of private money in cooperation with the Government in its attempt to create navigation for the transportation of the Nation's commodities, the Government ought to cooperate, but no expenditure of public money should be made in an attempt to create navigation in places where navigation never can be possible. But wherever navigation is possible by water the Government should do its part to enable the development of resources bordering on the waterway to be improved and thereby give to the people of America that kind of conservation which means the utilization of the forces of nature and an opportunity to develop what mankind may be able to produce out of nature. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Does the gentleman want to use any other time now?

Mr. GOOD. No.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I shall not occupy more than a few moments of the time of the committee for the purpose of explaining briefly the report that has been submitted. The legislative bill for the current year carries $37,625,789.70, which includes $246,860 carried in the deficiency and other appropriation bills and which are taken up in this bill. The estimates upon which this bill is based called for $40,727,518.27. The bill as reported carries $38,744,753.50. It provides for 16,708 salaries, and includes $2,286,100 for the purpose of taking an agricultural census. Under section 31 of the act of July 22, 1909, which provided for the Thirteenth Decennial Census, it was provided that in the year 1915 and every 10 years thereafter there should be taken a census of agriculture and live stock. As this item must be provided for only one time in each 10 years, it is but fair to the committee that made up this bill that it should be eliminated from our comparisons. Eliminating this item and comparing the bill as we present it to the House with the bill for the current year providing for similar Government expenditures the bill appropriates $1,167,156 less than was appropriated for the same service for the present fiscal year.

Mr. GILLETT. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes, sir.

Mr. GILLETT. How does it compare with the bill of last year as reported from the committee?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I have not the figures before me as the bill was reported from the committee last year, but I think as the bill finally passed it carried at least $800,000 more than it did when the committee reported it.

Mr. GILLETT. My impression is that the bill as reported this year is larger than the bill reported last year.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. No; it is not larger than the bill reported last year, in my judgment, though I have not the figures before me

Mr. GILLETT. I will get the figures.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The bill as reported now carries $1,165,000 less than the current law. I am sure that much was not added to the bill in the House or in the Senate. This bill provides for 187 fewer salaries than the bill for the current law provides for and 270 less than the estimates called for. In the Post Office Department there has been a marked and a gratifying decrease. Notwithstanding the usual and rapid growth of the Postal Service the clerical force asked for in the Post Office Department for the next fiscal year is $75,680 less than we appropriated for the current year. A further substantial reduction is found in the office of the Auditor for the Post Office Department under the Secretary of the Treasury. We appropriate $28,850 less and for 40 less places. Since 1913, notwithstanding the very great increase in the amounts that must be audited by the Auditor for the Post Office Department there has been a reduction of 355 statutory places and a total reduction of $134,120 in the amount used in that office. A year ago we were asked for a very large increase in the office of the Treasurer of the United States, due to the new method of accounting inaugurated by Mr. MacVeagh in February, 1913. The system at first threw the Treasurer's office into great confusion. The Committee on Appropriations did not, however, grant the increase asked for, and we are now pleased to report to Congress that the work in the office of the Treasurer of the United States is current, and instead of asking for an increase there is a decrease of 26 persons, and a total decrease of $22,000 in the amount appropriated.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. STAFFORD. Can the gentleman inform the committee as to the means whereby these economies were obtained, whether by the installation of labor-saving devices in the Post Office Department or not?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. In the Post Office Department it was by use of the electric tabulating machines for the auditing of money orders, which amount, I think, to more than three millions a year.

Mr. STAFFORD. What was the occasion for the diminution in the Treasury Department?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. As I stated a moment ago, about a year ago the new system which Mr. MacVeagh put into operation just before he retired from the office of Secretary of the Treasury had not been tried out, and there was necessarily more or less confusion; but since the plans have all been perfected, and new methods and business improvements have been adopted, they have not only been enabled to get along with the force they had a year ago, but they have asked, as I said a moment ago, for 26 persons less for the next fiscal year, and the work of the office is growing.

Another reduction of $126,200 is due to the largely decreased work in the Pension Office. We appropriate for 88 persons less than were appropriated for in the current year. We made no reduction below the estimates in the Pension Office for this year, although we were accused of having done so. We provided for the Pension Office just the number of people that the Commissioner of Pensions asked for. We have provided in this bill for all that he asked for except five places. The five places that were omitted by the Committee on Appropriations are five places that are outside of the classified service, and the persons who hold them are appointed for one year only, so that when they are appointed they have no assurance of being retained longer than that fiscal year.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I think that with that statement, together with what information I shall be able to give as we proceed under the five-minute rule, it is not necessary for me to trespass longer upon the attention of the committee. I may say, though, for the benefit of Members, that in the State Department, the Navy Department, the War Department, and the Department of Justice there is not a single change from the current law. There is nothing that will provoke discussion or call for amendment. The only changes of consequence made in the bill are in the two Departments of Commerce and Labor. The appropriations for both of those departments are increased over the appropriation for the current year. In the office of the Comptroller of the Currency, in the Treasury, it was also found necessary slightly to increase the force on account of the increased activities of that office by reason of the Federal reserve law. With those exceptions the bill is practically current law. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following sums are appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, in full compensation for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, namely.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, there was a quasi understanding before we went into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to the effect that this bill would be discussed in general debate for the balance of the day. The time was not all taken up, and I did hope that we could read a few pages of the bill to-day; but I do not care that it should be done without the consent of everybody, and I therefore move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. FOSTER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 19909) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

REPORT OF ISTHMIAN CANAL COMMISSION.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with the accompanying documents, referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith for the information of the Congress the Annual Report of the Isthmian Canal Commission and the Panama Canal for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1914.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, December 14, 1914.

PURCHASE AND EXCHANGE OF TYPEWRITING MACHINES, STATE DEPARTMENT (H. DOC. NO. 1355).

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with the accompanying documents, referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed:

To the House of Representatives:

I inclose herewith a statement submitted by the Secretary of State, in compliance with the requirements of section 4 of the legislative act approved July 16, 1914, of typewriting machines purchased and exchanged for the first three months of the current fiscal year.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, December 14, 1914.

REPORT OF THE DOORKEEPER, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES (H. DOC. NO. 1356).

The SPEAKER laid before the House the annual report of the Doorkeeper of the House, transmitting an inventory of all property in his charge belonging to the United States, which was read and referred to the Committee on Accounts for filing.

REIMBURSEMENT TO ARMY OFFICERS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following communication from the Secretary of War, which was read and referred to the Committee on Claims:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE QUARTERMASTER GENERAL OF THE ARMY,
Washington, December 10, 1914.

The SPEAKER,
House of Representatives.

SIR: There were submitted with the estimates for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, the following measures for reimbursement of the officers named of the amounts sets opposite each for the loss of mounts by fire and other causes, viz:

Relief of Lieut. H. E. Miner	$160
Relief of Maj. H. E. Ely	200
Relief of Lieut. Sloan Doak	150
Relief of Lieut. J. A. Barry	135
Relief of Lieut. Waldo C. Potter	375
Relief of Lieut. J. F. Taulbee	200

These items will be found on page 336 of the Book of Estimates, 1916.

During the hearing of the Quartermaster General before the House Committee on Military Affairs on the Army bill for 1916 the chairman of the committee stated that, in his opinion, these measures could not properly be acted upon by that committee, but should be presented to the Committee on Claims. It is therefore requested that the estimates in question be withdrawn from the House Committee on Military Affairs and transmitted to the House Committee on Claims.

Respectfully,

LINDLEY M. GARRISON,
Secretary of War.

Mr. MANN. This letter should be referred, Mr. Speaker. I think that is sufficient. Claims have no place in the estimates, anyhow.

The SPEAKER. Yes. The letter is referred to the Committee on Claims.

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock a. m. to-morrow. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I want to give notice that we would like to pass this legislative bill to-morrow, if we can keep the Members on the floor.

Mr. MANN. You can not expect to pass it to-morrow.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman is aware of the fact that we are to take a recess before dinner to-morrow.

Mr. MANN. We have a night session to-morrow.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Very well.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 56 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, December 15, 1914, at 11 o'clock a. m.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, December 15, 1914.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we come before Thee that we may be possessed with the passion of eternity. The pressing duties of this little world and this little life bring us constantly to the thought of things that pertain to time. Within this sphere our whole duty lies, but in the upper range and reach of life are our aspiration and our destiny. Preserve us from that littleness of life that would keep us constantly with our eyes on this earth only. May not our appetites, starved small by the continual view and use of this world, rob us of our higher aspirations and the hopes that are eternal. Speak to us out of Thine own eternity that we may live the larger life. For Christ's sake. Amen.

WAR SUPPLIES TO BELLIGERENT NATIONS.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, yesterday morning, when I was absent from the Senate on committee service, the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations asked that the bill (S. 6862) to forbid the furnishing of war materials to belligerent nations, introduced by me, be transferred from the Committee on Military Affairs to the Committee on Foreign Relations. The Senator, I understand, acted upon the supposition that the bill had been referred to that committee upon my request. That was a mistake. The reference was made by the Chair without direction from me, and I think very properly, to the Committee on Military Affairs. I inquired about it later and was so informed, and expressed my willingness that it should remain in that committee, giving as my reason that it would probably be acted upon more speedily by that committee than by the Committee on Foreign Relations. So the Chair, no doubt, understood that the reference was made at my request. I have no objection, however, if the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations thinks it should go to his committee that the transfer should be made.

Mr. STONE. I will state to the Senator that that was done yesterday.

Mr. WORKS. I understood that the Senator very courteously allowed the matter to go over until I might be present in the Senate. Am I mistaken in that?

Mr. STONE. I will say to the Senator that when I called it up yesterday morning in the first instance neither the Senator from California nor the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN], the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, was present, and I asked that the matter might be deferred until one or both of them should be present. Afterwards I had a conference with the Senator from California, and he said, substantially, what he has said now. Still, I waited until the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs came in, when I asked him his opinion of it. He concurred with my view, and on his request the Committee on Military Affairs was discharged from the further consideration of the bill and it was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, that was done in my absence.

Mr. STONE. I had no idea the Senator objected to that disposition, from what he had said to me.

Mr. WORKS. I am not complaining of the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations. I do desire, however, to say a word respecting the bill and its transfer from one committee to the other.

It is important, in my judgment, that the bill should be speedily considered. My only fear was that the Committee on Foreign Relations, being engaged in what may be regarded as more important business, should allow this bill to remain unacted upon.

I may say, Mr. President, that the bill has evidently been misunderstood by some people, judging from the letters I have received respecting it. It seems to be understood that it would prevent the aid that is being extended now to innocent noncombatants who have suffered on account of the war. That was not intended, and the bill should have no such effect as that.

But, sir, we were not responsible for the beginning of this war. We have not been responsible for any lives that have been lost or property destroyed; but if the people of this country prolong the war by the aid that is being extended to the belligerents, or any of them, we will be responsible for the lives that are lost and the property destroyed by the continuance of the war.

We are claiming to be in favor of universal peace. We are not acting up to our pretensions. If the business men of this country are not patriotic enough and humanitarian enough to withhold the supplies that are being sent by the millions of dollars worth to the contending armies, I submit the Government should prevent the sale and furnishing of these materials to the belligerents. It was only with that object in view that the bill was introduced, and I think it extended no further than the supply of materials directly to the nations concerned or their armies.

I have here the proof of an editorial that is to appear or may have appeared, in the Journal of the Knights of Labor, which expresses some views upon this subject that I think may well be considered, and I ask leave to print it in the RECORD as a part of my remarks, without reading.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[From the Journal of the Knights of Labor.]

BOYCOTT WAR; A PRACTICAL PLAN FOR PEACE—WE CAN STOP EUROPEAN WAR, IF OUR PRAYERS ARE HONEST—SENATOR WORKS'S BILL.

The Chief Executive and the people of this Nation are constantly proclaiming their intense desire that the war shall end in Europe and that peace shall prevail everywhere. That is the right sort of feeling to have and maintain, but to a considerable extent the attitude and doings of the American people toward this war and concerning the bringing about of peace in the world seem to be mere hypocritical pretense. Our actions belie our words.

Ever since this war began we find everywhere expressed the faith and hope of the people that we are to gain great prosperity thereby and are to become richer by the vast trading which it is claimed is thereby opened up to us. Now, this is all very well and proper under certain conditions. But if the sending of our exports abroad has a tendency to aid the combatants and to continue warfare in Europe, then, if we square our actions with our words, we will not send these warring peoples a dollar's worth of our products until they stop fighting. We are a lot of greedy hypocrites as long as we express our desire for peace in Europe and at the same time continue to send to the nations at war there munitions of war or provisions which enable them to continue their warfare.

What is the actual situation to-day in this regard? We are daily reading in the press statements of vast contracts entered into by great manufacturing concerns in various parts of the country made with the different Governments now carrying on this war for bullets, for swords, for cannon and rifles, for bayonets, for powder, for submarines and aeroplanes—for every sort of implements and supplies used in carrying on modern warfare. We read also of vast numbers of horses and mules gathered up in the far and near sections of the country and shipped abroad to be tortured and shot to death in bloody warfare. We read of contracts made to furnish vast supplies of clothing and uniforms and everything that soldiers need. And we are congratulating ourselves and shaking hands and telling each other about the prosperity to come to us because of these contracts. The more we read and think about these contracts the greedier we become, and the great masters of industry are planning to make great gains out of these contracts, and American wageworkers are filled with hope and joy at the prospect of gaining work in the production of these things.

Now, if we stop to think about it we would at once realize that if we should carry out our protestations for peace we would at once cease to make these contracts, to make these implements of warfare, cease to furnish these supplies, and would show ourselves to be an honest and great people thereby. For it is plain that if these warring nations could not secure these things they could no longer carry on this monstrous and hideous warfare. Probably the shutting off of these munitions and supplies on part of our country would end this war within less than 30 days. There is no place in all the world where the nations can get these necessary weapons and supplies except from this country. From sheer inability to continue fighting every nation would shortly be obliged to make peace, and the war would soon be ended.

Will we do this thing? The answer is we shall not do this thing because our protestations and prayers for peace are in the main sheer hypocrisy, and beneath them all lies unbounded greed. Even the neutrality to which as a Nation we are pledged is to-day a mere sham. Our claim of national neutrality has been made in such terms which, if we were honest and just toward all the nations engaged in this war, we would be bound to hold that none of these munitions and supplies could be sent, no matter by what sort of subterfuge they may be shipped and disguised or by what roundabout ways forwarded to the particular nation to whom they have been sold. As it is the very spirit and form of an honest neutrality is being daily violated and set at naught by our great producers and exporters of munitions of war, some of them the very men whose protestations and demands for peace and the cessation of warfare are the loudest. This is a sham through and through, and, of course, we will keep it up as long as there is a dollar in it.

The principle of all this thing, and the possibility of maintaining the same, is also embodied in the furnishing of food products to the nations at war. Our wheat and corn and flour and meat and scores of other things which we are sending to these nations, in result, perpetuate this warfare and enable them to continue their fighting. Without our products, some of the chief nations engaged in war to-day would be speedily brought to starvation point. It would be utterly impossible for their armies to be fed, and so great would be the needs and necessity of the working masses there that the cry for bread would drown out all thought of war. It may be said that this would be a severe measure to take in the name of peace, but it would be merciful indeed compared to the atrocities and destruction and death which the furnishing of such food products enables these countries to continue in this abominable warfare.

Of course we would lose, on the surface of things, much money by shutting off the volume of our food supplies in this way. But in the long run we could well afford to do this very thing, for a large share of the destruction and poverty due to this warfare has been and will be distributed to us now and in years to come. We have already levied a huge "war tax" against ourselves on account of this European war. As for our own needs and necessities, we are not obliged to buy a dollar's worth of anything from Europe to-day. We can provide from our own broad areas and magnificent resources everything of absolute need for our own welfare and necessity.

If commerce between this country and the warring nations should be absolutely brought to a standstill, for the reasons above referred to, we should show ourselves to be the noblest nation that ever existed on this earth—and the present European warfare would be ended and a long step taken toward the establishment of universal peace.

Under our Constitution no export taxes nor duties can be laid. Whether or not Congress could make a law forbidding the furnishing of munitions of war and supplies of any or of all nature to the warring nations is a thing which has never yet been determined nor discussed. But that question will soon come up, and the manner in which it is discussed and decided will test the sincerity and honesty of the American people in this their almost universal prayers here being expressed for the cessation of European warfare.

The question will come up in the consideration to be made in Congress upon Senate bill 6862, just introduced by Senator WORKS, of California, the main feature of which is outlined in the following clause:

"Be it enacted, etc., That it shall be unlawful for any person, corporation, or association, a citizen or resident of, or doing business in the United States, to contract for, sell, supply, or furnish to any nation engaged in war, or its armies or soldiers, any food, clothing, supplies, arms, ammunition, horses, or war supplies of any kind, whether the same be contraband of war or not."

Mr. WORKS. In view of the consequences of delay and the continued supply of these munitions to the armies of the belligerent nations, I simply want to appeal to the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations to bring this matter to the attention of his committee at an early date so that it may receive fair and prompt consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Missouri before he makes a motion to go into executive session if it is his opinion that the executive session will consume the balance of the day. The reason why I ask the question is because I am very anxious to get the unfinished business, the immigration bill, before the Senate and to push it to a speedy conclusion, whatever that may be. If we can get the executive matter out of the way speedily, I will be very glad to conserve all the time that is possible. I should like to know what the Senator's opinion is as to whether it would consume the balance of the day.

Mr. STONE. I hope not. The condition, the Senator understands, is such that I can not speak with any great degree of certainty in reply to his question. I think the matter ought to be disposed of at once, and I think we had better proceed with it.

Mr. CUMMINS. Before the motion of the Senator from Missouri is put I should like to make a suggestion to him. I do not believe very much progress could be made to-day upon the treaty, for reasons that were understood last night. While I do not intend to put any undue obstruction in the way, I had hoped that the Senator from Missouri would see his way clear to allow this day to pass without an executive session and take up the treaty to-morrow morning, with the idea then of going right through with it and reaching a vote. I fear that a good deal of time to-day might be, in a sense, wasted.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, of course I do not wish to waste time. I know that the Senator from South Carolina and other Senators are anxious to proceed as speedily as may be with the bill to which he refers. I have no wish to stand in the way or to obstruct the consideration of that measure. I can not understand why there should be any long delay in getting a vote upon the convention or treaty. I asked yesterday that we should agree upon a time to vote, and I was unable to get unanimous consent for the day I named—Thursday, I think it was. I will ask now if I can have unanimous consent for a vote. I will ask unanimous consent that we shall take a vote on the resolutions pending or any amendments thereto on Saturday next, beginning at 3 o'clock. If that is done, I shall not ask for an executive session to-day and will let the matter go over until to-morrow, awaiting the presence of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], who, as I am informed, desires to be heard on the subject before action is taken. I have every wish in the world to accommodate him. If this unanimous consent is given, the Senate will have, and the Senator from Wisconsin will have, Wednesday and a part of Thursday, such part of it as is not taken up by the special order which I think the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] has had fixed for that day, Friday, and Saturday until the time of voting. That would practically give three days for the consideration of the matter. Will the Senator from Iowa agree to that?

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, the first suggestion I have to make is that the request, under the vote which the Senate passed a day or two ago, ought to be made in executive session rather than in open session. I should be very glad to have this matter considered in open session, but the Senate has voted otherwise.

Mr. STONE. I think the criticism of the Senator from Iowa is well taken, and that that ought to be done.

Mr. CUMMINS. I have no objection to telling the Senator from Missouri exactly how I feel about the matter.

This treaty affects directly and very substantially the bill we passed last October known as the seamen's bill. Everybody recognizes that; everybody admits it. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is the author of that bill; he is not here, but will be here to-night; and I feel that no such agreement should be made in his absence. I am sure the Senator from Missouri will understand my position about that. So far as I am concerned nothing could please me more than to have an agreement to take a vote next Saturday; indeed, I see no reason for prolonging it even that far, but I do not feel under the circumstances that an agreement should be entered into until we have the presence of the Senator from Wisconsin, assuming that he will be here to-morrow morning.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I have not any doubt the Senator from Iowa is addressing the Senate with the utmost good faith and sincerity, and I think under the circumstances——

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. May I ask the Senator from Missouri what is his proposition—that we begin on Thursday at 3 o'clock and reach a vote not later than when?

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I rise to a question of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire will state his point of order.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is that a matter that is purely executive is being discussed in open session.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has been so impressed, and would have long ago so ruled had the question been raised. This discussion is not in order in the open session of the Senate.

Mr. STONE. I think the Chair is entirely correct in that. Therefore I was about to remark, Mr. President, that under the circumstances I shall not move an executive session at this time.

REGULATION OF IMMIGRATION.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, as the Senator from Missouri does not intend to make the motion to proceed to the consideration of executive business, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the immigration bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6060) to regulate the immigration of aliens to and the residence of aliens in the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 9, page 18, line 23, before the word "physical," the Committee on Immigration propose to strike out the words "mental or," so as to read:

It shall also be unlawful for any such person to bring to any port of the United States any alien afflicted with any physical defect of a nature which may affect his ability to earn a living, as contemplated in section 3 of this act.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, one moment, before that amendment is adopted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The statement of the Chair in reference to the amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. REED. Mr. President we have previously had under discussion a provision somewhat similar to this, and it was referred back to the committee, I believe, at the committee's request. I wish to ask the chairman of the committee, before we pass upon the amendment——

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. There is a difference in this case, Mr. President. The other clause had reference to the contract-labor law, while this has reference to the examination of aliens who come in. It imposes a restriction on those who bring them in, whereby under certain circumstances they are excluded. This provision has reference entirely to the fitness of such aliens physically and has no reference to the contract-labor law at all. The words "mental or" are proposed to be stricken out because there are already incorporated in the bill certain provisions with reference to the mental fitness of aliens proposed to be brought to this country. It will be remembered that previously we had some discussion in reference to "psychopathic inferiority," and so forth. This comes under that clause. Therefore, that having been provided for, the words "mental or" are proposed to be stricken out, and this clause is restricted purely to physical fitness.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the physical features of this section, or, to state it more correctly, the provisions of the section relating to the physical conditions, are as much covered by the clauses in the preceding section to which the Senator from South Carolina has reference as are the mental qualifications covered by that same section. If it is necessary to have this section in order to protect us against those who are physically deficient, it ought to be equally necessary to have it in order to protect us against those who are mentally deficient.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I beg to call the attention of the Senator from Missouri to the fact that this applies to transportation companies, and that there is ample provision made in the different sections of the bill, iterating and reiterating the fact that aliens will be examined to ascertain their mental capacity. It is hardly fair to impose upon the steamship companies, as set forth in this provision, the penalty for bringing in aliens who are mentally defective that would accrue in cases where there are physical defects which can easily be detected and are detected at the port of embarkation. Therefore, as I say, if the Senator from Missouri has properly read and digested the bill, he will realize that ample provision is made for the exclusion of those mentally deficient as well as those who are physically deficient.

Mr. REED. Now, Mr. President, I do not agree with the Senator. Reading the context——

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I suggest that the Senator read section 9.

Mr. REED. The section is directed against the transportation companies, and it provides that it shall be unlawful to bring from a foreign country to this country—

Any alien afflicted with idiocy, insanity, imbecility, feeble-mindedness, epilepsy, constitutional psychopathic inferiority, chronic alcoholism, tuberculosis in any form, or a loathsome or dangerous contagious disease.

That is the prohibitive clause. The second clause, the one now under consideration, provides:

It shall also be unlawful for any such person to bring to any port of the United States any alien afflicted with any mental or physical defect of a nature which may affect his ability to earn a living, as contemplated in section 3 of this act.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Now, if the Senator from Missouri——

Mr. REED. Just one moment, Mr. President. With all the courtesy in the world to the Senator, I should like to finish my sentence. The prohibitive clauses which precede this, so far as they apply to mental conditions, are limited to insanity, imbecility, feeble-mindedness, epilepsy, and constitutional psychopathic inferiority, and also relate to physical defects.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Now, Mr. President, if the Senator from Missouri will allow me——

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I will allow the Senator when I have concluded my sentence.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri has the floor, and has twice refused to yield.

Mr. REED. I will yield in a moment, but not just now.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Take all the time you want.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I intend to take all the time I want if the Senator desires to be discourteous, because he is proceeding by my courtesy and I am not proceeding by his.

If the term "mental" is stricken out in this provision, there may be a doubt introduced into the bill as to certain ailments. The question may arise whether or not they are covered by the terms of the bill. If the clause is left in as it was written in the House, that doubt will be removed. If the clause here is to be stricken out as to mental defects, then the whole of the clause relating to physical and mental defects should be stricken out for the same reason.

The Senator has stated that the reason the word "mental" is stricken out is because it may be difficult to discover a mental ailment. It certainly is no more difficult to discover an ordinary mental ailment than it is to discover constitutional psychopathic inferiority, which is left in the bill and which, if I understand the term or if the committee understands the term or if anybody understands the term—and nobody appears to understand the term—is in some vague, indefinite, and nebulous manner intended to refer to some sort of hereditary taints. So that it seems to me the term "mental" ought to be left in this bill at this point or else we ought to exempt these aliens entirely from any examination with reference to any character of mental diseases, whether psychopathic or whatever kind they may be.

Now I will yield to the Senator very gladly for any interruption he desires to make.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I am very much obliged to the Senator for his courtesy, and I most abjectly apologize to him for my failure to draw the proper line of demarcation in interrupting him. I was a little hasty, perhaps, a moment ago in seeking to make the explanation.

I should like to state to the Senator that the reasons given for striking out the words "mental or," on page 5, line 5, are these: The committee in its report, after having gone over all these matters, makes this statement:

On page 5, line 8, strike out the words "mental or," so as to make the factor that determines rejection of the mentally defective the mere existence of the defect, not, as with the physically defective, the question whether the defect affects earning capacity.

An alien coming into this country when he is mentally defective is rejected because of the mere existence of the defect. He may not be afflicted with a loathsome or contagious disease; he may be physically defective, but yet not to the extent of affecting either his mental or earning capacity. In that case he is admitted. If he is so physically defective that he is likely to become a public charge, then he is rejected; but the words "mental or" in this case were stricken out so as not in any way to raise a question or jeopardize the preceding clauses and sections of the bill which provide for the rejection of an immigrant who is at all mentally defective.

The amendment is recommended for the purpose of clearness, and is designed to restrict that provision to the physically defective, giving the right to determine whether the physical defect affects the immigrant's earning capacity. If it does not, as I have said, he comes in, while if it does he is rejected; but if he is mentally defective, as set forth in the first part of the bill where ample provision is made concerning those mentally defective, he is rejected.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, that does not follow at all. There are many forms of mental ailments that are not covered by the specifications found in lines 5 and 6, which I read a few moments ago. The word "mental" ought to remain in the bill. It does not militate against nor limit, but rather extends, the meaning of the preceding phrase. Striking it out must mean that the committee is of the opinion that we ought to receive into this country all kinds of mentally defectives, unless they are afflicted with constitutional psychopathic inferiority, or insanity, or imbecilty, or feeble-mindedness. At the same time that we are writing into the bill a provision excluding those who are not educated, we propose by this amendment to admit those who are mentally unsound if they do not come within the specific classification set forth in lines 5 and 6.

It seems to me that it introduces an element of doubt into the bill; it weakens the bill; and while I am opposed to the educational test I certainly am opposed to admitting into this country persons afflicted with any form of mental disease. I do not think we ought to make the United States the harbor and refuge and dumping ground of those who may be afflicted with some form of mental disorder that is not specifically named in the bill. If we are going back to exclude those who are afflicted with constitutional psychopathic inferiority, we ought to exclude those who are afflicted with any other kind of mental inferiority; for it is as bad to be feeble-minded or idiotic by your own act or by your own misfortune as it is to be by heredity and by virtue of the sins of your ancestors or their misfortunes. So I think the word ought to stay in.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, in order that the Senate may not be confused at all, I hope every Senator will read section 9. It is very apparent that the section covers all possible cases of such mental defects as might perpetuate themselves after the alien has come into this country. It does not appear that physical disability, such as contagious disease, and so forth, has been so fully covered that one physically unable to earn a living would be excluded. He is not afflicted with any mental disease; he is not afflicted with any contagious disease, but has a physical defect which might result in his becoming a public charge; and that clause was put in simply for the purpose of being sure that such persons shall not be admitted. It is already in the existing law.

> It shall also be unlawful for any such person to bring to any port of the United States any alien afflicted with any mental or physical defect.

Now, the mental part is already amply provided for, and the repetition of it rather confuses the purport of this clause. Its purport is that when one is neither mentally nor physically incapacitated, from the standpoint of a disease or otherwise, except in such a way as might incapacitate him from earning a living and render him likely to become a public charge, then it is unlawful for him to come in. Our immigration officials have inspected him; he has passed the mental test; he has passed the disease test, but upon examination he is found to have some physical defect that is neither a disease nor a mental aberration and therefore is likely to become a public charge.

The committee and those in charge of framing this bill were doing their best to preserve as nearly as possible the standard of citizenship from a mental and physical standpoint. Striking out the words "mental or" does not in any sense of the word show any disposition to allow one mentally defective to come into the country, in that we have amply provided for it elsewhere and have restricted this clause to what might have been overlooked in the preceding clauses—that some one otherwise admissible might possibly become a public charge.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. REED. I ask for a roll call, Mr. President.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, before the vote is taken, if I may be permitted, I wish to make just a few observations.

I think the provision in this bill excludes any person with any physical defects. I desire to ask the chairman if it is not his understanding that the provision which we now have under consideration simply means that a person may have an affliction and yet, if he is able to earn a living, the Commissioner of Immigration or the Secretary of Labor may permit such a person to enter. That was my understanding when this provision was discussed, and I should like to ask the chairman of the committee if I correctly understand it.

I will put my inquiry in another form. When this provision was taken up I understood that it was simply a limitation. A person may have a physical defect, but if it is believed that he is capable of earning a living he may be permitted to enter. Is not that correct?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Why, of course; that is right.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question, and I will make a preliminary statement. A reading of the section will make plain the effect of this amendment:

> It shall also be unlawful for any such person to bring to any port of the United States any alien afflicted with any mental or physical defect of a nature which may affect his ability to earn a living.

If you should strike out the word "physical," then a man physically unable to earn a living could come in. If you strike out the word "mental," then one mentally unable to earn a living could come in. By striking out the word "mental," you leave it open to admit to this country those who are mentally unable to earn a living, while excluding those who are physically unable to earn a living.

That is the effect of this amendment. If it is fully covered before, it is not more fully covered than the physical requirements are fully covered.

I am opposed to striking out any provision of this bill which requires a man to be of sound mind, sound brain, sound intellect, when he comes to this country. The effect of this amendment is to exclude the physically deficient and admit the mentally deficient, all of which is in the interest of a higher civilization.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, it seems to me the position taken by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] is eminently correct. I think it will be found that at most of the ports of entry many foreign vessels that come in bring those who are mentally defective and land them on our shores. I know it has been our experience in Oregon.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. If the Senator from Oregon will read section 9 in its entirety, together with other sections, he will find that ample legislation is proposed to be enacted to exclude the mentally defective. Such ample legislation is not proposed as to exclude all the physically defective. Therefore this provision is put in.

We have already provided for all possible mental contingencies. Now we say that those who are mentally sound and physically sound, who have not a disease that is contagious or dangerous, who have not any mental defects, but who may be physically unable to earn a living from the loss of an arm, the loss of a leg, or something of that kind, shall be excluded. If in the judgment of the inspecting officer the person is physically defective in such a way that he is likely to become a public charge, he is to be excluded.

I hope the Senator from Oregon will not get the idea that we have not made all possible provision for the inspection and rejection of all mentally defective persons. In order to have it clear-cut that we wanted to exclude from this country those who were physically unable to earn a living we put in this provision.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. But I should like to ask the Senator why he makes an exception in that particular part of the section in favor of those who may be mentally defective?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Because the committee were of the opinion that we had already covered every possible mental contingency.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Then it certainly can do no harm to leave it in there as a matter of precaution. I hope the committee amendment will be rejected.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, if the Senator will refer to section 3, on page 4 of the bill, he will find that the matter is fully covered. It reads:

> That the following classes of aliens shall be excluded from admission into the United States: All idiots, imbeciles, feeble-minded persons, epileptics, insane persons—

And so on. Now, an alien sound in mind, but who may have lost a limb, a finger, or who may have some other defect or ailment, yet may be perfectly capable of earning a living. That is the reason why the provision was put in the bill; but we struck out the word "mental." The committee were of the opinion that any person who was not mentally sound should not be admitted; that if his mind was defective he should not be admitted; but he may have lost a limb or lost a finger or a hand and still may be capable of earning a living. That is what this amendment means, and all this provision means.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, if you intend to keep out of this country people who are mentally defective, I do not see why you should strike out the provision which does exclude them.

It is known to be a fact—not susceptible of proof, however, I guess—that quite a large number of mentally defective persons are shipped into this country. They are rather encouraged to emigrate from other countries, and New York and other seaboard States receive quite a number of such immigrants whom they soon have to place in insane asylums and take care of for the remainder of their lives. There are some States so unkindly as to ship their insane persons into adjoining States, and we have passed laws in Oregon putting a stop to that. It has become a great burden.

If there is any doubt that this bill will exclude that class of immigrants, the words under discussion should be left in the bill. Why do you strike out the words that specifically exclude mentally defective persons if you are trying to exclude them?

Mr. GRONNA. If the Senator will read the whole clause, he will find that even if these words are stricken out those who are mentally unsound can not be admitted.

Mr. LANE. Yes; such persons as you define are excluded. Here, however, is a broader term, which covers all defects of mentality; and when you come to that broader term it takes in all of the others, and is the only term necessary for you to use. I am not speaking to the Senator personally, but impersonally. The committee strikes out that comprehensive term and confines itself to certain specific definitions of the types of mental defect against which it wishes to pass a law of exclusion.

It seems to me that if you are to strike out anything you should begin on your psychopathic constitutional inferiority, epileptics, feeble-minded persons, imbeciles, idiots, and other forms and types of mental defects, some of which are hard to define, and cover the matter with the broad and comprehensive term of a mental defect. That will cover them all.

That attracted my attention. The chairman says that a man may be mentally defective, and yet, provided he can earn a living, he can still come into this country; but if he can not earn a living, or has failed to show his ability to do so, the bill will exclude him. If the ability to accumulate money is to be a test, neither Thomas Jefferson nor George Washington, if they had tried to emigrate to this country, could have been admitted, for they lost money in their business; and the blessed Savior himself never would have gotten within the 3-mile limit.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I am sure the Senator from Oregon wants to quote me correctly. I did not say that a person might be mentally defective and yet earn a living. However, I do not desire to discuss that phase of the question longer, but simply to add the testimony of a member of the splendid profession of which the Senator from Oregon [Mr. LANE] is also a member.

Some of the leading physicians in New York and Massachusetts, as well as in the Northern and New England States, have compiled statistics to show that the increase of insanity among immigrants is appalling, and has become a tremendous burden upon the taxpayers of the States in which are located the large ports where these immigrants come. In order that the immigration officials might have ample authority of law to reject anyone who has in him a hereditary taint that might at any time reproduce itself in a violent form, they incorporated in the bill this term, so very appalling and startling to the layman, "constitutional psychopathic inferiority."

With the permission of the Senate, I should like to read a statement from Dr. Salmon, of the National Committee for Mental Hygiene, explanatory of a quite lengthy document that has been sent in, using very numerous technical terms, all of which I am quite sure are to the point when properly understood. At any rate, I take it for granted that these physicians, who came in contact with the appalling conditions that the committee were convinced exist in the hospitals of the insane and mentally defective in the States and in the places to which I have referred, have collaborated with the committee in order to protect to the fullest possible extent the continuance of this very burdensome and dangerous immigration. Dr. Salmon says:

THE NATIONAL COMMITTEE FOR MENTAL HYGIENE,
50 Union Square, New York City, December 12, 1914.

Hon. ELLISON D. SMITH,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR SMITH: My attention has been called to the debate in the Senate December 10, 1914, on the proposed amendment to the immigration law which adds "constitutional psychopathic inferiority" to the excludable conditions.

This is one of the amendments which was suggested by a number of officials dealing with insanity and mental deficiency in the different States and by bodies of alienists last winter. It has been urged by the National Committee for Mental Hygiene, the American Medico-Psychological Association, the New York Psychiatrical Society, the National Association for the Study of Epilepsy, the mental hygiene committee of the New York State Charities Aid Association, and a number of State medical societies. It was also recommended by Dr. Spencer L. Dawes in his report to the governor of New York as special commissioner on the alien insane; by Dr. L. Vernon Briggs, representing the Massachusetts State Board of Insanity; by Dr. Frank Woodbury, representing the committee in lunacy of the Pennsylvania State Board of Charities; and by Dr. Hugh Young, representing the Maryland State Lunacy Commission.

It is felt by all who have devoted especial study to the matter that the elimination of any of the amendments proposed for the exclusion of insane and mentally defective immigrants would be a distinct loss, for all of them were suggested only after very careful study of the problem at ports of entry and in public institutions of the United States which bear the heavy burden of the care of insane and mentally defective aliens.

Respectfully, yours, THOMAS W. SALMON.

Therefore, as they know more perfectly than I, or any layman, the proper terms to use to exclude that class who come under their observation as placing a burden upon the taxpayers and upon the charity commissions and become a menace to the future population of this country, we have incorporated it at their suggestion and upon their assertion that it is sufficient.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, in reply I will say I am not objecting to the incorporation of those terms, but later along the larger and more full term which covers all mental defects is stricken out.

It shall also be unlawful for any such person to bring to any port of the United States any alien afflicted with any—

The words "mental or" are stricken out—physical defect of a nature which may affect his ability to earn a living.

It seems to me that by leaving in the word "mental" it would enlarge the scope of the bill. If it was intended to exclude mentally defective persons, why not leave it in?

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. LANE. Certainly.

Mr. GRONNA. The Senator, I think, misapprehends the meaning of this language. It was intended to give to the immigration authorities some discretion with reference to physical defects, but by striking out the words "mental or" they will be given no discretion, but will have to exclude all who are mentally defective. That is provided for in section 3. If the word "mental" which is in the bill is not stricken out, then aliens whose minds are defective may be permitted to land. By striking it out, they will not be permitted to land in this country. That is the effect of this language.

Mr. LANE. One of the most intelligent men I ever knew, one of the most accomplished and kindly men, a man who could earn his living anywhere, for 11 months in the year was as sane as anybody, but the other 30 days in the year he was the handiest and most accurate person with a butcher knife at a jugular vein that there was extant, and such a man could pass the immigration authorities under the terms of this bill. That man could earn a living, but he was an expensive proposition and dangerous withal. He was not suffering from any psychopathic constitutional inferiority. He was born as good as the next man, and with real blue blood in his veins, but at certain periods a form of circular insanity seized him and he was an interesting neighbor.

Mr. GRONNA. This provision simply seeks to keep out such men as that. We want immigrants who are sane for 12 months during the year and not for only 11 months. That is the idea.

Mr. LANE. He was mentally defective, but not under the terms of this bill. I think you had better leave in the word "mentally." That is my impression. I may be mistaken.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President, the discussion has proceeded to some extent upon the theory that section 9, on page 18, is the section which recites the classes which are to be excluded; but that is not the fact. Section 3 of the bill contains a list of the excluded classes. Section 9 treats wholly upon the question of the examination of those making application for admission into the United States. I should like to call attention to a fact which has been overlooked to some extent, that this relates to the examination which is to be made on the other side of the water by the steamship companies before bringing immigrants to this country. Section 9 reads:

That it shall be unlawful for any person, including any transportation company other than railway lines entering the United States from foreign contiguous territory, or the owner, master, agent, or consignee of any vessel, to bring to the United States either from a foreign country or any insular possession of the United States any alien afflicted with idiocy, insanity, imbecility, feeble-mindedness, epilepsy, constitutional psychopathic inferiority, chronic alcholism, tuberculosis in any form, or a loathsome or dangerous contagious disease, and if it shall appear to the satisfaction of the Secretary of Labor that any alien so brought to the United States was afflicted with any of the said diseases or disabilities at the time of foreign embarkation—

This is the clause to which I wish to call attention—and that the existence of such disease or disability might have been detected by means of a competent medical examination at such time, such person or transportation company, or the master, agent, owner, or consignee of any such vessel, shall pay to the collector of customs of the customs district in which the port of arrival is located the sum of $200 for each and every violation of the provisions of this section.

It will be seen that this provision relates to the duty of the steamship company in making the examination at the port of embarkation and is limited to the diseases which are mentioned in the clause from which I have read.

Now, then, we come to the second proposition, which is that—

It shall also be unlawful for any such person to bring to any port of the United States any alien afflicted with any mental or physical defect of a nature which may affect his ability to earn a living, as contemplated in section 3 of this act.

In that case a penalty of $25 is imposed. This section defines the two classes of cases. The former section covers every kind of mental defect, and if that might have been discovered by a competent medical examination at the port of embarkation and yet the person is brought in here the steamship company is fined $200.

Now, we come to the second proposition. The committee thought it best to strike out the word "mental" and make it apply to purely physical defects of a nature which might affect the ability to earn a living in order to make it certain, clear, and distinct, and so that there should be no misapprehension as to the nature of it. For that reason I favored the amendment.

I wish to say in this connection that there are no provisions in the bill that I feel are more important than those contained in this section, because, with the more than a million of immigrants who are coming to this country every year, the burden of the examination at all our ports becomes not only expensive but difficult. It has to be conducted with a certain degree of haste, particularly when we have from 3,000 to 4,000 to be examined in a single day at Ellis Island. We have here a proposition that is better than having Government officers stationed at the ports abroad, because with this penalty of $200 upon every steamship company that violates the provision and brings a person whose condition might have been discovered by competent medical examination, we have compelled them to establish a corps of medical officers at every port of embarkation in Europe. Not only that, but the effect of it has been that these examinations have left at those ports such large numbers that the German Government has been compelled, in order to protect itself from caring for such people, to establish along the border of Germany control stations, so called, at which persons coming from Russia or Austria or Italy or any other country to take German lines of steamers coming to the United States are compelled to pass an examination by surgeons who are paid for by the steamship companies. The result has been that in a single year we have excluded of the defective classes through those examinations 40,000 intended immigrants.

Now, with this explanation it will be seen why the committee struck out the word "mental." They laid a penalty of $200 upon the steamship company bringing in any of that class, and here they are laying a penalty of $25 for bringing in any person who has a physical defect, the nature of which might affect the ability of the alien to earn a living.

I do not consider this particularly important. It is a matter of definition, and one which we thought would make more clear the judgment and the duty of the medical officers who make the examinations abroad.

Mr. LANE. If it does make it more plain, I have no objection to it. It impressed me that it was a restriction. The very interesting lunatic of whom I spoke a few moments ago was an immigrant to this country. He passed the authorities at Ellis Island, and when he made his escape he passed the English authorities and went back home again to make more trouble. I think the provision ought to be made broad and general. If it covers the ground, well and good. It seems to me that we are using restrictive terms instead of broad and general terms which would cover the entire situation.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I am very sure that I can convince the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] that these words ought to remain in the bill and that his process of reasoning is erroneous.

Every lawyer knows that the greatest danger in the preparation of any instrument in law is in undertaking to particularize, because when you have particularized you are likely to have omitted some of the very evils you desire to reach. Hence, it is always regarded as the part of wisdom to employ a general term which embraces all the particulars.

Holding that thought in mind a moment, this bill undertakes to particularize. It names idiocy, insanity, imbecility, feeble-mindedness, epilepsy, constitutional psycopathic inferiority, and chronic alcoholism. Unless an immigrant is afflicted with one of those specific ailments, he can not be excluded under the terms of the bill. If the bill had contained the general language "or other mental inferiority of such degree as to render him incapable of earning a living," you would then have covered the case as you intended to cover it.

I undertake to say that the terms employed, broad and sweeping as they may appear to be, do not cover all the cases the committee desires to reach and which I, at least, want to have covered. Idiocy is a well-defined term and is indicative of a degree of mental inferiority which renders its victim practically helpless. Feeble-mindedness also is indicative of a condition so low that a man can not be said to be feeble-minded until he is in a condition where he is almost incapable of even taking care of his ordinary physical wants. Epilepsy, of course, we understand, is a well-defined disease or manifestation of a disease, doctors differing upon that. Insanity I need not pause to speak of. As near as I understand the term "constitutional psychopathic inferiority," it covers an inherited taint.

With those terms before the immigration commission, and with nothing else before it, when the officer examines a subject he must find the ground for his exclusion in one of those specific ailments. I do not think he should be so circumscribed. I think that if he discovers a creature is so inferior mentally, from any or all causes or combinations of causes, that he can not earn a living, that individual ought not to be permitted to land upon this soil.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ASHURST in the chair). Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. GRONNA. If the Senator will continue reading on page 5, he will find this language:

> Persons not comprehended within any of the foregoing excluded classes who are found to be and are certified by the examining surgeon as being mentally or physically defective.

Mr. REED. Very well; that is the absolute prohibition. Now we come to a penalty section and you omit that language from that section which penalizes the steamship company if it does bring in that class of people. You add the language found in the section which in general terms is already in other sections, and you then seek to fix a penalty upon the steamship company bringing in these defectives. If you had included in this section the language which the Senator from North Dakota has just read, there would be no objection, but instead of including that you are actually striking it out or striking out its equivalent. So you are left in the position of having, in the section to which the Senator referred, excluded all who are mentally inferior; but when you come to penalizing the steamship company you limit the penalty to a violation by it not of the general sweeping clause, but of certain specific inhibitions. You are traveling in a direction exactly opposite to that from which you desire to go.

If the committee will incorporate after the words "chronic alcoholism," or in any other place in this section, the language which the Senator from North Dakota has just read, then I shall make no complaint; but it is not now found there.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I believe the Senator from Missouri is correct in that statement; I think that language should be added after the word "alcoholism," in line 8, page 18; but certainly it should not be included in line 23, because it is a limitation; it simply gives the authorities a certain discretion. It is certainly my opinion that we should exclude all of those who are mentally unsound; and I believe the Senator is right in saying that the words "mentally defective" should be added after the word "alcoholism," or in some other place.

Mr. REED. If the words to which the Senator has referred are there inserted, I have no further objection, because that leaves the broad, sweeping inhibition of mental defectives, and the penalty which it is the purpose of this section to add, complete.

Then the second provision, which relates only to physical defects, provides a mild penalty. If it is in order, I suggest that the Senator from North Dakota might at this time offer the language he has just read. I have it not before me and did not catch the phrase as the Senator read it.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. If the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] will refresh his memory a bit, he will recall that this very phase of the question was discussed in committee. It was suggested that there might possibly be some mental defect that would escape observation either at the time of the foreign inspection or of the American inspection which the steamship company hereby proposed to be mulcted could not possibly detect, but which might manifest itself after the immigrant arrived. I hardly think it would be fair to incorporate a confusing and bungling provision under which a defect which it was practically impossible for those abroad to detect should be made the basis of a penalty when in all good faith the transportation company was attempting to comply with the provisions of the law.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from South Carolina will not characterize the phraseology which the committee itself has put into this bill, and which the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] is about to offer as an amendment, as bungling language. It was good enough for the committee to put into the bill at another place, and it ought to be sufficiently clear and lucid to adopt at this point.

So far, however, as the question of hardship to the steamship companies is concerned, I will say it is very much easier to discover a general condition of mental inferiority and stupidity and deficiency than it is to discover insanity, because insanity manifests itself in a thousand forms. Men walk the streets of every city of the United States and transact business who are afflicted with well-known forms of insanity.

It is also much easier to discover a condition of mental inferiority and stupidity, which is manifest all the time, than it is to discover epilepsy. There is no test known to the medical world that will enable any physician on earth to say whether a man is afflicted with epilepsy, particularly during its earlier stages, except the manifestation of a seizure itself. You can not get at it by feeling the pulse or looking at the tongue or examining the eye or the blood of the patient. Indeed, it is disputed to-day among the most learned physicians whether epilepsy is not merely a symptom of some other disorder, and what that disorder may be has never been determined. About all the medical world knows is that at recurring intervals the patient is seized with what we commonly denominate a fit. So the reason given by the Senator from South Carolina that the steamship company might be overreached and misled and might err through inadvertence and mistake applies a thousandfold more to the language which the committee has already adopted, and for the violation of the provisions of which the steamship company is to be heavily mulcted, than it does to the mere question of general stupidity and inferiority.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. POINDEXTER. As to the question which the Senator from Missouri is discussing, the injustice to the steamship company of penalizing them for bringing over a mentally defective person, which the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] says they might not be able to discover, I should like to call attention to the fact that it is all covered by the language of section 9, beginning in line 10. This condition is attached to the provision:

> And if it shall appear to the satisfaction of the Secretary of Labor that any alien so brought to the United States was afflicted with any of the said diseases or disabilities at the time of foreign embarkation, and that the existence of such disease or disability might have been detected by means of a competent medical examination at such time—

That would apply to mental defectives if the amendment suggested by the Senator from Missouri and by the Senator from North Dakota were adopted.

Mr. REED. I think the Senator's observations are absolutely just, and I suggest that the Senator from North Dakota might well offer that amendment at this time. If it is adopted, I shall have no further objection.

Mr. GRONNA. I wish to say that we are considering the amendment on line 23, and while I should be very glad to vote for an amendment adding the words "mentally defective," after the word "alcoholism," I hardly think it would be in order at this time.

Mr. REED. It would be in order unless somebody should make a point of order against it.

Mr. GRONNA. I will be very glad to offer it, and I offer it now.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I suggest that the amendment be passed over, and in the regular order of business, when the committee amendments have been disposed of, then any amendment will be in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Dakota, in line 8, would be an amendment to the committee amendment, and therefore would be in order.

Mr. GRONNA. The chairman of the committee has asked that the whole section go over, as I understand, with all amendments. That is perfectly satisfactory to me.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I ask simply that the amendment now pending may be passed over.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, before it is passed over I wish to suggest to the Senator who is in charge of the bill that if the amendment suggested by the Senator from North Dakota is not hereafter adopted, then the section could be made very clear by adding, after the word "mental," in line 23, the words "defect other than those above specifically named," so that it would read:

> It shall also be unlawful for any such person to bring to any port of the United States any alien affected with any mental defect other than those above specifically named or physical defect of a nature which may affect his ability to earn a living.

That would make the language clear, and I suggest it at this time for the consideration of the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the amendment will be passed over for the present. The Secretary will state the next amendment.

The SECRETARY. In section 9, page 19, line 5, before the word "physical," it is proposed by the committee to strike out the words "mental or."

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I ask that that amendment may also be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be passed over, in the absence of objection.

The next amendment was, in section 9, page 20, line 3, after the word "fine," to strike out "and costs, such sum to be named by the Secretary of Labor," so as to read:

> And no vessel shall be granted clearance papers pending the determination of the question of the liability to the payment of such fine, or while the fine remains unpaid, nor shall such fine be remitted or refunded: Provided, That clearance may be granted prior to the determination of such questions upon the deposit of a sum sufficient to cover such fine.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the committee.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee why those words should be stricken out?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. For the simple reason that no costs are involved in assessing an administrative fine.

Mr. REED. I am not sure but that the Government might be put to great expense. However, I do not desire to make a point as to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 10, page 20, line 5, after the word "the," to strike out "mandatory and unqualified"; in line 7, after the word "lines," to strike out "other than those lines"; in line 10, after the words "alien to," to insert "or providing a means for an alien to come to"; in line 15, after the word "such," to insert "person"; in line 22, after the word "the," to insert "person"; and in line 23, before the word "penalty," to strike out "pecuniary," so as to read:

> SEC. 10. That it shall be the duty of every person, including owners, officers, and agents of vessels or transportation lines, or international bridges or toll roads other than railway lines which may enter into a contract as provided in section 23 of this act, bringing an alien to or providing a means for an alien to come to any seaport or land border port of the United States to prevent the landing of such alien in the United States at any time or place other than as designated by the immigration officers, and the failure of any such person, owner, officer, or agent to comply with the foregoing requirements shall be deemed a misdemeanor and on conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine in each case of not less than $100 nor more than $1,000, or by imprisonment for a term not exceeding one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment; or, if in the opinion of the Secretary of Labor it is impracticable or inconvenient to prosecute the person, owner, master, officer, or agent of any such vessel, a penalty of $1,000 shall be a lien upon the vessel whose owner, master, officer, or agent violates the provisions of this section, and such vessel shall be libeled therefor in the appropriate United States court.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 21, after line 2, to strike out:

> SEC. 11. That whenever he may deem such action necessary the Secretary of Labor may, at the expense of the appropriation for the enforcement of this act, detail immigrant inspectors and matrons of the United States Immigration Service for duty on vessels carrying immigrant or emigrant passengers, or passengers other than first and second cabin passengers, between ports of the United States and foreign ports. On such voyages said inspectors and matrons shall remain in that part of the vessel where immigrant passengers are carried. It shall be the duty of such inspectors and matrons to observe such passengers during the voyage, and report to the immigration authorities in charge at the port of landing any information of value in determining the admissibility of such passengers under the laws regulating immigration of aliens into the United States. It shall further be the duty of such inspectors and matrons to observe violations of the provisions of such laws and the violation of such provisions of the "passenger act" of August 2, 1882, as amended, as relate to the care and treatment of immigrant passengers at sea, and report the same to the proper United States officials at ports of landing. Whenever the Secretary of Labor so directs, a surgeon of the United States Public Health Service, detailed to the Immigration Service, not lower in rank than a passed assistant surgeon, shall be received and carried on any vesssel transporting immigrant or emigrant passengers or passengers other than first and second cabin passengers between ports of the United States and foreign ports. Such surgeon shall be permitted to investigate and examine the condition of all immigrant and emigrant passengers in relation to any provisions of the laws regulating the immigration of aliens into the United States and such provisions of the "passenger act" of August 2, 1882, as amended, as relate to the care and treatment of immigrant passengers at sea, and shall immediately report any violation of said laws to the master or commanding officer of the vessel, and shall also report said violations to the Secretary of Labor within 24 hours after the arrival of the vessel at the port of entry in the United States. Such surgeon shall accompany the master or captain of the vessel in his visits to the sanitary officers of the ports of call during the voyage, and, should contagious or infectious diseases prevail at any port where passengers are received, he shall request all reasonable precautionary measures for the health of persons on board. Such surgeon on arrival at ports of the United States shall also, if requested by the examining board, furnish any information he may possess in regard to immigrants arriving on the vessel to which he has been detailed. While on duty such surgeons shall wear the prescribed uniform of their service and shall be provided with first-class accommodations on such vessel at the expense of the appropriation for the enforcement of this act. For every violation of this section any person, including any transportation company, owning or operating the vessel in which such violation occurs, shall pay to the collector of customs of the customs district in which the next United States port of arrival is located the sum of $1,000 for each and every day during which such violation continues, the term "violation" to include the refusal of any person having authority so to do to permit any such immigrant inspector, matron, or surgeon to be received on board such vessel, as provided in this section, and also the refusal of the master or commanding officer of any such vessel to permit the inspections and visits of any such surgeon, as provided in this section, and no vessel shall be granted clearance papers pending the determination of the question of the liability of such fine, or while it remains unpaid, nor shall such fine be remitted or refunded: Provided, That clearance may be granted prior to the determination of all such questions upon the deposit of a sum sufficient to cover such fine and costs, such sum to be named by the Secretary of Labor.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

SEC. 11. That for the purpose of determining whether aliens arriving at ports of the United States belong to any of the classes excluded by this act, either by reason of being afflicted with any of the diseases or mental or physical defects or disabilities mentioned in section 3 hereof, or otherwise, or whenever the Secretary of Labor has received information showing that any aliens are coming from a country or have embarked at a place where any of said diseases are prevalent or epidemic, the Commissioner General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of Labor, may direct that such aliens shall be detained on board the vessel bringing them, or in a United States immigration station at the expense of such vessel, as circumstances may require or justify, a sufficient time to enable the immigration officers and medical officers stationed at such ports to subject such aliens to an observation and examination sufficient to determine whether or not they belong to the said excluded classes by reason of being afflicted in the manner indicated: Provided, That, with a view to avoid undue delay in landing passengers or interference with commerce, the Commissioner General of Immigration may, with the approval of the Secretary of Labor, issue such regulations, not inconsistent with law, as may be deemed necessary to effect the purposes of this section: Provided further, That it shall be the duty of immigrant inspectors to report to the Commissioner General of Immigration the condition of all vessels bringing aliens to United States ports and whether such vessels conform in their arrangements to the requirements of the passenger act approved August 2, 1882, and amendments thereto.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I observe there is a very radical difference between the amendment proposed by the committee and section 11, for which it is a substitute. From the somewhat hasty examination I have been able to give these two sections, it seems to me they are worthy of very careful consideration by the Senate. Section 11 as passed by the House provided:

That whenever he may deem such action necessary the Secretary of Labor may, at the expense of the appropriation for the enforcement of this act, detail immigrant inspectors and matrons of the United States Immigration Service for duty on vessels carrying immigrant or emigrant passengers, or passengers other than first and second cabin passengers, between ports of the United States and foreign ports. On such voyages said inspectors and matrons shall remain in that part of the vessel where immigrant passengers are carried. It shall be the duty of such inspectors and matrons to observe such passengers during the voyage, and report to the immigration authorities in charge at the port of landing any information of value in determining the admissibility of such passengers under the laws regulating immigration of aliens into the United States. It shall further be the duty of such inspectors and matrons to observe violations of the provisions of such laws and the violation of such provisions of the "passenger act" of August 2, 1882, as amended, as relate to the care and treatment of immigrant passengers at sea, and report the same to the proper United States officials at ports of landing. Whenever the Secretary of Labor so directs, a surgeon of the United States Public Health Service, detailed to the Immigration Service, not lower in rank than a passed assistant surgeon, shall be received and carried on any vessel transporting immigrant or emigrant passengers or passengers other than first and second cabin passengers between ports of the United States and foreign ports. Such surgeon shall be permitted to investigate and examine the condition of all immigrant and emigrant passengers in relation to any provisions of the laws regulating the immigration of aliens into the United States and such provisions of the "passenger act" of August 2, 1882, as amended, as relate to the care and treatment of immigrant passengers at sea, and shall immediately report any violation of said laws to the master or commanding officer of the vessel, and shall also report said violations to the Secretary of Labor within 24 hours after the arrival of the vessel at the port of entry in the United States. Such surgeon shall accompany the master or captain of the vessel in his visits to the sanitary officers of the ports of call during the voyage, and, should contagious or infectious diseases prevail at any port where passengers are received, he shall request all reasonable precautionary measures for the health of persons on board. Such surgeon on arrival at ports of the United States shall also, if requested by the examining board, furnish any information he may possess in regard to immigrants arriving on the vessel to which he has been detailed. While on duty such surgeons shall wear the prescribed uniform of their service and shall be provided with first-class accommodations on such vessel at the expense of the appropriation for the enforcement of this act. For every violation of this section any person, including any transportation company owning or operating the vessel in which such violation occurs shall pay to the collector of customs of the customs district in which the next United States port of arrival is located the sum of $1,000 for each and every day during which such violation continues, the term "violation" to include the refusal of any person having authority so to do to permit any such immigrant inspector, matron, or surgeon to be received on board such vessel, as provided in this section, and also the refusal of the master or commanding officer of any such vessel to permit the inspections and visits of any such surgeon, as provided in this section, and no vessel shall be granted clearance papers pending the determination of the question of the liability of such fine, or while it remains unpaid, nor shall such fine be remitted or refunded: Provided, That clearance may be granted prior to the determination of all such questions upon the deposit of a sum sufficient to cover such fine and costs, such sum to be named by the Secretary of Labor.

Mr. President, that provision is stricken out of the bill, and in lieu of it is inserted the mere right of detention of the immigrant when he arrives—a right which exists under the present law and has been exercised for many years.

I have the temerity to suggest to the Senate that this provision which has been stricken out is the best provision that was in this bill for the purpose of protecting the people of this country against the admission of aliens who ought not to be allowed to land. It gives an opportunity for real observation and real inspection. It gives the Secretary and the immigration inspectors the opportunity to place their agents immediately among these emigrants when they leave the other side, to keep them there during the entire voyage, to observe the condition of their health, their sanitary condition, their general fitness for citizenship, their disposition toward this country. A multitude of facts can be thus gathered which would be of the greatest service and value to our immigration inspectors in passing finally upon the right of an applicant for admission. Indeed, this is the first practical suggestion I have ever heard of being offered which goes to the very root of the discovery of the fitness or unfitness of an emigrant to land in this country.

Under the conditions as they exist a swarm of emigrants come down to a European dock, are hastily examined, bundled into the vessel, carried across the ocean, and here they are examined, so we have been informed this morning, at the rate of 40,000 a day. An inspection of that kind can not be a close inspection. An inspection of that kind can not determine, in the very nature of things, any question that does not lie immediately upon the surface.

The proposition of the committee, who have brought forward here a bill which they frankly confess is intended to limit immigration into this country, is to strike out of the bill the chiefest safeguard against the admission into the United States of improper characters, because their action takes away from our officials the opportunity for a genuine and thorough inspection.

There is another side of the matter which appeals to me even more strongly. We have been told for years that these poor human beings seeking harbor and refuge in our land are crowded as cattle might be crowded by a cruel owner into quarters that are filthy, foul, unhealthful; that they are mistreated; that they are half fed; and that altogether—and summing it all up in a few words—they are subjected to treatment which would not have been accorded to prisoners upon a felon ship in the sixteenth century. In protest against that kind of treatment this Government passed a law tending to an amelioration of these evil and distressing conditions. This bill as it came from the House provided the means by which this Government could ascertain whether or not these poor people were being granted the protection accorded to them by the letter of the law. It gave to our immigration authorities the right to place on board these vessels their agents, and to place on board these vessels not only ordinary immigration authorities, but men skilled in the knowledge of disease, of sanitation, and of all those questions which affect the health and welfare of the emigrant; and it gave to the medical officials the right to challenge the attention of the commander of the vessel to the conditions, to demand a compliance with the statutes, and inflict a proper punishment of a thousand dollars a day for each day that the laws were defied after notice had been given.

If you pass that sort of a law, there will be no longer any doubt as to the treatment accorded these poor human beings; but the committee strikes it out—the only provision I have seen in this bill that is of a humanitarian character; the only provision I have discovered in this bill that proposes to extend the protecting arm of the Government over poor, helpless human beings; the only provision that will compel obedience by steamship companies to the demands of our law.

Mr. President, I should like to have some good reason given to the Senate for striking out this wholesome provision found in the House bill.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, the very good reason is that we do not own the shipping of other countries and have no jurisdiction upon the high seas; and they have objected to this provision as being in contravention of international law. Among those who flatly refused to accede to the exercise of this authority I might mention Austria-Hungary, Denmark, France, Germany, Italy, the Netherlands, Norway, and Spain. They did not object to our having rigid inspection here, and imposing fines, and leaving it to them to determine whether or not they would conform to the requirements; but they did object to our putting quasi American officers aboard foreign ships to interfere with the discharge of official duties by those charged with their performance. We have gone over this section thoroughly, and these objections were transmitted to us through the State Department; and upon the solicitation of our administration, as well as in view of the manifest right of these countries to object to our putting our uniformed officers aboard their vessels, we had to make the best provision we could to conform to the very humane and patriotic and tender-hearted sympathies of the Senator from Missouri by restricting as much as possible on this side.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, we are engaging in a somewhat absurd performance. We are solemnly discussing a question with 12 Senators in the Chamber. I raise the question of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri having raised the question of a quorum, the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-four Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the Senator in charge of the bill states that the reason why the provision of the House bill which provided for reserving the right to our immigrant authorities to place upon board vessels carrying immigrants inspectors who would accompany the immigrants and ascertain whether they were proper to be admitted into this country, and, further, to ascertain whether they were being humanely treated, had been stricken out was because "we," to quote his language, "do not own the vessels, and because foreign Governments have protested." In this summary way the chairman of the committee disposes of the interrogatory I propounded.

Mr. President, he pays but a poor compliment to the House of Representatives and to its committee when he takes the position that this bill is so absurdly contrived that section 11 was bottomed upon the idea that this Government owned the vessels carrying immigrants to this country. No such absurdity is involved in section 11 as passed by the House. This Government has the right beyond all question, if it sees fit so to do, to deny the right of any vessel to land any immigrant upon our shores; and if it has that right, it has the corresponding right to name the terms and conditions upon which that immigrant shall come. It can require him to be inspected in a foreign country, and yet that does not imply that we own the foreign country. It can require him to come bearing the certificate of an American surgeon granted to him, showing an examination in a foregin country, and prohibit him from landing unless he bears that certificate, and yet that does not imply that we are either the proprietors of the foreign country or that we have invaded its soil. It can require him to be examined aboard the vessel before the vessel enters a harbor of the United States, or it can provide, if that examination is not made, that the immigrant shall not land. It already inspects these individuals while they are aboard a vessel, and the inspection of that vessel in a harbor of the United States no more implies a proprietary interest in it and is no more bottomed upon the principle of ownership than is an inspection 3,000 miles away in the port of a foreign country.

All our rights of every kind and character are bottomed on our primary and sovereign rights to say that no man shall land here unless he comes under certain conditions. We could provide, if we wanted to do it, that he should come here with his head shaved. We could provide, if we wanted to do it, that he should come here wearing a certain character of clothing. We could provide, if we wanted to do it, that he should come here in a suit of clothes made by an American tailor. We can provide for an inspection in our own ports and we can provide for an inspection before the vessel reaches our ports, and while we can not force our officers on that vessel we can say to the owner of the vessel that it shall not touch an American wharf unless it comes here in compliance with the regulations we have laid down, and the vessel owner will then have the option either to comply with our regulations or not to carry immigrants to our shores.

There is no attempt in this bill either to take the command of the vessel away from the captain of the vessel. We have already provided in our law that a vessel carrying immigrants shall provide certain accommodations for them. Is that an assertion of authority to run the vessel? Not at all. It is the assertion of our authority to say under what conditions people may land on our soil. All our rights are bottomed upon that right, which this Government undoubtedly has, and when we undertake to protect a poor creature coming across the ocean by providing that he shall not be landed unless he comes in a certain way it is utterly absurd to assert that we have thereby trenched upon the authority of the owner of a vessel or upon any right it may have upon the high seas. We simply name the condition upon which these vessels can land passengers in our ports.

Now, so far as the protests of foreign Governments are concerned, I am very little concerned in them, because I know that this Government has the right to name the conditions under which an immigrant shall come. If a foreign Government, probably instigated by a foreign shipowner who wants to make a profit out of human agony and to speculate upon the woes of humanity, has uttered a protest, that is no reason why we should open our doors for the reception of people who may be infected with disease. That is no reason why so wise a provision as is found here in section 11, which I shall read, should be stricken out. I call attention to this language:

> Such surgeon shall accompany the master or captain of the vessel in his visits to the sanitary officers of the ports of call during the voyage, and, should contagious or infectious diseases prevail at any port where passengers are received, he shall request all reasonable precautionary measures for the health of persons on board.

Mr. President, does anyone claim that we do not have the full right to say that no immigrant shall be landed upon our shores who comes from a port that is infected with cholera or with the bubonic plague or with any other disease that might spread over our country? If we have the authority to close that port entirely, surely we have the authority to say to any vessel owner who proposes to haul people from that port: "You shall not load them until an American officer has passed upon the question as to whether they are proper to receive and to dump in our country or not."

Suppose that in Mexico the cattle fever was destroying the cattle of that country, and suppose that they were shipping large numbers of them from the port of Vera Cruz to the port of New York, would anyone doubt for a moment that this Government would have the right to say no cattle should be landed from the port of Vera Cruz unless they had been inspected by an American officer in the port of Vera Cruz? It is true that the authorities at Vera Cruz could refuse to allow the officer to act in that port and we would have no redress, but it is also true that when that vessel lands in the port of New York we can say to the master of it: "You shall not unload a single head of cattle because you did not permit the inspection." To deny that is to deny the plain rule of common sense. If it was a question of cattle instead of men and women, if it was a question of veal calves instead of children in arms, I take it that the protests of these foreign Governments and shipowners would not be so readily heeded.

I insist, Mr. President, that the only real inspection there can be, the only inspection that does determine the question of disease or insanity or imbecility, the only inspection that can rightfully determine the habits and conditions of the people, the only inspection that can compel the furnishing of proper accommodations in accordance with the terms of our statute, is that kind of inspection which begins at the foreign port and continues every hour of the day and night until the immigrant is landed upon our shores. The provision in the House bill was a wise, a humane, and a legal provision, and the striking of it from the bill is the emasculation of the measure.

Mr. President, if no one else desires to discuss this matter, I shall ask for a yea-and-nay vote.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, attention was called in the remarks of the Senator from Missouri to the fact that this provision had been incorporated by the House and it was stricken out by the Senate committee. It is very well for me to say in this connection that the foreign Governments could have no knowledge of what was proposed to be the legislation until such time as it was reported as a bill. This, from the Secretary of Labor, is explanatory of that situation:

> In connection with this amendment attention is directed to a letter (H. R. Doc. No. 703) written the committee of the House by the Secretary of Labor, but apparently received too late to be considered before the bill was reported to the House, and also to a letter written this committee by the Secretary (S. Doc. No. 451, p. 16). On carefully considering this matter the committee concluded that most of the objects contemplated by the section as originally drafted can be accomplished more conveniently under the section proposed as a substitute.

The position taken by the Senator from Missouri and the argument he has used is exactly the argument that governed the committee, that as we had no power to enforce our regulations aboard ship on the high seas, and that being objected to, our only recourse—as we did not wish to totally prohibit the importation of aliens—was to simply exercise what right and power we have within the territorial waters. We are treating these human beings on the same basis, as far as disease is concerned, to protect from maladies, as that on which we treat cattle.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the committee.

Mr. REED. On that I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the amendment be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the pending amendment.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out section 11 in the House print and to insert——

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. If the Senator from New Hampshire will allow me, the committee proposes to strike out section 11, which the House incorporated in the bill, providing that matrons, inspectors, and surgeons shall be placed upon foreign vessels at the port of embarkation to inspect and to exercise quasi official power in regard to the sanitation and inspection of immigrants. I think the Senator was absent at the time when I read the list of the countries who protested against this procedure, in that it was interfering with the exercise of their rights on the high seas. In view of the protests that came to us from those Governments, sent through the proper department of our Government, the committee thought it was best to strike out the section and insert a substitute, as we have no power to enforce the section as passed by the House, as we could do nothing except to prohibit immigration or to fine the vessel, which would lead to international complications. There are letters here from the State Department, and they were placed before the committee, that the House committee, before it incorporated this language, had no way of obtaining, because those Governments were not advised of what was proposed in the legislation until such time as the bill was reported to the House.

Therefore our committee, wishing to put into force the provision, the object being to reach these undesirable and diseased individuals, just rewrote section 11 under the advice of the Immigration Bureau of the Department of Labor, together with the advice of our Department of State. We rewrote the section so as to accomplish really what we intended by placing proper restrictions at the port of entry within our territorial waters, where we have jurisdiction over the subject matter.

Mr. REED. May I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire has the floor.

Mr. GALLINGER. I presume I correctly understood the Senator from South Carolina to say that, in the judgment of the committee, we have no constitutional right to place those inspectors or matrons, or whatever they may be, on board foreign vessels.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. No; I do not say so. We have a right to demand it, but a foreign Government has the right to refuse it, and some of them have refused to allow our uniformed officers aboard their vessels.

Mr. GALLINGER. Possibly I am not well informed, because I have not taken any special interest in this debate, but as I understand the law we have officers of our Government at the ports of departure. Have we not?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I have before me the facts pertaining to that. We have it by the consent of foreign Governments. When any of them would consent, such action could be taken. I will read to the Senator a list of those that have protested.

Mr. GALLINGER. No; it is sufficient that the Senator should state the fact that protests have been made. I have been wondering why, if they protest against placing these people on the ships to ascertain the important facts concerning immigrants, they do not object to our officials being at the port of departure where they give them an examination that I suppose rejects a greater or less number.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. It must be perfectly apparent to the Senator from New Hampshire, as it is apparent to me, that there is quite a distinction between allowing an officer of this Government to inspect the proposed immigrant in a country from which he is to embark and putting officers on board a ship bringing them here. I am not advised as to why some Governments should allow the one and reject the other, but I know, as the Senator knows, that they have that right. In the one case they had to give their consent to put our inspection officers at their ports, and wherever they agreed to it it was all well and good. If they had refused, we would have had no power to enforce it. They refused in this case, and our only recourse was to write such a modification of the section as would reach the object sought to be attained.

Mr. GALLINGER. There is a difference, and yet it seems to me that, so far as foreign Governments are concerned, we are trenching more upon their rights, if they have such rights, to station our officers at the port of departure than on board ship. However that may be, the Senator knows much more about it than I do. My solicitude is that we should surround these incoming emigrants with all the safeguards we possibly can, so as to exclude the undesirable to as great an extent as possible. I have not examined the matter carefully. I hope that the committee, in its wisdom, taking counsel, of course, with the officials of the Government, has surrounded this bill with as many safeguards as the laws and the Constitution and our relations with other Governments enabled them to accomplish.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I should like to reiterate what I said at the beginning of the discussion of this bill, that the committee having in charge the bill, as well as the committee in the House, I believe, all agree that we have used every means that we knew how to employ to protect the individual as to his comfort and to protect the citizens of the United States from being jeopardized by bringing in contagious diseases and otherwise. To that end the House wrote this section, and when we found that it was impracticable or impolitic and not in accord with the wishes of all the nations with whom we are friendly, we rewrote it, and we rewrote it in such a way as to exercise the fullest authority that we might have within the territorial waters of the United States.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator if these protests were lodged with the other body during the consideration of the bill there?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. As I said a moment ago, I am advised that they were not. It was after the bill had assumed its form in the House that the protests were made.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I do.

Mr. BORAH. Without asking for a reading of the protests, I should like to know in a brief way what were the grounds of the protests. What was the ground of objection to having respectable American citizens on board a foreign vessel?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I will read to the Senator an extract here which covers that point. I will state that this is from a letter transmitted by the proper official to the committee:

> These countries have represented that the placing of inspectors, matrons, and surgeons by the Government of the United States on foreign vessels on the high seas would, first, be contrary to international law, in that it would violate the exclusive jurisdiction which a government exercises over its vessels on the high seas; second, be incompatible with the authority of the master of the ship.

If the Senator will read section 11, he will see that the master of a vessel is required under the House provision to admit the authorities to exercise certain authority on board ship by our surgeons, inspectors, and matrons.

Mr. BORAH. May I ask the Secretary to read the bill as it will be if we should adopt the proposed amendment of the committee?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the proposed amendment.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Let me ask the Senator if it would not be well, although it would take some time, to read the House provision and then read the Senate amendment, so as to show just what the difference is between the two provisions.

Mr. BORAH. I am particularly anxious to know what it would be if we should make it as the Senator desires.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Very good.

Mr. BORAH. That is, as the Senate will be likely to make it.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. That would save some time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The section as proposed by the committee will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

> SEC. 11. That for the purpose of determining whether aliens arriving at ports of the United States belong to any of the classes excluded by this act, either by reason of being afflicted with any of the diseases or mental or physical defects or disabilities mentioned in section 3 hereof, or otherwise, or whenever the Secretary of Labor has received information showing that any aliens are coming from a country or have embarked at a place where any of said diseases are prevalent or epidemic, the Commissioner General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of Labor, may direct that such aliens shall be detained on board the vessel bringing them, or in a United States immigration station at the expense of such vessel, as circumstances may require or justify, a sufficient time to enable the immigration officers and medical officers stationed at such ports to subject such aliens to an observation and examination sufficient to determine whether or not they belong to the said excluded classes by reason of being afflicted in the manner indicated: Provided, That, with a view to avoid undue delay in landing passengers or interference with commerce, the Commissioner General of Immigration may, with the approval of the Secretary of Labor, issue such regulations, not inconsistent with law, as may be deemed necessary to effect the purposes of this section: Provided further, That it shall be the duty of immigrant inspectors to report to the Commissioner General of Immigration the condition of all vessels bringing aliens to United States ports and whether such vessels conform in their arrangements to the requirements of the passenger act approved August 2, 1882, and amendments thereto.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, this amendment as I view it presents very much more than the mere question of the advisability as a matter of policy of the adoption of the House provision or the substitute offered by the committee. It presents the question as to whether this Government has the right to lay down the conditions upon which a ship plying to one of our ports may bring immigrants to this country from abroad. The House apparently proceeded upon the assumption that there could be no question at all about the right of the Government of the United States to prescribe every detail of the conditions under which a ship might be entitled to enter our ports bringing immigrants to this country.

I understand that the wisdom of the House provision apparently was not questioned nor controverted by the Senate committee; if the power existed the propriety of the House provision seems to have been conceded, but the Senate committee apparently receded from that position upon a suggestion that it was impossible for us to put officers of this Government aboard foreign ships.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, will the Senator from Montana permit me to interrupt him?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. WALSH. I do.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I do not think the Senator from Montana was present when I gave my explanation of this matter. The reason the Senate committee reported to strike out the House provision was because of foreign Governments refusing to accede to the proposition. I stated fully the reasons, as set forth in communications to the committee, and read them to the Senate. The protests, as I am advised, did not come from foreign Governments until after the bill had been received from the other House and had been reported to the Senate. Then the Secretary of Labor sent a document to the committee, to which the committee referred in its report as follows:

> In connection with this amendment attention is directed to a letter (H. R. Doc. No. 703) written the committee of the House by the Secretary of Labor, but apparently received too late to be considered before the bill was reported to the House.

Then when the bill came over to the Senate the proper department, the Department of State, transmitted to us through the proper channel the protests of foreign Governments. We felt that we had the power to forbid the entry of vessels that did not conform to our requirements, but did not wish to debar all immigration or to attempt to force on foreign vessels the presence of uniformed officers, as contemplated by the House provision, who were to exercise certain authority on board ship. By the advice of the administrative branch of the Government having this matter in charge, the Senate committee rewrote the section, having before it certain advices and protests which the House committee apparently did not have; and the section as rewritten was incorporated in the bill. We thought it would accomplish the same result and avoid any friction with foreign Governments.

Mr. WALSH. I understood the Senator from South Carolina substantially in the same way in his earlier statement concerning these matters. The point I desired to make was that apparently some foreign Government has protested against our prescribing just such conditions as we care to prescribe to permit immigrants to enter our ports. It may well be conceded that we can not introduce upon foreign vessels plying to ports other than our own any of our officers. As a matter of course, such vessels would have a perfect right to exclude them. We could not overhaul their ships upon the high seas nor as they were departing from a foreign port and install our officers aboard them. That is not the question at all. Here is a ship that is about to enter an American port bringing immigrants to our country. We may say to her, "You can not come into our ports at all unless you conform to the conditions we prescribe; you shall not be permitted to land any immigrants upon our shores unless you conform to certain requirements." It is not, as it seems to me, quite sufficient, Mr. President, simply to say that some foreign Governments have protested against this provision in the form in which it came to the Senate unless the protest is accompanied by some reasons which address themselves to us as just and equitable.

I can not for the life of me see why foreign Governments should object to the House provision and at the same time feel satisfied with the other provision, except that thus some of the classes of immigrants that it is desired to exclude might be permitted to enter; and I should hardly think——

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Was the Senator present when I read the grounds upon which the foreign Governments based their objection? Was he present when I read to the Senate the statement transmitted to our committee?

Mr. WALSH. No; I heard no statement concerning the basis of their protest.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Here is the basis as given to the committee:

> In this relation it is proper to refer to the remonstrances against section 11 which have been presented by the Governments of Austria-Hungary, Denmark, France, Germany, Italy, the Netherlands, Norway, and Spain, and which have been transmitted to your committee. In some instances the remonstrances have been repeated.
> These countries have represented that the placing of inspectors, matrons, and surgeons by the Government of the United States on foreign vessels on the high seas would (1) be contrary to international law, in that it would violate the exclusive jurisdiction which a Government exercises over its vessels on the high seas.

Mr. WALSH. I do not admit the force of that contention at all.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The statement continues—that it would "be incompatible with the authority of the master of the ship."

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. If the Senator from Idaho will permit me, I think it would be very well for me to read the next clause, which sets forth the reasons as stated by the Government of the country from which we receive a greater number of immigrants than from any one nationality:

> In the case of Italy it has been pointed out that the Italian Government provides an efficient system of inspection of Italians of the immigrant class departing from or returning to Italy, and that the Italian Government does not permit foreign ships to carry Italian emigrants from Italian ports without having on board Italian commissioners who are physicians in the Royal Navy. This practice may be said to have, aside from any legal view, a certain justification, in that it is desirable for immigrants of a particular race or nationality to be served by physicians or others of their own race or nationality who speak their language and understand their habits and ways of life. It is proper to add that in the case of Italian ships the placing on board of American inspectors, matrons, and surgeons might easily create a conflict of authority, since the Italian Government itself provides for inspection.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I do.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I do not disagree at all with the view which the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] has expressed as to the authority of this Government, but I do not understand—at least it is not necessary to have that understanding in order to support the Senate committee amendment—that the Senate yielded because of the want of authority. It was rather in the hope of adjusting the situation so that there might not be any embarrassment between the powers or any difficulty in executing the law or anything which might give rise to friction. That was the view I supposed the committee took of it. Certainly those of us who are disposed to favor the committee amendment would not want to concede here that it is an acknowledgment of the want of power to do what we are undertaking to do; but if we can accomplish the same thing in a way which will not be calculated to cause ill feeling on the part of other nations, I do not see any reason why we should not do it.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. If the Senator from Idaho will permit me, I wish to say that I am sorry I appear to have been so unfortunate in expressing what was uppermost in my mind. It was not a question of our power to say, "You shall do this or we will not allow you to enter our ports." The committee did not question our power to enact the legislation proposed or that we had the right to enact it. It was a question of our relations with foreign Governments. If we can find a means of accomplishing the same ends without embarrassing ourselves or creating unpleasantness, we thought that the better and proper way to do, and we have so done.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the Senator from South Carolina now expresses his position, I think, quite differently from the way he expressed it when I asked him the question, in reply to which the Senator said the reason for this legislation was, first, that we did not own these vessels, and, second, that we had no right to enact the House provision, because foreign Governments had protested. As I now understand the Senator—the RECORD will show what took place, and I do not care anything about the form of statement—he takes the position at least that we are accomplishing the same end without giving offense. That is the very question in dispute. The Senate committee amendment does not give to the immigration officials a single substantial right which they do not possess under the present law. This bill is substantially a reenactment of the present law. It was because the present law has been found ineffective, because it has been discovered that the inspections in our own ports do not bring the desired result, that it was sought to place aboard these vessels agents who would have an opportunity of observation during the voyage.

It was further deemed advisable to so place the immigration agents in order that there might be an observation as to whether or not the vessel was equipped in accordance with the laws of the United States and the passengers accorded that treatment which we all sought to guarantee them by the laws of the United States.

Now, the Senator states that we are accomplishing the same end without giving offense. Manifestly an inspection in a port of the United States, made with the haste that such inspections must be made when there are as many as 40,000 immigrants landing in a day, can not be the equivalent of an inspection aboard ship during an entire voyage; neither can it take the place of the inspection at a port of entry by an officer of the United States, as provided by the House bill.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. BORAH. I want to ask the Senator from Missouri if it is a fact that the present law has been found inefficient and unsatisfactory with reference to these inspections? I have the impression that that was not the defect of the present law. I should be glad to be enlightened if the Senator has information to that effect, I have no definite information on the subject; but I had the impression that the inspection was sufficient and efficient under the present law, and that, although this is practically the reenactment of a present law, the present law in that respect has not been found inefficient. I could imagine, however, that a man traveling with another man for 30 days would know more about him than he would if he merely saw him come into port in a hurry. Whether I shall support the Senate amendment depends upon whether I conclude it is efficient, but not upon the question of lack of power.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I think that the evidence taken before the Immigration Commission, and which is contained in one of the volumes of their report, very clearly indicates that the steerage conditions on certain lines of steamboats were very bad, indeed. There is what we call the "old steerage" and the "new steerage." On the modern vessels the arrangements are very good and the discipline is good also; but there were certain other lines upon which the agents of the commission went as immigrants—they were not known as being connected with the commission, but went as immigrants, dressed as immigrants—and their report made to the commission indicated that the steerage conditions were simply horrible, in very many instances, particularly in relation to sanitation, the treatment of women immigrants by the crews on the vessels, the familiarities that were indulged in, the lack of protection that was given, and things of that character The recommendation of the commission was that matrons should be provided who would have some knowledge of and be able to report conditions such as I have indicated, with a view to the Government taking action to have them reformed.

The original draft of the bill as it was introduced provided for matrons, who should live in the steerage and who should have no power to interfere with the discipline of the vessels in any way, but might report to the commanding officers of vessels things they did not know in relation to conditions on board, and especially report when they landed as to any information which they might have received.

Then there was another provision that where the Secretary saw fit he might assign medical officers. I think the original draft gave them no power to interfere with the discipline of the vessel, but gave them power to observe and to report, and so forth.

Mr. BORAH. I take it from the Senator's suggestion that he rather favors the House provision?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I had a good deal to do with drafting it, and I thought that it was within reason.

Mr. BORAH. I have no doubt about our right to exercise this power. The only question that arose in my mind was whether we could accomplish the same thing in another way which would be satisfactory. If we can not, if after the thorough investigation which I know the Senator has given to the subject he feels that the other is a proper way to do it, I would have no doubt about our authority.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I am perfectly satisfied with this amendment as a beginning. I think that probably we can accomplish practically the same result under the amendment that we could under the original draft, but I think the time may come, unless conditions are improved on certain lines of steamships, when we may be compelled to adopt more drastic legislation.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from Vermont what right there is reserved in the amendment proposed by the Senate committee which is not in the present law?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I do not know that there is any right; but the purpose of this amendment, as I understand it, is to bring to light violations of existing law.

Mr. REED. But there is no clause of that kind that is not in the present law.

Let us understand this matter. Under the present law when a vessel arrives in an American port the immigration officers board it; they are authorized to make an inspection; they determine who may land and who may not land; they can send a portion or all of the immigrants into quarantine; they can detain the vessel in quarantine; all of those things can be done. Now, the provision that is brought in here by the Senate committee does not go, as far as I have been able to observe, one hair's breadth beyond the present law; so that the question that is now presented to the Senate is whether we shall retain the present law or whether we shall enact the House provision, which goes much further than the present law.

If I may have the indulgence of the Senate for a moment, I think that one or two matters could be cleared up. First, the Senator in charge of the bill tells us that we have no right to take charge of a foreign vessel. Granted. We can not put our officers aboard a foreign vessel and take charge of it until it arrives in our ports; but is there any attempt to do that in this bill? You can read section 11, as it passed the House, with a microscope and you will not find where it undertakes to confer the slightest authority upon any American official in any way, shape, manner, or form to interfere with the officers of the vessel until that vessel has arrived in one of our ports. So that we might as well wipe that out.

The Senator speaks of putting uniformed officers aboard vessels. The nurses are not compelled to wear uniforms; the inspectors are not compelled to wear uniforms. It is provided that if a surgeon be detailed he shall wear a uniform, but the kind of clothes he wears makes no difference. He is given no authority under this bill except that it is made his duty to call the attention of the captain of the vessel to any condition which he thinks is wrong. Therefore there is no attempt to assume authority, and let us get that out of our heads. The bill was carefully drawn.

As to the question whether anything is to be gained by the more thorough inspection made possible by keeping aboard a vessel as it crosses the ocean those who are there to observe, the Senator from Vermont has already asserted that that has been done, although without authority of law, by putting agents among the steerage passengers. Those agents discovered unspeakable conditions—that the women were subjected to improper treatment by the members of the crew, and, without going into detail, other horrible conditions. This bill proposed to provide a means whereby that kind of inspection could be carried on. It is stricken out and, in substance and effect, nothing substituted for the present law.

The House report has this to say:

> Another change of the old law provided for by this bill is that which permits the Secretary of Labor, when he deems it necessary, to detail immigrant inspectors and matrons for duty on vessels carrying immigrants or immigrant passengers to or from the United States. This is not made imperative but is left to the option of the Secretary of Labor. We think this is in the interest of better and more humane treatment of the immigrants or immigrant passengers.

That is the only reference I find, in a somewhat hasty examination of the report, to this matter. But, Mr. President, that is a humane purpose, and it is a purpose that we have the right to carry out, because it is now conceded that we can say to a vessel, "You shall not enter here and unload aliens unless you come in conformity with the regulations which we have prescribed"; and having the power, why should it not be exercised for the protection of humanity?

In regard to the right of inspection we are told that some foreign Governments have protested. Well, Mr. President, foreign Governments are in the habit of protesting against nearly everything. They have been protesting against our present immigration laws. One foreign Government has insisted that its citizens can come here and, in defiance of the laws of a sovereign State, can own property. They have made protests of various kinds. Here is a reference to the particular subject in the House report, which I want to read:

It must be remembered that foreign countries look with favor upon the emigration to America of diseased and defective persons. Examination by American officials at the ports of embarkation in Europe has been strenuously opposed by certain foreign Governments—

Why, Mr. President, they are opposed to the very things we are now doing. Why do we not supinely yield and permit them to continue to send the halt, the lame, the blind, the insane, the diseased, and the crippled to our shores? They are already protesting, and why should they not protest, if we propose to place an obstacle in the way of the landing of undesirables upon our shores? I read:

And it is a notorious fact, commented upon in every annual report of the Commissioner General of Immigration, that the steamship companies make only the most perfunctory medical examination of passengers upon their departure for America. Thus there are no obstacles in the way of diseased persons embarking for this country. In the case of those returning, however—the conditions are reversed. The passengers are carefully scrutinized by ships' surgeons at the gangway as they embark at the port of New York, and those who do not satisfy the steamship officials or the representatives of foreign Governments stationed on such ships are peremptorily refused passage, even although they have been only a short time away from the countries to which they still owe allegiance.

Now the shoe is on the other foot—

Thus it appears that foreign Governments maintain upon certain vessels their own officers, who exercise exactly the same kind of serveillance and jurisdiction over people traveling from this country to Europe which the House bill proposed that our officials should exercise over people coming from Europe to this country, and at the same moment foreign countries are found protesting against the exercise of that right by the United States they are exercising it against the United States, and the committee yields under these circumstances. I read on, going back for a moment to give the context:

In the case of those returning, however, the conditions are reversed. The passengers are carefully scrutinized by ships' surgeons at the gangway as they embark at the port of New York, and those who do not satisfy the steamship officials or the representatives of foreign Governments stationed on such ships are peremptorily refused passage, even although they have been only a short time away from the countries to which they still owe allegiance. Cases are not decided individually upon their merits, but as soon as it is learned that an applicant for passage has been in an institution for the insane he is at once rejected. It can be seen that with an unimpeded flow of inferior immigrants to this country, and with an outflow which is so carefully regulated that only the prosperous and sound can return, we must ultimately become the asylum for an increasing number of those unable to sustain themselves.

On page 22 of the same report is the following:

For the first few years after the commencement of that remarkable migration of the races of southern and eastern Europe to this country—to which Austria-Hungary, Italy, and Russia have contributed nearly 500,000 persons a year—it is noted that the increase of patients of those nationalities in the State hospitals was gradual. By 1905, however, it was possible to predict that when the effects of the "new immigration" commenced to be felt the "old immigration"—of Germans, Irish, and Scandinavians—would be outdone in the numbers of insane added to the foreign-born population of our State hospitals. To-day that prediction is fulfilled, and during the year more than 55 per cent of the aliens deported by the United States Immigration Service were natives of those three countries.

Mr. President, how absurd it is to stand here in the Senate and say that the United States can not adopt, with reference to people coming to this country, the same character of inspection that is adopted by foreign countries with reference to their own subjects returning from this country and that we infringe upon the authority and sovereignty of foreign nations by doing toward their subjects exactly the same thing that they themselves do in the ports of this country. How ridiculous is the assertion!

Moreover, I challenge the attention of the chairman of the committee and the Senate to the fact that if he be correct in saying that an inspection of these people aboard a vessel is an infringement upon the rights of the vessel owner or upon the authority of the foreign government, then this entire bill will fall upon the same process of reasoning, for it is proposed here in the bill to fine a vessel landing in this country for an act committed in the port of its own country, clear across the ocean. That fine can be levied, but it can be levied because our jurisdiction attaches over the vessel when it undertakes to land the individual in our country, but the same legal right covers the case of an inspection aboard the vessel. We have the right to say to all ship owners, "You can not enter our ports and land a passenger who was not loaded and transported and inspected as we see fit to determine."

I think the House provision is a wise one. I think these protests amount to nothing. I think it is due the sovereignty and majesty of the United States to assert now, once and for all, that we propose to name the conditions under which people shall land upon our shores. I appeal, in the name of humanity, for that miserable class who, compelled to take passsage in steerage, are subjected to every kind of insult, every sort of infamy, every character of abuse, and all the hardships that human beings may be subjected to by the cruel and the avaricious. Why not give them the protection of an accompanying matron who may report this treatment? Why not give to our people the protection of an inspection in the ports of foreign countries to determine whether disease is being imported into our land to devastate its population?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. REED. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays have been ordered. The Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, there seems to be some misapprehension as to the nature of the proposed amendment. As I understand, the question is directly on the Senate amendment; that is, Shall the Senate amendment be adopted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct; that is the question.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Therefore an affirmative vote is to retain the Senate amendment and a negative vote is to reject it?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHILTON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. GALLINGER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. GRONNA (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Maine [Mr. JOHNSON]. I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. HOLLIS (when his name was called). I announce my pair with the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. BURLEIGH] and withhold my vote.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE], who is absent. On that account I withhold my vote.

Mr. VARDAMAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BRADY]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] and will vote. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. FLETCHER. I wish to state that my colleague [Mr. BRYAN] is absent on business of the Senate.

Mr. CLAPP. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS]. Being advised that he would be indifferent in this matter, I desire to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. GALLINGER. I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN] to the senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. STONE (after having voted in the negative). I desire to withdraw my vote, as I have a pair with the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK].

Mr. MYERS. I inquire whether the junior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not.

Mr. MYERS. I transfer my pair with that Senator to the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. CHILTON. I transfer my pair formerly announced to the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. STONE. I am informed that the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. SHIVELY], who is temporarily absent, would vote as I voted in the first instance on this roll call. I therefore transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK] to the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. SHIVELY] and will vote "nay."

Mr. GRONNA. Has the senior Senator from Maine [Mr. JOHNSON] voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not voted.

Mr. GRONNA. I have a general pair with that Senator, and I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. LODGE (after having voted in the affirmative). I neglected to announce that I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH]; but as he would vote as I do on this question, I shall allow my vote to stand.

The result was announced—yeas 33, nays 25, as follows:

So the amendment of the committee was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment of the committee will be stated.

The next amendment of the Committee on Immigration was, on page 29, line 21, after the word "and," to strike out "oral" and insert "mental," so as to read:

Each list or manifest shall be verified by the signature and the oath or affirmation of the master or commanding officer, or the first or second below him in command, taken before an immigration officer at the port of arrival, to the effect that he has caused the surgeon of said vessel sailing therewith to make a physical and mental examination of each of said aliens.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 15, page 32, line 21, after the word "hereof," to strike out the word "to" and insert the word "shall," so as to read:

Any refusal or failure to comply with the provisions hereof shall be punished in the manner specified in section 18 of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 16, page 33, line 13, after the words "Secretary of Labor," to insert "All aliens arriving at ports of the United States shall be examined by two such medical officers."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 33, line 18, before the words "ports of entry," to strike out "large," so as to read:

Medical officers of the United States Public Health Service who have had especial training in the diagnosis of insanity and mental defects shall be detailed for duty or employed at all ports of entry.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 33, line 18, after the words "ports of entry," to insert "designated by the Secretary of Labor," so as to read:

Medical officers of the United States Public Health Service who have had especial training in the diagnosis of insanity and mental defects shall be detailed for duty or employed at all ports of entry designated by the Secretary of Labor.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 34, at the end of line 5, after the words "special inquiry," to insert "All aliens arriving at ports of the United States shall be examined by at least two immigrant inspectors."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 39, line 20, after the word "vessel," to insert the words "so proceeded against," so as to read:

And no vessel so proceeded against shall have clearance from any port of the United States while any such fine is unpaid, nor shall such fine be remitted or refunded.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 41, line 3, after the word "unless," to strike out "with the express permission of the Secretary of Labor," and insert "the Secretary of Labor is satisfied that the existence of the disease could not have been detected by a competent medical examination at the time of foreign embarkation, and that to refuse treatment would be inhuman or cause unusual hardship or suffering," so as to read:

No alien certified, as provided in section 16 of this act, to be suffering from tuberculosis in any form, or from a loathsome or dangerous contagious disease other than one of quarantinable nature, shall be permitted to land for medical treatment thereof in any hospital in the United States, unless the Secretary of Labor is satisfied that the existence of the disease could not have been detected by a competent medical examination at the time of foreign embarkation, and that to refuse treatment would be inhumane or cause unusual hardship or suffering.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, in view of the fact that so many Members of the Senate are absent, and that the habit is to come in and ask how the committee is voting, and vote with the committee—which I unhesitatingly say was the determining factor in the last vote—I hesitate to call attention to this particular provision with so few Members present. Nevertheless, I dislike to call for a quorum.

I wish to read from line 23 of page 40:

No alien certified, as provided in section 16 of this act, to be suffering from tuberculosis in any form, or from a loathsome or dangerous contagious disease other than one of quarantinable nature, shall be permitted to land for medical treatment thereof in any hospital in the United States, unless the Secretary of Labor is satisfied that the existence of the disease could not have been detected by a competent medical examination at the time of foreign embarkation, and that to refuse treatment would be inhumane or cause unusual hardship or suffering.

It will be noted that a consumptive would not be permitted to land under any circumstances or conditions whatsoever unless two things concur: First, the disease must have been in such a state at the time of embarkation that it could not have been detected by a competent medical examination, and, second, that to refuse treatment would be inhumane. It is not enough that the refusal would be inhumane; it is not enough that the refusal would kill the patient; but the patient absolutely can not be landed, even by the authority of the Secretary, in the event that some foreign surgeon blundered or some ship surgeon blundered when the patient undertook passage.

To put it by illustration, a man not even knowing that he is afflicted with tuberculosis comes to a port and is examined by the ship's physicians. They are careless or incompetent. He takes passage. When he arrives here a surgeon finds that he has tuberculosis. The surgeon finds that he will die unless taken off the vessel; but he also finds that the disease is in such condition that by a proper inspection it could have been discovered before the patient took passage. Thereupon this poor creature, who is without fault, and simply because there has been a blunder by one or the other of these physicians, is to be condemned to death, or to the horrible torture incident to being confined aboard a vessel, and he can not be taken off for treatment even in quarantine.

That provision is absolutely barbarous. Surely the committee do not mean it. I should like to know whether they do or not.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the existing law of the United States provides:

No alien certified, as provided in section 16 of this act, to be suffering from tuberculosis in any form, or from a loathsome or dangerous contagious disease other than one of quarantinable nature, shall be permitted to land for medical treatment thereof in any hospital in the United States unless with the express permission of the Secretary of Labor.

That is the present law. It has been the law for many years. That is as it is in the bill, unchanged. It was put there by previous Congresses because they believed that their first duty was to protect the people of the United States against the spread of the awful scourge of tuberculosis and against loathsome and contagious diseases other than those of a quarantinable nature for which the quarantine laws provide.

Hitherto the only exception has been the express permission of the Secretary of Labor, or the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, as it was under the law when it was passed. The department wrote to the Senate committee as follows:

Page 37, lines 20 to 26: After the words "United States," in line 25, eliminate the words "unless with the express permission of the Secretary of Labor" and insert in lieu thereof "unless the Secretary of Labor is satisfied that the existence of the disease could not have been detected by a competent medical examination at the time of foreign embarkation, and that to refuse treatment would be inhumane or cause unusual hardship or suffering."

Then the department says:

As the provision is now worded it merely encourages the violation of section 9 by aliens and steamship companies and causes undue congestion in the hospitals at immigrant stations. The discretion to allow hospital treatment in this class of cases should be restricted as closely as possible.

In other words, the object of this amendment was not to make the law less humane but more humane. It was to prevent the inhumanity of transportation companies in bringing to this country persons afflicted with tuberculosis or with loathsome and contagious diseases and imposing them upon our hospitals, forcing us to take care of them, and bringing those diseases into the country. The inhumanity begins with the people who take them on board. But all these things can be detected by a proper medical examination.

The department desiring to make the law as humane as possible suggested this amendment of the House language to the committee as an amendment of the existing law. The existing law is far more stringent than is proposed. This gives the Secretary the discretion to relieve in cases where humanity requires it, and that is what is asked for by the department.

Mr. REED. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. REED. Under the present law does not the Secretary of Labor have the authority in all cases to permit hospital treatment?

Mr. LODGE. Under his express permission. The case has to be laid before him, of course.

Mr. REED. Under the law as proposed could the Secretary permit hospital treatment if the examining surgeon in Europe had made a mistake and passed one who should not have been passed?

Mr. LODGE. Undoubtedly he could under the present law.

Mr. REED. Under this language?

Mr. LODGE. Under the existing language.

Mr. REED. But I am talking about the new language.

Mr. LODGE. He could not, and that is exactly what the Secretary wants to stop.

Mr. REED. Therefore the Senator states that whereas the present law does permit the Secretary of Labor to allow hospital treatment in the interests of humanity in all cases, a law which proposes to deny him the right to permit it if a surgeon happened to make a mistake over in Europe is the more humane law.

Mr. LODGE. As a matter of fact, it is the purpose of the amendment to give the Secretary that power. He himself asks for it. It is not the suggestion of the committee; it is the request of the Secretary, because in the opinion of the department it does not result as it is now in competent examination on the other side. It results in bringing here many cases where the Secretary is forced to decline permission to send them back.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, if this is humanity and is the humanitarian doctrine which would characterize this bill, then may the good and kindly God save me from that kind of humanity! Let us see. The present law is to this effect: There shall be an inspection at European ports, but if a physician there makes a mistake and an immigrant is brought here and surgeons discover it and if treatment in a hospital is necessary, the Secretary of Labor may in the interests of humanity permit hospital treatment. But this amendment says that if there was a mistake made by that surgeon the Secretary of Labor can not permit hospital treatment even though it condemns the poor victim to his death. And you call that humanity!

> Man's inhumanity to man
> Makes countless thousands mourn—

was evidently a prophetic glimpse of this particular phase of our present legislation.

I say that the proposition is horrible. Take a concrete example: An immigrant who may think he is afflicted with a bad cold and may not know there is anything the matter with him comes down to take passage at a European port. The ship has provided physicians. They examine and pass him. In a 20 or 30 days' passage, or a 10 days' passage, the disease rapidly develops. He lands in New York. A surgeon there discovers he has tuberculosis, and he further finds that the physician in Europe might have discovered it. This physician also reports that unless the man is given treatment he will die. That fact is laid before the Secretary of Labor and the Secretary of Labor says, "Congress passed a law which does not permit me to send that poor creature to a hospital for a single day. You may stay there and die while that vessel lies in dock waiting for a load." And we call that humanity! Tears of sympathy must have rolled down the cheeks of the committee as they wrote that humane provision into this bill.

Moreover, it is not necessary that there should have been a mistake by the physician in Europe. Everybody who knows anything about the medical profession knows that doctors disagree, and they disagree honestly. How is a physician upon this side to determine accurately whether the conditions were such 30 days before, when that immigrant was examined, that the physician should have discovered that fact? The physician here may be mistaken in his diagnosis. The physician there may have been correct in his diagnosis; but if the physician here finds that the disease might have been detected over there there is no power to be left on earth to rescue that poor, suffering, inoffensive creature who came here in the best of faith, who conformed to every regulation of law, who submitted to an examination. There is no means on earth provided whereby he can have the ministering care of a physician or the humane surroundings of a hospital.

It will be a matter, I doubt not, of grave regret by the Members of this Senate if this bill is passed as proposed and some one of their constituents who may have a wife and child coming to this country appeals to them and says, "My wife and my child are detained aboard the vessel. For God's sake get them off where they can have proper treatment for a few days, so that I may put them in a shape to save their lives. I will send them back if necessary. I do not want to infect this country with disease. I do not want to imperil anybody's life; but do not murder my wife or my child." You go down and appeal to the Secretary of Labor. He says, "I would like to let them in; I would like to give them treatment; I would like to give them a chance for life; but Congress said I could not do it, if a doctor here said that a doctor over there ought to have discovered the disease."

Mr. President, that is all I care to say about it. If the Senate wants to write that kind of a law, let it be done.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the last pathetic case the Senator drew the committee felt ought to be provided for. If the Senator will turn to page 48, he will find that the Senate committee has introduced this proviso:

> Provided, That, if the person sending for wife or minor children is naturalized, a wife to whom married or a minor child born subsequent to such husband or father's naturalization shall be admitted without detention for treatment in hospital, and with respect to a wife to whom married or a minor child born prior to such husband or father's naturalization the provisions of this section shall be observed even though such person is unable to pay the expense of treatment, such expense to be paid from the appropriation for the enforcement of this act.

Mr. REED. That admits the whole case.

Mr. LODGE. Oh, no, Mr. President.

Mr. REED. If it should be done for the wife or child of a man who happens to have acquired the right to vote here, then should it not be done for the sister or the mother or the father of a man who as acquired the right to vote? And if we should do it for those who have the right to vote and jeopardize the lives of our people—for that is the theory of this provision—by allowing treatment for that class of people, why not allow it on the broad ground of humanity to the individual who does not happen to have a husband or a father in this land? Why condemn that individual to a lingering death?

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the argument does not work both ways. It can not be cruelty to keep them out and also cruelty to keep them in.

Mr. REED. I have not so asserted.

Mr. LODGE. I have shown that in the case of a family we have made provision not only for taking care of them in hospital until cured, but we have provided that we shall pay their expenses of treatment. That is a new provision of law which the Senate committee suggested.

Now, as to the inhumanity, the Senator draws a picture of a person afflicted with tuberculosis who has developed it within 10 days, so that a competent physician on the other side could not detect it, and it has increased so much that our Government physician on this sides does detect it. That is a rapid progress of disease, and the man is hardly a subject for hospital treatment. But the Senator overlooks that it is not only tuberculosis against which we are waging a great fight everywhere to prevent its introduction and spread, but it covers also loathsome and contagious diseases. The Senator knows what that reference is without my entering into a description. I do not think it is desirable that loathsome and contagious diseases should be taken in the ship and admitted to this country unless humanity demands it or it causes undue hardship and suffering.

The language of the Senate committee amendment is broad, and we may rest assured, I think, that the Secretary of Labor is not an inhumane man. He asked for this amendment for his own guidance. It is not the invention of the committee; it is asked for by the Secretary himself. He certainly is a humane man and he knows what is best in dealing with these cases. He has seen the inhumanity that has been caused and necessarily caused by ship companies allowing or winking at the bringing on board of people who they knew ought to be excluded and congesting our hospitals with them, and it is that which he aims to stop. The cruelty begins in bringing them across the ocean, and it is the desire of the department to stop that practice and leave them on the other side. It is believed that this is the most humane way of doing it. He has asked for this change of language because he thinks that is the proper and the right way to deal with it. I do not think he is an inhumane man any more than the committee is inhumane. The object was to make the law such that a steamship company would not be tempted to bring here people whom they ought not to bring.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, if you are trying to reach the company, then penalize the company that attempts to bring the man here.

Mr. LODGE. We have done that. That is done in the bill.

Mr. REED. That is the way to reach it. If it is right to allow the consumptive child or wife of a man who is already residing in this country to come, regardless of the question whether it is necessary for them to have hospital treatment or not, then it is not right to consign all others to the doom which this bill provides, namely, that they shall not be allowed hospital treatment under any circumstances or conditions, but must be detained to their misery and their death.

Mr. President, I am willing to trust the Secretary of Labor. I am willing to trust to his discretion. I have said nothing to reflect upon him; and because I am willing to trust to his discretion and want him to have a discretion and not be denied a discretion I move to amend the amendment of the committee by striking out in lines 5, 6, and 7 the following words——

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. On what page?

Mr. REED. On page 41:

That the existence of the disease could not have been detected by a competent medical examination at the time of foreign embarkation, and—

So that the clause as amended would read:

Unless the Secretary of Labor is satisfied that to refuse treatment would be inhumane or cause unusual hardship or suffering.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, as chairman of the committee I accept that amendment to the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair did not catch the observation of the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I say the committee accepts that amendment to the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Then the question is on the amendment as amended. It is agreed to without objection. The next amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 19, page 42, line 3, strike out the words "any alien" and the comma.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On the same page, line 4, after the word "entry," strike out "who shall enter the United States in violation of law" and insert:

Any alien who shall have entered the United States in violation of this act or of any law of the United States or who at the time of entry was a member of one or more of the classes excluded by law.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be agreed to without objection.

Mr. REED. Just one moment. That it seems to me on a cursory examination is retroactive. Under it men could be deported who have legally entered heretofore. Is not that the case?

Mr. LODGE. It runs over the five years. That is the reason.

Mr. REED. Is it so intended?

Mr. LODGE. The law applies now to any time within five years after entering. He may have entered at any time during the five years.

Mr. REED. The inquiry that I wanted to address, if the Senator pleases, is this: The bill now adds a number of prohibitions and qualifications which have not hitherto been in the law, and by the clause which we are considering at the present moment, which operates back to cover a period of five years, would it not be possible to exclude and deport some of those who have legally emigrated to this country? That is the question I am asking.

Mr. LODGE. Oh, surely not, under that language. Of course at any time within five years, as the law is at present, any person who shall be found doing certain things or who shall be found to have violated the law can be deported.

Mr. REED. That is hereafter?

Mr. LODGE. It is not intended to make it retroactive in any way. It is only one class, those who shall enter the United States in violation of law. That of course covers every case. This is another administrative amendment asked for in order to make the law more explicit.

Mr. REED. I am very loath to insist upon the view that I confess comes to me just on a mere reading of the amendment, but it strikes me that under this language any alien who would be excluded under the terms of this act might be deported if he came here at any time within five years prior to the filing of the complaint, and that complaint might be filed the day after this bill was enacted. It seems to me the committee might, by taking this back, adopt some language which would make it plain that it was not intended to be retroactive.

Mr. LODGE. I will read the recommendation of the Secretary:

On page 42, lines 3, 4, and 5, strike out "any alien" and "who shall enter the United States in violation of law" and insert, immediately following the latter, "any alien who shall have entered the United States in violation of this act or of any law of the United States, or who at the time of entry was a member of one or more of the classes excluded by law." The change thus effected in the arrangement of the words of the section is made in the interest of perspicuity. The insertion of the phrase "or of any law of the United States" is for the purpose of restoring to the measure a provision which appeared in section 21 of the act of 1907, where it was placed in response to recommendations of the Commissioner General of Immigration (see his reports for 1905, p. 99, and 1906, pp. 89, 107), which phrase evidently was inadvertently omitted from this act.

It was left out inadvertently in the House. It is a mere question of language. The committee put it in because the department requested it.

Mr. REED. Does the committee object to passing over the amendment until to-morrow?

Mr. LODGE. I have no special interest in the amendment myself, except that I think we ought to keep what is now in the law.

Mr. REED. Certainly; we ought to keep what is in the law.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. As the Senator from Massachusetts says, it is in the interest of fairness that the suggestion was made. It seems the practice of the department has been along these lines, and it was simply to make it more definite and insert what was inadvertently left out.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, it does not seem to me that the provision could possibly be given a retroactive effect—

Any alien who shall have entered the United States in violation of this act or of any law of the United States.

Of course his entry of the United States before this law was passed could not be a violation of the law. It might be a kind of an entry which would be contrary to the terms of the law, but you can not violate the law until it is in existence. So the language "who shall have entered the United States" can not be given a retroactive effect, because it also applies to any other law. There are laws which are in existence, and so it is necessary to use that language to apply to both laws, but, it seems to me, it can not possibly be given a retroactive effect.
